It appears they speculated heavily, especially in Rands, and when the slump came they were unable to meet their losses. Mrs. Manby is said to be the instigator of the business. Neither of the women had any large amount of money, but they were dazzled by the prospects of making a fortune easily, and succeeded in getting introduced to some brokers who, on the strength of the ancient name of Lindsey, gave them a free hand, without making any investigation. The subsequent action of posting their clients' names has given rise to considerable criticism, as it is an unprecedented action, and in the Street the brokers are almost as much blamed as the women for allowing matters to reach such a stage.

The Louvre in Danger of Fire.

PARIS, Jan. 27.—A discussion in the Chamber of Deputies has revealed the fact that the Louvre is in perpetual danger of fire. The building adjoins the Ministry of the Colonies, where fourteen fires occurred last year. M. Redon, the architect of the Louvre, shares the apprehension, and as a result of the debate better measures of protection will be taken.

Fire at a Peruvian Seaport.

LIMA, Peru, Jan. 27.—A big fire occurred to-day at Ilo, a seaport town of Peru, about sixty-five miles southwest of Mequegua. The Custom House, Post Office, and many other buildings have already been destroyed, and the fire is not yet under control.

Germany's Great Naval Programme.

BERLIN, Jan. 27.—Herr Eugen Richter says that the expenses of the navy from 1901 to 1920 will amount to 5,773,000,000 marks.

CARDINAL RICHARD EXPLAINS.

His Visit to the Assumptionists in Paris Misconstrued—The Incident Regretted in Rome.

PARIS, Jan. 27.—The private secretary of the Archbishop of Paris, Cardinal Richard, says the Prelate's reply to the Premier, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, on the subject of the comments on the Cardinal's visit to the Assumptionist Fathers after the Correctional Tribunal had pronounced the dissolution of the order, was very simple. The Cardinal said he had no thought that his action had political significance. He simply wished to sympathize with the fathers on passing through a painful event. He did not wish to protest against the verdict, and the words attributed to the Cardinal, the secretary added, were a garbled summary without official character.

A special dispatch to the Temps from Rome says:

"According to information from the best sources, the Vatican, though regretting the conviction of the Assumptionists, would have preferred that Cardinal Richard had not made the visit, by which the enemies of religion might profit. Had Pope Leo been consulted, Cardinal Richard would not have made the visit, which was kind, but not politic."

The Rome correspondent of the Figaro says the news of the visit of Cardinal Richard to the condemned Assumptionist Fathers is badly received at the Vatican, where it is considered quite inopportune. The Pope would have preferred a more reserved attitude. He has always condemned any conflict when the interests of religion were not at stake, it is declared, and it is certain that all demonstrations hostile to the republic on the part of certain high clericals in France will only cause his Holiness displeasure.

The Echo de Paris says it is informed that the Government has decided to suspend Cardinal Richard's stipend for three months and that similar measures will be taken against a number of Archbishops, Bishops, and priests in Paris who have written to the Assumptionist Fathers letters of congratulation and encouragement.

THE EXPANSION OF BUSINESS.

Period Not So Far Advanced Here as in Other Countries.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—Reviewing the business of 1899, The Times says:

"The fact that in the United States the expansion of business commenced about a year later than elsewhere seems to explain the fact, which must be admitted, that American expansion is not so far advanced, relatively, as that of the United Kingdom and Germany, and may, consequently, be expected to continue for a while after the business of the two latter countries shows signs of contracting. That advantage, however, may be conceivably nullified by the occurrence this year of another Presidential election."

THE VENEZUELAN REVOLUTION.

Hernandez Hailed as a Pacificator as He Advances.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Jan. 27.—In spite of the rigidity of the censorship, Venezuelan mail news indicates continued activity by and in behalf of the Hernandez revolution, which is spreading, the Government having failed to divert public excitement from domestic politics by alleged wanton provocation of the diplomatic complication with France.

A week ago the insurgent headquarters were strongly established at San Fernando de Apure, under the popular triumvirate, in behalf of Hernandez, who was advancing from the Colombian frontier, the populace acclaiming him as the only possible pacificator of the anarchic elements, which were rending the country and threatening unlimited fratricide.

CZAR'S MESSAGE TO FINLAND.

An Offer of Aid Accompanied by a Hint of a New Constitution.

HELSINGFORS, Finland, Jan. 27.—The Czar's speech, which was read at the opening of the Diet to-day, explained that it was intended to take measures to meet the recent misfortunes in Finland, the principal of which was the failure of the crops, causing large emigration. The proposed measures, it was announced, included the postponement of the manœuvres of the reserves, so that the men might not be prevented from following their ordinary occupations.

As a means to check emigration, the speech said, measures would be taken to place people not possessed of property in a position to acquire land. Questions not connected with these subjects, the speech declared, should not be discussed in the Diet, and such discussions would raise a doubt as to whether the constitution of Finland was compatible with existing conditions.

After the reading of the speech, the Presidents of the four Estates replied. The representative of the Nobles dwelt upon the importance which the people attached to self-government, which they regarded as a necessity of life. The representative of the Peasantry attributed the increase in emigration to the oppressive conditions weighing on the Finlanders, who agreed to the doubling of their military burdens on condition that their free social institutions should be preserved. The fulfillment of this understanding, he said, was necessary to enable the people to bear their burdens.

Saxons to Start Factories Here.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Brainard H. Warner, Jr., United States Consul at Leipsic, Germany, reports to the State Department that several Saxon textile manufacturers, having come to the conclusion that it is impossible to sell their products to the United States under the present tariff law, are about to establish factories in this country. The Consul names two concerns which are about to do this, and says that many more could be induced to come if they were supported and encouraged Terrific Heat in Melbourne.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Jan. 27.—The weather in the vicinity of Melbourne, Australia, has broken all records for heat recently. On New Year's Day five deaths occurred from prostration, and as late as 5 o'clock in the afternoon the thermometer stood at 114 in the shade. In the sun the temperature was recorded as high as 150 degrees, and it stood at that point for several hours.

Mays-Guatemala Arbitration Chosen.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The State Department has been advised that G. Jenner, the British Minister at Guatemala City, has accepted the post of arbitrator of the claim of Mr. Mays, an American railroad contractor, against the Government of Guatemala for $100,000 damages on account of the forfeiture of his contract to build a railroad.

Interment of the Duke of Teck.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The interment of the remains of the Duke of Teck, who died on Sunday, at White Lodge, Richmond Park, Surrey, took place at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, this morning. It was a simple ceremonial. Fifteen members of the royal family were present, the Prince of Wales representing the Queen.

Ruskin Died Comparatively Poor.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—It is said that John Ruskin, though he inherited a fortune, died a comparatively poor man, living in his later years on £1 a day, which, he characteristically remarked, was enough for any man. His dwindling fortune was undoubtedly due to his indiscriminate generosity.

Electricity on Berlin Railroad.

BERLIN, Jan. 27.—The Berlin Elevated Railroad intends to introduce electric motive power, at the expense of 43,000,000 marks. The projected system will be modeled after the Chicago South Side Railroad, the present steam system having proved inadequate.

Brazilian Guard's New Commander.

RIO JANEIRO, Jan. 27.—Gen Leite Castro has been made Commander of the National Guard in place of Gen. Fernando Mendez, editor and proprietor of the Jornal de Brazil.

McGRAW AND HANLON CONFER.

Relations Between Opposing Baseball Managers Apparently Cordial—Hanlon Has Nothing to Say.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 27.—There is mystery about a midnight conference held last night by Ned Hanlon and John McGraw and the action of Von der Horst and Hanlon in deliberately ignoring the notices that their lease on the Union Park had expired, which is leading to the suspicion here that Hanlon and probably one or two other National League club owners have all along known more about this American Association movement than they would admit.

It is hardly likely that McGraw and Quin, the leading spirits in the association, would maintain such cordial relations with Hanlon when ostensibly they were depriving the League manager of his ball grounds and the pick of his players. Although they are now supposed to be bitter competitors, leaders of the opposing forces in the new ball world, they appear to perfectly understand each other.

McGraw frowned and fumed to-day over a statement published that he had promised Hanlon at the conference to consider a very liberal offer to give up the new association. McGraw admits the conference, but says he told Hanlon that he had cast his lot with the new association and that no inducement he could offer would be considered.

To-day McGraw received dispatches from Brooklyn stating that Howell and Crisham will sign with him. "Bill" Clarke of Boston has also come over. McGraw is apparently master of the baseball situation.

The League magnates are reported to be coming to Baltimore to confer with Hanlon, and possibly McGraw. Robinson of Cleveland arrived to-night, but he declines to talk. Von Der Horst is also here declaring that he is very angry at the action of McGraw and the other players.

Hanlon positively asserts that no business was accomplished with Baltimore at the Cleveland meeting, and that it would surely have remained in the league had recent developments not occurred. Since the complexion of the local situation has changed he will not say what will happen. Of course there was no use asking the "Sphinx" if developments might not induce or force him to cast his fortune with the new association.

VANDALS DESTROY LAMPS.

Much Damage Done Along the Hudson County Boulevard.

The Hudson County Boulevard Commissioners are worried over the destruction of lamps along the boulevard. In one night recently fifty-two lamps on the Weehawken section of the road were destroyed. Feed wires have been cut a dozen times, and the police say the work is being done by expert linemen.

From the reports received, it appears to be the systematic operation of vandals. The lamps are worth $18 each, and the property destroyed amounts to almost $1,000. The Commissioners have offered a reward for the apprehension of the vandals.

DREYFUS SENTENCE POSTED.

Anger Excited by the Form Used by the Marquis de Galliffet.

PARIS, Jan. 27.—The hatred of Dreyfus has not yet subsided in some quarters. The Nationalist press has been attacking the Government for having suppressed, illegally, it is alleged, the publication of the judgment of the Rennes court-martial. Marquis de Galliffet, the Minister of War, has yielded by having the sentence posted at Rennes this week in the following form:

"Dreyfus, Alfred; volunteer, Captain-probationer on the general staff; high treason; ten years' detention and military degradation, without interdiction of residence."

The Dreyfusards are very angry at the form of the announcement. The Aurore calls it an outright forgery, because it omits all mention of the extenuating circumstances found by the court-martial, and of the pardon.

CHICAGO MAY EXHIBIT FREAKS.

Law Recently Enacted in Illinois Declared Unconstitutional.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—Judge Gibbons of the Circuit Court to-day rendered a decision in regard to the anti-freak law passed by the last Legislature, which prohibited the public exhibition of persons who have become conspicuous through some criminal act or whose deformity is such as to attract pure curiosity.

Judge Gibbons sustains the clause of the law prohibiting the exhibition of criminals as a wise and salutary measure, but declares unconstitutional the clause prohibiting the exhibition of deformed persons. The ruling of the court was made in the case of a colored boy born without arms, who has been on exhibition in a Chicago museum, and who has acquired skill in sketching with pen or pencil held between his toes.

MRS. OAKES WANTS $250,000.

Divorced Wife Sues for Husband's Lost Love and Conspiracy.

Two suits are about to come to trial in which Mrs. Luella C. Oakes, the divorced wife of Francis J. Oakes, President of the Oakes Chemical Manufacturing Company, demands damages in the sum of $250,000.

The first case is an action for $100,000 damages for alienation of her husband's affections against Mrs. Adelaide Sullivan Oakes, the present wife of Mr. Oakes, whom he married in December, 1894, after obtaining a divorce from the plaintiff. In this suit, which will come to trial Feb. 5, it is alleged the defendant made charges against the plaintiff, induced the latter's husband to put her in various insane asylums, and finally to divorce her. It is admitted the divorce was obtained in this State on statutory grounds, but the plaintiff's lawyer, B. F. Spellman, declared yesterday his client's interests were not adequately protected.

The second suit is an action for $150,000 damages on account of an alleged conspiracy, the defendants being Mr. Oakes and his present wife, together with Dr. Neil O. Fitch and Dr. William J. Burnett. The plaintiff alleges that, through the action of these persons she was confined for most of the time from Nov. 5, 1891, until June 10, 1894, in insane asylums, although she was perfectly sane throughout this period.

The two women in the case are cousins. Mr. Oakes and his present wife, who are living at the Hotel Majestic, deny all the allegations of the former Mrs. Oakes.

TRUST LAWS IN ILLINOIS.

Federal Court Will Pass on Constitutionality of State Acts.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—Judge Kohlsaat, in the United States Circuit Court, has been asked to pass on the constitutionality of the Illinois statute which declares that a trust has no right to sue or recover on any contract made in this State, and his ruling is expected to be announced Monday. The Court will decide whether he is to take from the jury the case of the Union Sewer Pipe Company against Thomas Connolly and William B. Dee, which is on trial.

The constitutionality of the anti-trust statute in Illinois is being attacked by the plaintiff in the case, which seeks to recover about $6,000 said to be due from the defendants on a contract. The statute in question has already been sustained by the Illinois Supreme Court in the cases of Ford against the Chicago Milk Shippers' Association, and Harding against the American Glucose Company, but the Federal court has never before been asked to decide as to the validity of this law.

The Union Sewer Pipe Company of Akron, Ohio, is one of the old trusts, while the defendants are dealers in sewer pipe in Chicago.

Paper Trust in Bavaria.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Consul Worman at Munich reports to the State Department the creation of a paper trust in Bavaria, embodying the entire industry in that country

Shipments of Oleomargarine.

HOWARD SALE QUESTIONED.

Collection Disposed of at Auction Declared Not Genuine—Statement by the Auctioneers.

According to The Baltimore Sun the Knickerbocker Auction Company has been conducting a sale of various articles of furniture at 8 West Twenty-eighth Street, this city, during the last week, which are not what they were advertised to be. The auction company advertised the collection in all the New York papers as "the rare and valuable collection of antiquities formed by the Hon. John Eager Howard of Revolutionary fame, removed from the old homestead at Claremont, Calverton Heights, near Baltimore, Md., comprising rare specimens of Colonial and Chippendale furniture." The sale began last Wednesday, and yesterday evening all the 1,093 articles in the collection had been sold off at prices ranging from $1 to $135.

A story in regard to the sale appeared yesterday in The Baltimore Sun. According to The Sun "the relatives and descendants of Col. Howard were more than surprised when they saw the advertisements and catalogue."

"Mr. McHenry Howard," says The Baltimore Sun, "who is a grandson of John Eager Howard, said in regard to the sale:

'In addition to showing pictures of the various rooms in the Howard house, and mentioning the dining room table and china used by George Washington and other distinguished personages, who often feasted at the homestead, the catalogue states that the old homestead itself is to be offered for sale, with many acres of land, and that the particulars can be learned from the auctioneer who is conducting the sale.

"'Col. Howard's home was at Belvidere, the site of the house, which was torn down about twenty-five years ago, being near the present corner of Calvert and Chase Streets, the estate extending southerly over the Washington Monument grounds and through the centre of the city to Federal Hill. He never lived at or near Claremont, and had no possessions in that direction. The furniture and other effects now offered for sale were not Col. Howard's and have no association with him.'"

According to the Baltimore paper James Howard is the recipient of a letter from the New York auctioneer, to whom he wrote respecting the sale. It gives the letter as follows:

"Yours at hand in reference to the Howard sale, which surprises me very much. Some three or four weeks ago I received a letter from one of the leading antique furniture houses of your town asking me if I would be interested in bringing the effects of John Eager Howard to New York for auction. After one or two days I concluded to go down and investigate, and was shown the homestead, of which you see a picture in the catalogue. The goods and everything in it impressed me very much, and I immediately arranged for the sale of same, and thought so well of it that I photographed some of the rooms.

"My contract with the people who are selling this furniture reads: 'The contents of homestead of John Eager Howard, with the privilege to advertise same as such.' Your letter says the place 'Claremont' was owned by the father of the late Carroll Spence, formerly Minister to Turkey. I shall make an investigation and find out more of it, as I do not care to get into anything of this kind."

C. E. Smith of the Knickerbocker Auction Company admits to having written this letter. "I made an investigation," he said, "and I found that I was right. The goods I sold came from the house occupied by Col. Howard previous to the building of his more pretentious residence at Belvidere. The house, with all its furniture, came into the possession of Carroll Spence, Minister to Turkey, in 1828, when Col. Howard moved out. Its present owner, for whom I am conducting the sale, and who is the head of one of the most prominent business houses in Baltimore, has been occupying the house for many years. He is breaking up his house preparatory to going to Europe, and is selling everything. I am perfectly confident of my position, as I have papers in my possession which prove that the articles I sold were genuine. Any of the old residents of Baltimore will vouch for my statements."

MADRAZO'S LAST PORTRAITS.

A private view was given yesterday at the Oehme galleries, 384 Fifth Avenue, of a dozen or more portraits by the well-known Spanish-French painter Raymundo de Madrazo, all, with the exception of those of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., and of a woman not named in the catalogue, recent work. The exhibition will be open to the public from to-morrow morning. The portraits now shown are of Mrs. F. B. Jennings, Miss Lamont, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Smithers, Mrs. E. Lyman Short, Miss Rice, Mrs. Berry Wall, Mrs. G. L. Winthrop, Mrs. Isidor Wormser, Jr., Mr. H. J. Chisholm, Mr. H. M. Flagler, a child of Mrs. Wormser, and, as said above, of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., and an unnamed young woman.

The art of M. de Madrazo of the present day is a different art from that of his earlier days. Its chief characteristics now are refinement, decorative quality, delicate color, and artificiality. The art of his earlier days, when he was still under the direct influence of his father-in-law and master, Fortuny, and when he was known as the painter of pierrettes, harlequins, Japanese beauties, and rococo dandies, was a virile art, and in his work of that day, good examples of which were shown in recent picture sales here, "The Woman with a Parrot" of the A. T. Stewart and the "Departure from the Masked Ball" of the W. A. Stewart sales, there was a suggestion that the mantle of the great Fortuny, while it might not fall upon his shoulders, was still hovering above them.

But time, with increasing income, and as a resultant more temptation to ease, and during the last three or four years, it is to be feared, the temptation of flattering American millionaires, which has led other modern French portraitists into inferior work, have not improved the art of M. de Madrazo. His art now is prettier, and, although one still sees in it a facile touch, a refined taste, and a rarely delicate decorative color sense, one misses the strong, dexterous brush of the Madrazo of the past. It is to be feared that the all-powerful American dollar is as blighting at times to good art inspiration as is the upas tree of Java to the unfortunate traveler who sits beneath it.

One cannot afford to be hypercritical in the presence of such graceful, reined, and no doubt eminently satisfactory portraits to the originals as the present pictures of M. de Madrazo. They are all worth seeing and studying, and their owners will doubtless cover them with glass and cherish them in their dainty frames not only from their cost, but for their delicate and artificial beauty. From this last criticism one must except the male portraits of Messrs. H. J. Chisholm, H. M. Flagler, and F. S. Smithers, which, with the exception of the one feminine portrait of Mrs. Grenville L. Winthrop, (Miss Mary Trevor,) are the best works shown and have a touch of the artist's old-time strength. The portrait of Mr. Flagler, a full length standing one, while rather stiff in pose, is well drawn, an excellent likeness, with somewhat cold flesh tones and dexterous handling of the textures in the silk-lapelled broadcloth frock coat, and the details of the Vernis-Martin table on which Mr. Flagler rests his left hand. The portrait is one of the man as he is known, clear-eyed, resolute, shrewd, and exceedingly reserved. The portrait of Mr. H. J. Chisholm, a half-length, is good in color and excellent in expression. The bust portrait of Mr. F. S. Smithers is the strongest portrait displayed, with rich, warm flesh tones and good expression—an admirable interpretation of character.

The portrait of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., was painted in 1901, and is not a good likeness of her as she is to-day. It is exceedingly decorative, graceful in pose, and marks the transition period of the artist, having something of both his earlier and later methods. Mrs. Grenville L. Winthrop, who is depicted in a low-cut black velvet gown, with a broad fuffle of point lace at the corsage and over the shoulders, is seated leaning slightly forward, so that her face is shown in a three-quarters view. The pose is natural, the drawing strong, and the color scheme charming and effective. The texture of the velvet and the lace is extremely well rendered and the figure is strongly modeled. The portraits of Mrs. Isidor Wormser, Jr., (Miss Lauer,) and of Mrs. Berry Wall are disappointing. The former is flat and cold in color, and has the effect of being painted on china. Mrs. Wormser is an exceedingly handsome brunette, and, while her portrait is attractive as a piece of decoration, it lacks strength.

The half-length seated portrait of Mrs. E. Lyman Short is equally disappointing. The flesh tones are too cold. Mrs. Short appears as if slipping out of the high-backed old chair on which she sits, and her arms and neck look "pudgy." The portrait of Mrs. F. B. Jennings is graceful, full of expression, and evidently a good likeness. The color scheme is of light grays and whites, and the gray hair tones well with the white lace of the gown.

NOTES IN THE ART WORLD.

The plan to form an American Salon, in which to hold the exhibitions of all the societies, is at present absorbing the attention of the New York art world. A dinner will take place shortly, which will be attended by committees from the several art organizations in this city, where the policy of such a movement will be discussed, and the same subject will be further considered at the annual dinner of the Architects' League, on Feb. 8. Such an arrangement would furnish a welcome line of retreat for the doughty generals who have driven the Academy's tentpegs on Morningside Heights. At the yearly business meeting of the Water Color Society Mr. J. G. Brown, the society's President, was elected as one of the delegates to the dinner above mentioned. Mr. Thomas Moran rose to say that he objected to Mr. Brown as entirely unfit for such a committee, as a man of very poor judgment, which had already been shown. Mr. Brown replied that he entirely agreed with all the statements that Mr. Moran had made.

The annual black and white exhibition of the Salmagundi Club, at which members compete for the Samuel T. Shaw Prize of $125, will open to-day and will remain open until Thursday next. It was preceded by a reception on Friday, at which the prize was awarded by vote of members, and a ladies' day was held yesterday. The place of honor at the head of the gallery is occupied by the President of the club, Mr. A. T. Van Laer, with a large oil of the Washington Arch on a wet day. To the right is "Toilers in the Field," by Harry Roseland, and near by to the left a fine moonlight over salt meadows, by F. K. M. Rehn, called "The Last Gleam." Mr. Irving Couse, who won the prize last year, and took, by the way, the second Halarten Prize at the present Academy, shows only an "Indian Hunter," a slight effort which frankly proclaims him out of the race this time. Mr. William Verplanck Birney, on the other hand, makes a loud bid for the prize with three very expressive children hanging over a fence, and Mr. Will H. Drake has sent a man after Mr. Shaw's money in an ox cart, under a thin disguise of gathering seaweed on the beach. Mr. George McCord exhibits a storm breaking upon a picturesque group of cottages and a wet road with cattle, with a complacent sense of deserving the prize, which is much the attitude of Myles Collier, with his fine picture of a herring boat on the sand. Prof. Rufus Sheldon and O. C. Wigand and Charles Warren Eaton, with their dainty monotypes and Malcolm Fraser, with a pencilling of a circus rider "Between the Acts," and William N. Hays, with a bright drawing in ink of a dog and shoe, stand in line with a knowing air.

MRS. FISH'S COTILLION.

Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish gave last evening at her residence, as the third and last of her series of three Saturday night entertainments, a cotillion. To this cotillion there were invited about the same people who were asked to Mrs. Fish to her first and second Saturday nights, which were, as will be remembered, respectively a musicale and a vaudeville. As it was Saturday evening the guests were invited to come at an earlier hour than usual, and nearly all were present by 9 o'clock. The cotillion was danced before supper, which was served about midnight.

The house was decorated with palms and ferns and pink roses. The table decorations were of pink roses, but neither these nor the general decorations, while handsome and appropriate, were at all profuse. Mrs. Fish received her guests standing at the head of the main stairway, which winds up from the entrance hall to the second floor. The cotillion, in which there were about fifty couples, was danced in the ballroom, at the west end of the house, on the second floor. It was led by Mr. Elisha Dyer, Jr., dancing with Mrs. Fish. There were five favor figures, and in one or two of these the favors were designed after old French paintings by Watteau, Boucher, Nattier, and other early French artists, and comprised shepherds' pipes and shepherdesses' crooks. In other figures there were large bouquets of artificial flowers tied with ribbons, gun metal pencils, Russian and Egyptian enameled clasps in scarab and other odd designs, and other quaint and artistic conceits. These favors were furnished by Mrs. Kate Collins.

Supper was served at small tables placed in the hall and dining room downstairs. The guests as said above were about the same as those present at Mrs. Fish's previous two Saturdays, and were composed for the most part of the younger set in society.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. George Gould, the Count and Countess de Castellane, Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. Burke-Roche, Mr. and Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, the Misses Cameron, Mr. and Mrs. Cooper Hewitt, Mr. and Mrs. Frank K. Pendleton, Mr. and Mrs. G. B. de Forest, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Oelrichs.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Egerton Winthrop, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. T. Suffern Tailer, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Victor Sorchan, Mr. and Mrs. Stanford White, Mr. and Mrs. Lanfear Norrie, Mr. and Mrs. Post, Mr. and Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Mr. and Mrs. Henry McVickar, Mr. Heber Bishop, Miss Bishop, Miss Marie Winthrop, Miss Atherton Blight, Miss Anna Sands, Miss Anna Dodge, the Misses Morton, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Travers, and Messrs. Goelet, Gallatin, Harry Lehr, J. W. Gerard, Jr., Eliot Gregory, Bartley, Kountze, T. Sanford Beatty, Robert Gerry, David Bishop, Robert Van Cortlandt, J. De W. Cutting, and Lispenard Stewart.

MRS. ENO'S RECEPTION.

Mrs. John C. Eno gave a large reception yesterday afternoon at her apartments in the Astoria for her younger daughter, Miss Mary Phelps Eno, who was introduced at this affair. Mrs. Eno's elder daughter, Mrs. William Leon Graves, who was married last Autumn, is now in France with her husband. There was quite a large attendance at yesterday's reception, which was a very handsome and elaborate affair. Among the guests were a number of Canadians, who became friends of Mr. and Mrs. Eno during their long sojourn in Quebec, where they were very popular.

WASHINGTON'S SOCIAL RULES.

Ambassadorial Rank Causes Numerous Misunderstandings.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Society is discussing with animation the recent assertion of ex-Secretary Foster that it was a mistake for the United States to create the rank in diplomacy of Ambassador. A writer for The Star, taking up the current gossip and detailing some particulars of it that may have interest outside the capital, discusses them to-day with minute attention to details. At the diplomatic dinner last week it says the President escorted Lady Pauncefote to the table. Lord Pauncefote took in Mrs. McKinley. The next ranking Ambassador, Baron Fava, took in the wife of the Mexican Ambassador, and to the Mexican Ambassador was assigned the Baroness Hengelmuller.

The moment the latter found out who her escort was to be she protested through her husband, the Austrian Minister, to the Secretary of State. A hasty consultation took place between the President, Col. Hay, and Col. Bingham, with the result that the lady from the country which remembers the Maximilian episode was taken to dinner by a diplomat of lower station, and an equally satisfactory arrangement allowed the Mexican Ambassador to partake of the Executive salt beside another partner.

Another incident concerning Ambassadorial personages is still talked about. The Ambassadors were not present at the recent musicale at John R. McLean's home because they were invited to meet a personage of less rank than their own. An Ambassador who directly represents his sovereign can only be invited to "meet" the President in this country.

Still another tid-bit of gossip on official etiquette pertains to the first State dinner this season. The Cabinet is the honored body always at this formal opening of the White House hospitalities. On this occasion the President took out Mrs. Frye, and Mrs. McKinley was escorted by Senator Frye. This interpretation of the honor due to the Vice President pro tem. is absolutely correct, yet there are those who imagined that the Secretary of State and Mrs. Hay should have ranked Senator and Mrs. Frye.

It is not generally known that the recent ruling which has removed from the receiving line at the White House daughters of Cabinet officers who were wont to take their mothers' places was largely due to the criticisms of several foreign Ministers. They did not object so much to the presence of these young women in the receiving line as that the rank inherited, so to speak, from that prerogative caused them to be seated ahead of these foreigners and their wives at dinners. They endured it at first smilingly, then less good naturedly, until the present Winter, when to keep down further growls the daughters of Cabinet officers no longer receive on the line.

This ruling, of course, does not apply to the daughter of the Secretary of Agriculture, who presides over her father's household, and is in no sense a substitute, such as other young ladies of the Cabinet have been on many memorable occasions.

CAPE NOME GOLD FIELDS

Incidents and Conditions Told in Letters from Rev. R. S. Wirt.

FORTY HOURS' WORK, $18,000

Saloon Becomes a Church—Some Prices —Three Thousand Are Spending the Winter There.

Apropos of the expected great rush in the Spring to Cape Nome gold fields, a description of which has been published in these columns, anything relating to the place, and of what is going on there is of especial interest at this time. Last August the Rev. Royal L. Wirt, a representative of the Alaska Missions under the auspices of the Congregational Churches, visited Cape Nome for the purpose of making arrangements to establish a Christian church, hospital, library, and reading rooms for the benefit of the miners. He found them very anxious for him to remain with them, and they accordingly contributed generously of their money to help him in carrying out his designs. Mr. Wirt and his family concluded to face the perils of an arctic Winter to carry on their great work.

Letters written home to relatives tell of his arrival there, and some of his interesting experiences up to the time of the leaving of the last ship before the freezing of Bering Sea. In one of these letters he says:

"After my arrival at Anvil City I was asked if I wished to undertake a long tramp out to the hills to see for myself the exact truth concerning the reported richness of the placers. I was warned that it would be an exceedingly hard trip, but I assured my guide I was no novice at that sort of thing, and began drawing on the mutlocks he had kindly provided. At 9 o'clock we started, and for four miles walked over the tundra, a thick growth of soft spongy moss. With ordinary boots this would have been almost impossible, but with our light mutlocks we could jump from tuft to tuft, and so keep out of the bog-holes. There were five in our party, two old miners acting as guides. After reaching the foothills the walking became better, though the tundra covers everything, even the hills, except along the edges of streams. There are no trees in this whole region. The landscape is absolutely barren of vegetation other than the water-soaked tundra. Building material and fuel are, in consequence, very difficult to obtain. Lumber sells for $100 per thousand, and coal brings anywhere from $60 to $100 per ton. The absence of mountains is also a unique feature of this mining district.

"Seven or eight miles back from the town is a hill of some prominence, perhaps 1,000 feet above the sea level. On the summit of this hill stands a lone rock about 40 feet high, which has been worn by glacial action into a remarkable likeness to a huge anvil. Whether seen from the sea or the interior the striking resemblance is apparent. Skirting this hill, we soon came upon the famous Anvil Creek, where gold was first discovered in October, 1898.

"The 'strike' was made by three Scandinavians who had been employed as Government reindeer herders. Winter closed down soon after these men started their claims, so that no development work was done until after the ground was thawed out late last Spring. When we, therefore, reached Claim No. 1, below Discovery, the method of extracting the gold from the gravel, called sluicing, had been in operation less than two months. In that time, despite all sorts of hindrances and primitive machinery, the claim had yielded upward of $100,000.

"The camp consists of a cook tent, around which are grouped half a dozen weather-beaten sleeping tents. From one of these, hearing our voices, the genial owner of this rich twenty-acre claim, issued, and gave us a genuine miner's welcome. For open-handed generosity give me the miner in his mining camp. Invited into the tent, our astonished eyes soon discovered a common milk pan heaped full of shining yellow dust, not dust, properly speaking, but granules of gold, averaging about the size of a wheat grain. 'This,' said our host, 'represents a three-and-a-half day's run in the sluice-boxes, working seven men.' There was not far from seventy-five pounds of gold dust in the pan, which would bring perhaps $12,000 at the mint. Eighteen thousand dollars in forty hours was his best run.

"It was not far from the noon hour, and, of course, we were not allowed to continue our journey until the cook had done his best to fortify us against the next stage of our journey. But imagine our surprise when our host took us once more into his tent, poured out $2,000 in big nuggets, and said: 'Help yourselves each to a souvenir, gentlemen.' The five souvenirs weighed just $51.

"From claim to claim we passed over Anvil Creek, and in a good many tents saw wonderful clean-ups standing around in tin cans, bottles, and buckskin 'pokes,' with an apparent carelessness, which would have been sheer recklessness anywhere else. From Anvil Creek we crossed a divide to Glacier Creek, and from Glacier Creek to Snow Gulch, thence we proceeded homeward by way of Snake River and Bourbon Creek. Just at midnight we dragged our weary feet into the store. Twenty-five miles of the roughest kind of walking had put one in a condition where I could appreciate a fairly good bed, but I looked around the big warehouse in vain for any such article of furniture. I was soon relieved by hearing the Captain's cheery voice calling from out the shadow: 'Here's the prophet's chamber; it's not what we would wish, but you will find the bed not so bad.' Nor did I. A great pile of soft furs made a bed fit for a King. There was no symptom of insomnia that night, I'll assure you.

"In this visit to the creek diggings we had seen enough to make it evident that this is to be a very rich district, but our visit the next day to the beach diggings revealed the peculiar feature of this marvelous camp—a feature which must soon command wide attention.

"Three weeks before my visit to Anvil City, it was discovered that the very sand of the beach contained gold in large quantities. As the United States Government reserves sixty feet above tide on all shores, the local United States Commissioner held that the beach could not be controlled by private parties. This kept off claim locators, but permitted any one to mine the beach anywhere at his free will. The result of this ruling is that every man who has not been fortunate enough to get a creek claim, may provide himself with a rocker and go to work cooking the ruby sand on the beach. Seldom in the history of mining has there been a camp where every body could turn his labor to gold, but here every man who is not doing better, may be found down on the shore line, rocking out from $10 to $100 per day. The average is not far from $50. We found about 1,500 men thus employed. There are probably 4,000 people in the district, with Anvil as a trading centre.

"Although this settlement is nearly a year old, not a sermon was the first ever heard in the place. It is estimated that 3,000 people will Winter here. There are twenty-two physicians on the ground, but there was no minister until my coming.

"I was greatly surprised to have a large portion of the people urge me, with rough but unmistakable sincerity, to remain with them.

"They pointed out the need of a church, a hospital, and a public reading room. They urged that the rigors of an arctic Winter would soon be upon them, and that, unless I stood by to help them in these things, their lot would be almost unendurable. Many of these men have spent one or more Winters in Alaska, and know by bitter experience what it means to be shut up by scurvy and darkness for six months, with the thermometer 40, 50, and 60 degrees below zero.

"A subscription was started among the miners, and $5,000 was soon obtained. About this time I learned that in the incorporation of the town a few weeks before a hospital committee had been appointed. One lot in each block was to be reserved and sold for hospital funds. A public square was also set apart for buildings of this nature. So at once the city deeded to me, in trust, six beautiful lots, each 50 by 140 feet, upon which to build a hospital, church, public library, or other building for benevolent or charitable purposes. There was need for haste, for navigation closes with the freezing of Bering Sea, some time in October. There was little building material in Anvil City, and nothing by way of furniture.

"The fame of Anvil City has gone out, and people will flock here from the ends of the earth in the Spring. Typhoid pneumonia has appeared, and there will be more sickness as the Winter progresses. Building material cannot be obtained nearer than Seattle, and but one or two more steamers can be expected to make the round trip. A steamer soon left for Seattle and I took passage on this. She would remain there about ten days and then return to Cape Nome on her last trip. This would give me time to purchase what I desired and then the miners could put up the buildings before the severest weather set in."

Another letter, written in the latter part of October, says: "It is with feelings of sadness that I write that a barge filled with our material sank at the ship's side while being loaded. Some few things were saved from the wreck, but of course we cannot build now. I hope, however, that our work can go on. I have rented a large two-story building for $200 per month, and this we are fitting up to care for the sick during the Winter. As nearly all of our books were saved, we have also obtained a large room, for $100 per month, for our library, and, best of all, a hall originally designed for a saloon has been found in which to hold religious services.

"I said you could see how we are living. One corner of a large warehouse is curtained off with a big tarpaulin, and that we call home. At night I fix cot beds and two sleeping bags and cover the floor. The weather is warm and cold by turns, with snow on the ground and the streams frozen. There is a great deal of sickness. Scores if not hundreds are down with typhoid fever.

"Coal here is out of the market. I bought ten tons at $75 per ton. Flour is $10 per hundredweight; sugar, $25 per pound; butter, $1 per pound; all candles, $1 per box; coal oil, $1 per gallon; meals, $3 each; labor, $2 per hour.

"There are plenty of thieves and hard characters in the camp. The water is deadly, and there is no attempt whatever at sanitation. The tents are three and four deep on the beach for miles. We are only a little way back from the beach, and the men are rocking gold at our very doorstep. I at first thought they were digging to lay a pipe or something—it never occurred to me that there was gold in our front yard. Many of the poor fellows work long hours, with poor shelter and improper food. The situation is desperate, indeed, and I tremble a little for the women and children as we face the Winter."

Later communications say that quite an amount of building materials were received from the sunken barge, and the situation in that respect is found to be a little more encouraging. Some building can be carried on after all. The last boat leaving in November reported that 2,000 people were to winter there, many in tents.

FEEING IN PRIVATE HOUSES.

What Servants Should Guests Remember?—Is Too Much Demanded?—A New York Society Woman Says No.

The other day a woman, talking about visiting, declared that it had become a bugbear to her because of the necessity of tipping the servants, and spoke of an elaborate system of tipping which she said was in force in the house of one of her friends. It made her feel that she was obliged to follow the example, and give more than she felt was right, or than she could afford to give.

"I know," she said, "that a near relative of the family, a woman, never fails, upon spending a few days at the house, to give the servants each a dollar upon leaving. This is not only to the servants who may wait upon her directly, but, as I said, to all of them, even to the children's nurse. Now, I know the nurses are paid from $20 to $25 a month and the other servants in proportion. But, as I know what is done in the family and, therefore, undoubtedly countenanced, I feel that I ought to do the same, and it is distinctly a tax upon my resources, to say nothing of the fact that I feel that it is uncalled for. Why should I fee the children's nurses when, as a matter of fact, they have more leisure when I am at the house? For I am fond of the children and keep them frequently with me.

"I know one woman," she went on, "who, when visitors come to her house tells them that she does not allow her servants to receive tips. That seems to me very sensible, but the friends in whose house there is such an elaborate system of tipping seems to think it very strange. If tipping is to be carried to such an extent, visiting will become an impossibility."

Is it really the case that servants are feed to this extent by visitors in wealthy households and is this necessary to insure willing service from the servants at the houses of friends? A New York woman who has known the social world at its best, the social world where brains and breeding count, all her life, says it is not.

"In all my life," she said when the story had been told her, "I have never known such an experience. If it was some holiday or some festival season, some celebration in the family where the members themselves are making gifts to the servants, the guests might give something to each one, but not under ordinary circumstances.

"The practice of tipping has come down from the old days in England when the servants were given a place to sleep and their board and little more, and depended upon what they received from guests. The idea now is that one is not to make money out of one's friends—one does not visit to save hotel bills. That is carried out in England and in this country.

"I believe that a certain amount of tipping is perfectly legitimate. In going to a house an extra amount of work is made. There are more dishes to wash, there is an extra room to be cared for, and there is very good reason for leaving some money for the servants who have been obliged to do the extra work. When servants take a position they ask how many there are in the family, and how much work there will be, and it is perfectly proper that they should. It is very easy for the mistress of the house to invite guests. She makes a little difference in ordering, and there is a slight increase in her bills, which, if she is a woman who has money, is immaterial. Only the servants have extra trouble.

"So it is customary to give those who are called upon for this service some return. One does not usually stay less than two or three or four days, and it is not customary to break a dollar. There is a dollar for the chambermaid and one for the waitress. It is usually the upper servants who are remembered, perhaps on the principle of to him that hath shall be given. If the visitor drives with the hostess it is not necessary to give anything to the coachman, for he would drive anyway. But if there is some extra service, if the coachman is obliged to drive six miles in the country to meet you and take you back to the station, take you out on a stormy day, and make an extra effort on your account, then it is well to remember him.

"The cook has a certain amount of cooking to do, and it is not customary to give her anything unless there is some extra service required. If one is ill for two or three days, confined to the room, and requires some special cooking to be done, then it is only right that the cook should be remembered. That is for a woman who is visiting. A man may have his shoes brushed every day, and then he sends something down stairs to the man who attends to that, but that is not required of the woman.

"One is not expected to get something for nothing, to save hotel bills in visiting, but it is not expected that the visitor will inconvenience herself or give more than she is able. Servants do not expect more than can be afforded. They know better than any one else how much the visitor can afford to give, and they gauge accordingly. They are close observers. It is their business to always keep a level, to preserve a certain equilibrium among guests, and they know what to expect. They do not think better of a person for giving more lavishly than he can afford. One might put on all the airs of multimillionaires, but it would never deceive the servants.

"They know people by their gloves, they know them by their underclothes, they know very well when a person arrives with a small trunk and perhaps a cotton-lined gown when some one else has one that is silk-lined, that their circumstances are different. There is a great deal in giving a pleasant word. It is a simple matter to thank servants courteously for any service received, and I do not think that any servant will treat the guests less courteously because they have less money to give than more wealthy visitors. When I invite a governess to make me a visit she is treated, I know, just as courteously as a wealthy woman, and that not only before my face, but always. It is not a certain amount that the servants expect, but an amount in proportion to what may be due from the person.

"It is not possible to go into the matter of fees in England, for we live so differently here. Living there is upon an elaborate scale, with hunting and many things that call for extra service. If a long visit is made there will be $5, perhaps, for the servants from whom service is received, but usually for an ordinary visit there would be a dollar for the two servants who give the most service, and it is not customary as a general thing to break a dollar. Yet if one staid only a very short time, a day, say, that might be done; or if one did not feel like spending so much, a small article, or something pretty for the maid to wear at her neck, that would cost only 75 cents, would afford her just as much pleasure. You give the chambermaid at a hotel something when you leave; why not the chambermaid in a private house?

"I would, however, gauge my giving always by the means of the people where I was staying. If I were in a quiet country place where the servant received a small salary I would not give so much. I would not at any time seem to give more in proportion than the master of the house would give. I do not think there is overdoing in tipping in private houses or that it is abused. I can say, however, it has increased as we have improved in our style of living. We have more money now than we had. I remember hearing at one time of guests who, after making a visit at a country house, would give a servant 25 cents. But at that time everything would be put on the table at once, with a ham at one end and a pair of chickens at the other. Now we have better service and require more of the servants, and fees have increased accordingly."

NATIONAL GUARD NOTES.

The National Guard Association of New York includes in its membership all the prominent officers of the National Guard of the State. It is expected that the annual convention of the association, to be held in Albany, Thursday, Feb. 8, will surpass all previous ones in point of interest, and a very large number of delegates have signified their intention of being present. The morning session of the convention will take place at the armory of the Tenth Battalion at 10 o'clock. At this session general business will be transacted. An innovation, and one that promises to give great satisfaction, will be an afternoon session, which will take place at 2 P. M. at Odd Fellows' Hall. An address will be delivered by the Commander in Chief, Gov. Roosevelt. Then will follow these papers: "The Military Code," by Col. Samuel M. Welch, Jr., Chairman of the Code Committee; "Camp Sanitation: The Health and Care of Men," by Major William H. Briggs, late Sanitary Inspector, Second Army Corps; "The Army Lyceum: Its Application to the National Guard," by Capt. Jasper Ewing Brady, United States Army; "Provost Guard: Authority and Duty Defined," by Lieut. Col. Edmund P. Cottle, late Provost Marshal of the Second Army Corps. Lieut. Col. W. H. Chapin, President of the association, who was recently appointed Inspector of Small Arms on the staff of Major Gen. Roe, has been indefatigable in his efforts to make the convention one that will be beneficial from every standpoint to the guard. He has selected the speakers and has had various interviews with them concerning their papers. Those who know him best understand fully what a thoroughgoing officer he is. He believes in the true educational spirit, and it is expected that his annual address will contain many interesting features.

Col. Appleton of the Seventh Regiment has prepared some interesting and complete statistics covering the rifle practice in his command for the past twenty-five years, which also includes the team work of the regiment at Creedmoor last year, and a list of the experts, sharpshooters, and marksmen. The names and records of these have already appeared in THE NEW YORK TIMES. The figures of the aggregate number of men qualifying for the past twenty-five years, during which time the Seventh has maintained the lead in rifle practice, given below, will be found of interest:

Major J. C. Abrams has the distinguished honor of having qualified in 1875 and in every subsequent year.

Major Gen. Charles F. Roe, who will be accompanied by his staff, will review the Ninth Regiment at its armory to-morrow night, and dancing will follow the military exercises. The review was to have taken place next Tuesday, but the date was changed in order to suit Gen. Roe's convenience. During the ceremony members of the regiment will be presented with bars for volunteer service. There will be a lecture in the armory on Saturday evening, Feb. 6, under the management of Chaplain Peters. The subject will be "Scenes in the Philippines." Company C hopes to give an entertainment in the near future whereby it may raise sufficient sums to restore the company room furniture, which was placed in a storage warehouse before the Spanish war, under the orders of former Capt. Quimby. Lieuts. R. N. Mackin of Company F and James Lynch of Company K, who were recently elected and passed the board, have received their commissions. The regiment is very proud of its indoor baseball team, which stands near the head of the list in percentages of games won, and strong hopes are entertained that it will yet be on top.

The review of the Seventy-first Regiment last Tuesday night attracted one of the largest audiences ever in the armory, and, in fact, Col. Bates was at his wits' end to accommodate the friends of the regiment who desired admission. The main galleries were filled and were lined with spectators who remained standing, while above, the galleries in front of the company rooms were similarly filled, and even down in the drill hall a large number of extra seats was placed wherever there was available space. In the main hallway was a number of other spectators, who stood patiently waiting all evening to get a glimpse of the regiment. The parade strength was ten companies of sixteen files each, and, generally speaking, the display made was one of the best ever given by the regiment. In executing a movement in street-riot drill, by a mistake of the bugler in giving a wrong signal, part of the regiment executed fours right, while another portion executed fours left, which marred the excellence of this portion of the drill. The ceremony of review in parade was all that could be desired. The excellence of the band and field music under Prof. Fanciulli, in its evolutions and the music discoursed, is also worthy of note. The ceremony of presenting the war colors the volunteer regiment carried in Cuba to the custody of the Veteran Corps was a very impressive one. Company H, in command of Capt. McCloud, carried the battle-torn colors to the reviewing point and turned them over to Color Bearers Ferguson and Turner of the Veteran Corps, two of the oldest members of the Seventy-first, who joined it away back in the fifties. The Veteran Corps, composed almost entirely of gray-haired men, was in command of Capt. W. D. Goss, and was drawn up in line facing Company H. The colors have not been presented to the veterans as their personal property, as has been stated, but have merely been turned over to them for safe keeping. Among the military men present were Gen. George Moore Smith, First Brigade; Major G. F. Hurry of the division staff, Capt. L. Wendel, First Battery; Capts. Falls and MacLean, Seventh Regiment; ex-Col. Francis, One Hundred and Seventy-first; Col. C. F. Homer, Seventy-first Veterans, and ex-Capt. W. Sprague of the Seventy-first. Company D was presented with the bronze trophy for having the best percentage at drill, and Company I, Capt. Williams, was presented with the silver cup for the best record in regimental athletics.

At the vaudeville entertainment and dance of the Hospital Corps of the Seventy-first Regiment, to be held at the armory Wednesday evening, Feb. 14, the programme will include "Grig Pattl," "St. John," "Musical Russells," and the Tuxedo Comedy Company. The regimental band, under Prof. Fanciulli, will furnish the music. The corps has received a new ambulance, to replace the one sold for service in South Africa.

The event most looked forward to in the Twelfth Regiment is the review by Gov. Elisha Dyer of Rhode Island at the armory next Thursday night. The Governor it is expected, will be accompanied by his staff, and a number of prominent military men and society people have been invited. The competition open to teams of seven men from the different companies of the regiment for the Leonard Trophy will be shot for in the armory range to-morrow night. The officers of the regiment have elected civil officers as follows: Secretary—Capt. T. W. Huston; Treasurer—Capt. A. M. White. Col. Dyer has appointed Capt. Huston, Lieut. Downs, and Lieut. Preece a board for the examination of non-commissioned officers. Company G will hold a ball at the armory next Saturday evening, and quite a large attendance is expected. The grand march will be led by Capt. Benkard, and the different officers of the regiment have been invited. Previous to the dance the company will give an exhibition drill, going through a number of battle exercises, in which blank cartridges will be used.

A review of the Thirteenth Regiment, Col. Austen, by the Hon. Bird S. Coler, will be held at the armory next Tuesday night, and after the review there will be a dance. Company I is at present in bad shape, but with some radical changes may pull up to the required standard, which Col. Austen is determined to maintain. A committee from the company have waited on Col. Austen in regard to the matter, and he informed them they would have to select a new company commander as soon as possible, and perform the prescribed duty if they wished to retain their organization. Avery D. McDougall, who was recently elected Captain of Company I, has declined the election. Company A will have a military euchre and dance on the evening of Feb. 9. In Company G, Private William S. Harris has been appointed Quartermaster Sergeant, vice Eason, made Battalion Quartermaster Sergeant. No less than twenty-eight dishonorable discharges from the regiment have been issued within the past few days for non-attendance at drill and neglect of duty. Company M has elected ex-Capt. Washington I. Taylor first Lieutenant and Sergt. F. W. Robb Second Lieutenant. A board for the examination of all non-commissioned officers appointed has been constituted as follows: Capt. James W. Stewart, First Lieut. John D. Eiseman, Second Lieut. Charles M. Reid, First Lieut. Charles P. Shinn, and Second Lieut. James Lynch, Jr.

In the Twenty-second Regiment, Company I, Capt. Stott, has decided to hold a dance in the armory on the evening of Feb. 15. Company C, Capt. Lilliendahl, will hold an election to-morrow night for a First Lieutenant. The members of the Hospital Corps of the regiment will meet at the armory to-morrow night for a competitive examination for the Marion Sims Trophy. The committee in charge of the entertainment of Company C, to be held in Lyric Hall Feb. 7, report a large sale of tickets. In Company E, Corp. C. F. Winters has been promoted Sergeant and Private Edward Murphy of Company F has been promoted Corporal. Company H will hold a dance at the armory next Tuesday night at 9:30 o'clock.

The Non-Commissioned Staff Association of the Twenty-third Regiment has elected the following officers for the ensuing term: President—Sergt. Major E. Penn Ferguson; Secretary—Color Bearer Louis W. Butler; Treasurer—Ordnance Sergt. Charles E. Bryant. The sixteenth annual games of the regiment will be held in the armory March 17. Yale, Harvard, Cornell, Pennsylvania, and Columbia will probably enter teams. Company E will hold a reception at the armory next Tuesday. Major D. K. Case, who is now in command of the regiment, has decided to order battalion drills, and is planning to hold a review early in February. There will be no changes in the staff at present, but the regimental examining board will be reorganized. As to who will succeed Col. Smith no one can tell yet, and some of the names mentioned are the result of idle speculation.

Carnival in Venice to be Reproduced—Other Features.

The carnival in Venice will be reproduced at the Arion ball with faithfulness of detail as to color and spectacular ceremony. The ball will be held at Madison Square Garden on the night of Feb. 9. There will be six entrances from the promenade to the dancing floor. Each will be lavishly decorated. Radiating from the dome to the balconies will be floral streamers and festoons of blue and yellow ribbons, forming a picturesque canopy.

Six floats in the grand procession will represent "Ancient Time," "Folk Lore," "Age of Reformation," "Age of Absolutism," "Modern Times," and "Prince Carnival and Arion."

A New EYEGLASS Invention.

We present to the public the Lens-Locked Screw, a new invention which makes eyeglasses set firmly on the nose, securing perfect visual results and the greatest comfort to the wearer.

The Lens-Locked Screw does not cost any more, but it makes a pair of eyeglasses worth many times what it used to be.

We shall be glad to explain to all who are interested the principle of the Lens-Locked Screw.

If you want the best optical work, bring your oculists' prescriptions to us.

We are not only most careful in grinding the lenses, but we also use especial care in the mountings.

An eyeglass which is not correctly and firmly mounted is more of an injury than a benefit.

Do not trifle with your precious eyesight, but make sure, at any cost, that the treatment is correct.

We offer some special opportunities to purchase optical goods at unusual prices, which we

MUSIC HEARD YESTERDAY.

"Tannhauser" at the Opera Matinee and "Faust" in the Evening.

"Tannhäuser" was performed at the Metropolitan Opera House yesterday afternoon, and in the evening Gounod's "Faust" was given. At both performances the house was crowded, and it seems that by announcing exclusive single appearances of prima donnas Mr. Grau has found a plan by which the Saturday evening performances at popular prices may be made profitable. The star of the evening was Mme. Eames, but for the moment she must give place to her of the afternoon, Mme. Milka Ternina, who made her first appearance at the Metropolitan Opera House as Elizabeth. This lady has been most unfortunate in her experiences here. She made her début in New York at the Academy of Music on March 4, 1896, as Elsa, being then a member of Mr. Walter Damrosch's company. She was heard that season also as Elizabeth and Brünnhilde in "Siegfried."

She made a most favorable impression and was warmly praised in THE NEW YORK TIMES and other papers for her lovely singing. Last season she was engaged as a member of Mr. Ellis's company, but she was taken sick and was unable to appear. She returned to Europe without having made an appearance. The interval since she sang under Mr. Damrosch's management is so long and her appearances then were so few that when she was announced for this season she was probably thought by many to be wholly a newcomer. On arriving here she was again seized with a throat affliction, and it was not till yesterday that she was able to appear under Mr. Grau's direction.

It is a great pleasure to record the fact that her voice yesterday showed no deterioration by reason of her sufferings, and that she achieved an immediate, emphatic, and thoroughly deserved success with the audience. Her voice is one of the most beautiful now before the public—round, sweet, and sympathetic in quality and of sufficient carrying power. She uses it with admirable method. The tones are well placed, are produced with almost perfect attack, and employed with the discretion of a true vocal artist. Her phrasing is exquisite, her diction perfect, and her declamation full of intelligence. She sings with deep feeling, and wins the affection as well as the respect of an audience. Her reading of the scene with Tannhäuser in the second act was most eloquent, and her delivery of the prayer was touching. On the whole, her impersonation was one of the finest that could be conceived.

The other members of the cast were Messrs. Van Dyck as Tannhäuser, Bertram as Wolfram, Plançon as the Landgrave, Mühlmann as Biterolf, and Bars as Walter, and Mme. Nordica as Venus. Mr. Bertram's Wolfram was a most successful piece of work. He was particularly happy in his treatment of the opening passage of the contest of song. The other singers repeated their commendable work, and there is always room for an expression of admiration of Mr. Van Dyk's intelligent Tannhäuser and Mme. Nordica's splendid Venus.

Mme. Eames was in good voice last night, and her Marguerite aroused the enthusiasm of the audience. There is nothing to be said of it that has not been said before, while all the familiar praise might be repeated were that necessary. The other singers were Mme. Mantelli as Siebel, Mr. Dippel as Faust, Mr. Pringle as Mephistopheles, and Mr. Ocellier as Valentine. It may be said of Mr. Dippel that he achieved at least one feat, which may go on record. He sang the high C in "Salut demeure." Only Signor Campanini and the delectable Signor Ceppi have previously done this in the Grau seasons in the Metropolitan. Mr. Pringle and Mr. Ocellier were conventional in their parts.

MOLINEUX JUROR BETTER.

Prof. Scheele Takes What He Declares Is Cyanide of Mercury in a Glass of Bromo Seltzer.

The physician who is attending Manheim Brown, the sick Molineux juror, said last night that his patient was improving, and would, he thought, be able to enter the jury box again to-morrow morning.

Prof. Walter T. Scheele, who has appeared as an expert witness in many poisoning cases, in the course of a demonstration of the toxic properties of cyanide of mercury, before three witnesses Friday evening swallowed what he asserted was an even larger dose of the deadly salt than that which killed Mrs. Adams. He mixed it with bromo seltzer precisely as the famous poison package was mixed and declared he made the test to prove a German theory that any cyanide in the presence of even the smallest possible quantity of carbonic acid gas is immediately decomposed, thus allowing the hydrocyanic acid gas to escape and rendering the compound comparatively harmless.

Prof. Scheele declared he made the experiment without the knowledge of any person connected with the Molineux case. Before he took the draught he killed a guinea pig with a small quantity of plain cyanide of mercury, and as he compounded the mixture and stirred it into water he said he would give it to another to show that it was innocuous. It was more than a surprise to those present when he took it himself. Prof. Scheele said there were about three grains of cyanide of mercury in the glassful he swallowed, while a half grain had been considered enough to kill an adult.

He experienced a slight feeling of suffocation and a numbness in the limbs for an hour or so afterward, but three hours after he had taken the mixture he started for his home at Woodbridge, N. J., and telephoned back that he was entirely well again. Prof. R. A. Witthaus, expert for the prosecution in the Molineux trial, had only this to say when the matter was brought to his attention:

"I do not consider any statement made by Mr. Scheele as worthy of any consideration whatever. My opinion is based on the gross inaccuracy of his statements made under oath in the Fleming case."

In answer to a question as to whether bromo seltzer would have any tendency to counteract the poison, Prof. Witthaus said, "On the contrary, it makes its effect more rapid and deadly."

Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton, who is eminent as a toxicologist, said he was prevented from discussing the experiment as he has been retained as an expert for Molineux, but he smiled as he said 'I very much doubt whether any such quantity of the poison was taken."

George Gordon Battle, counsel for Molineux, said: "All the experts have testified that Mrs. Adams died from cyanic poisoning."

Dr. Ernest J. Lederle, chief chemist of the Board of Health, said: "Under the circumstances as published I do not believe a test like that could have been made without serious results." Dr. Lederle said that if plenty of time had elapsed between the mixing and swallowing of the composition it was possible the test could have been made, but not if, as the spectators assert, he took it while it was effervescing and giving off its deadly gas.

Dr. Scheele was criticised in the murder trial to which Prof. Witthaus referred by the wide divergence in many important respects between his testimony and that of other experts. He appeared for the prosecution.

WOODBRIDGE, N. J., Jan. 27.—Dr. Walter T. Scheele appeared to be all right today, and his wife said he had gone to the city. Mrs. Scheele would not go into details as to whether her husband had experienced any bad effect during the night.

Trenton Man Kills Himself.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 27.—William L. Marshall, manager of the Floral Company, committed suicide to-day by taking carbolic acid. Marshall's affairs with the company are straight, and no cause for the suicide is known. After taking the acid, Mr. Marshall called his wife, and, telling her what he had done, asked her to send for a doctor. He died before the physician arrived.

STOCKHOLDERS PROTEST.

Say the Baltimore and Ohio Is Wrong in Its Pittsburg and Western Foreclosure Suit.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 27.—In the United States Circuit Court to-day in the case of the Mercantile Trust Company against the Pittsburg and Western Railway Company, A. Foster Higgins, John Harsen Rhoades, and Charles W. Baker filed a petition asking to be made defendants.

The petition alleges that the Pittsburg Company was created for the purpose of carrying into effect a scheme to reorganize the defendant company. It is alleged that an increase of $1,500,000 in the capital stock of the company was never subscribed for or paid for in cash or labor. Therefore the capital stock of the company is $12,000,000 and there has been no increase in accordance with the law.

It is charged that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company since January, 1891, has been a holder of a small majority of capital stock, and has therefore been able to control the policy of the defendant company. Also that the Baltimore and Ohio proposes and intends to force a swift sale of the property of the defendant company so as to destroy the value of the stock held by petitioners and to vest a new title to the property of the defendant company in the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company; that the decree of sale was not based upon any report or evidence, but on admissions contained in the answer of the defendant company, and that the foreclosure suit has been absolutely undefended; that there are divers valid defenses against a very material portion of the claims of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. The petitioners allege that the sum of $29,416, being interest on unpaid coupons, is illegally required to be paid by the defendant company.

The petitioners also say that after the alleged increase of the capital stock of $13,500,000 there never was thereafter any meeting of the holders of such increased capital to vote upon the increase of the bonded debt of the defendant company, and that not a dollar of money was realized by the treasury of the defendant company by the fictitious increase of its capital stock.

It is further charged that the second mortgage bonds numbered 2,001 to 3,500 inclusive are illegal and void and that the $520,000 of bonds in the hands of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company are absolutely void.

The Court is asked to decree that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company is liable for the common stock it holds in the defendant company to the amount of $1,027,500, and interest thereon since 1892, and that such sum constitutes a just set-off against the Baltimore and Ohio, to be credited upon the bonds held by the company. Next Saturday has been fixed for a hearing in the case.

SEABOARD CASE UP AGAIN.

Judge in Georgia Refuses an Injunction to Prevent Consolidation.

MACON, Ga., Jan. 27.—In the case of Dady against the Georgia and Alabama Railroad, Judge Speer to-day refused the injunction sought to prevent the consolidation of the Seaboard Air Line system.

The Judge referred to the fact that causes substantially similar were pending in the Federal jurisdictions of Virginia and North Carolina, holding that the court which first took cognizance of the case should carry it to its termination. Holding that the plaintiffs were privy with Thomas F. Ryan in his suits in the jurisdictions referred to, he held that those tribunals were the proper ones for him to resort to, the same issues being involved. He further held that only a majority vote of stockholders was necessary for such consolidation in Georgia, and that it was not properly maintainable that because the defendant, John Skelton Williams, occupied the position of a member of the voting trust, President of the Georgia and Alabama and of the Florida Central and Peninsular, that merger or consolidation brought about through his instrumentality should be enjoined.

Morris Branden of counsel for the plaintiffs, says:

"The only way in which the consolidation can be carried out is by the method pointed out in the bill, and should the different companies attempt to merge a final hearing will be had on the present bill, and the plaintiffs will then take an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals."

Promotion on New Haven Road.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 27.—President John M. Hall of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad to-day announced that F. A. Farnam, who for some time has been acting as assistant to William E. Barnett at Boston, would be appointed attorney of the road, to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Barnett's promotion to the Vice Presidency.

99-Year Railway Lease in the West.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—A railroad lease which is to run for ninety-nine years, and which carries with it a rental of over $100,000 per month, has been filed with County Recorder Simon. By the terms of the instrument the St. Louis, Peoria and Northern Railway Company leases to the Chicago Terminal Transfer Company for the common use the tracks on its main line. The lessor has a line from St. Louis to Peoria, and is about to construct a line to Chicago, with a terminal in Cicero, and then by the main tracks run into the Grand Central Station.

New York Road Elects Directors.

KINGSTON, Jan. 27.—The stockholders of the Kingston and Rondout Valley Railroad, at a meeting held in this city to-day, elected the following Directors: A. E. Godefroy, I. W. Lillie, H. F. Serle, A. L. Parmalee, A. G. Norrie, A. Ahern, W. V. Kings, and W. W. Bramie, all residents of New York City.

MONUMENT TABLET STOLEN.

Erected at Summit, N. J., in 1896 by Revolutionary Sons.

SUMMIT, N. J., Jan. 27.—Some miscreants have stolen the bronze tablet from the monument erected in October, 1896, by the New Jersey Society of the Sons of the American Revolution to mark the spot where, during the War of the Revolution, was located the beacon and the cannon known as "The Old Sow," used to summon the minute men of the vicinity to the defense of the country.

The monument is a large boulder about six feet high and weighing four tons, upon the face of which was the bronze tablet.

SAY RICHMOND IS DEAD.

Friends Deny Rumor That Canajoharie Banker Still Lives.

CANAJOHARIE, Jan. 27.—Those who knew G. Richmond say the report sent out from Fort Plain that the late President of the Canajoharie National Bank, who died at his mother's home in New Woodstock, Madison County, Nov. 13, had not died, but is

GIVING TO THE CHURCHES

The Rev. Mr. Johnson Suggests Four Per Cent. of Income.

OTHER CLERGYMEN DIFFER

Dr. Greer and Dr. Parkhurst Oppose Any Exact Rule—Father Colton Talks of Various Methods.

The view expressed by the wardens and vestrymen of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Redeemer in a recent appeal to the members of the congregation for more liberal donations, that "in general a church is entitled to at least 4 per cent. of every man's expenditure," was criticised as unwise by prominent clergymen to whose attention the appeal was directed yesterday. They also declared that any such proposition was impracticable.

In this they differ diametrically from the Rev. W. Everett Johnson, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, who not only approves very heartily of the general proposition laid down, but thinks that the vestrymen and wardens did not go far enough.

The Rev. Mr. Johnson explained that the appeal of the wardens and vestrymen was not made because the church is in any financial difficulty, but simply because it was considered that the scope of the church's work ought to be extended.

"They estimated this percentage of a comfortable and assured income," he continued, "on the basis that 10 per cent. of a man's expenditures belongs to charity and religious work, and that of this money at least 4 per cent. should be given as a regular contribution to the church of which he is a member, without reference to contributions for special purposes.

"I would go further. I would make this percentage on a man's income, instead of his expenditures, for many men have a large balance of income over their expenditures. Contributions on this plan would enable us to do three times as much work. I ought to have two or three assistants, instead of one. If the work of the churches is to be made more effective, the wherewithal to do it must be forthcoming. I don't believe the Episcopal Church in this city gets 1 per cent. of the expenditures of its flock.

"I consider that for a vestry to take the position this one has is very significant of a progressive spirit in church work, and is full of hopeful possibilities."

The Rev. Dr. David H. Greer, rector of St. Bartholomew's Church, expressed a contrary opinion with much emphasis.

"I don't believe," he said, "we could determine by arithmetic what a man should do in church or any other kind of work. If people believe in a thing or a cause, they will give to it. If they don't, they will not, and should not.

"There is no difficulty in getting money when you can persuade people that the work for which you ask their contributions is good work But to undertake to fix or prescribe a certain percentage of a man's income does not meet the requirements of the case. Sometimes he can give more and sometimes he can give less, and of that he must be the best judge. I should regard it as an interference with my personal liberty if any person, priest or layman, were to undertake to dictate to me any amount I ought to give and I should think that nine men out of ten, perhaps ten men out of ten, feel that way about it. The probability is, therefore, that any attempt of that sort would break down under the weight of its own impracticability."

Speaking of the work being done by the churches, Dr. Greer remarked that the assertions made by certain clergymen and evangelists as to the large proportion of the population of the city not reached by the churches and out of sympathy with them were "wild and unwarrantable."

"As far as my observation and experience go," said he, "more people go to church to-day than ever, and the masses are being reached as they never were before. Besides, it doesn't necessarily follow because a man doesn't go to church, that he is not religious. The value of church work depends upon the value of what he gets when he goes to church. The work of the world is never done, and, as in a man's business, there is always more than a church might do. Churchgoing is not an end of itself. So many persons talk as if it were.

"It is only a means to an end, which end is the development of the moral and spiritual life, and whatever contributes to that is a co-operative agency of the church. I look upon churchgoing as a privilege rather than a duty, a privilege which, I think, is more generally appreciated than ever.

"My impression is that people are very deeply interested to-day in the things for which religion stands and that they do respond, and always will respond, to any helpful effort which the church makes to minister to their religious nature."

The Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, pastor of the Madison Square Presbyterian Church, remarked:

"If a man is in this world and has any desire to see the world become a better one, it is his business to take hold and help make it better; and to the extent that money is required it's his business to give his own fair share of the money, and not act as a drag upon the chariot that he ought to be one of the steeds to help draw. Undoubtedly a man is safer if he fixes upon a certain percentage of his means, but he must do the fixing, not the rector or pastor or vestry.

"I know a man who is receiving a large income from his business who has undertaken to give 10 per cent. of his receipts to the Lord. Some of the 10 per cent. goes to the church of which he is a member and I am the pastor, and it's a very good thing to have the percentage idea in one's mind, for it helps to hold a man up to the mark of generous giving. Undoubtedly men who have no system of giving either a percentage of their expenses or income fail to realize how mighty little they do give.

"A great many men who call themselves Christians will lay out as much as possible on houses, horses, and entertainments, and just as little as they can afford on charitable enterprises, missionary efforts, and a church pew. In all departments of life, religious, humanitarian, and otherwise, there is a very considerable element even of our better class of people who make it their constant study to discover how much of the intellectual, material, and moral benefits of living they can get out of the world without returning a quid pro quo. I have for some time been trying to discover a passage of Scripture that I can use as a suitable text for a sermon on sponging. I have not yet found one that quite hits it. The variety of applications that could be made of such a sermon, however, is so great that only a discourse of extraordinary length would probably be found sufficient to traverse all the ground it would be necessary to cover.

"There are hosts of people not church members and who have no pews or sittings who go to church occasionally. These are what we call 'church rounders.' They are worth nothing to the Church, and the Church is practically worth nothing to them. They go on occasion, just as they would go to witness the performance of a prestidigitator or go to a circus. They are sensation-led people. Yet these same people would be ashamed, and all their friends would be ashamed of them, if they undertook in the same way to deadhead themselves into an opera, prizefight, or circus.

"Now as to this talk of the large percentage of people who are unchurched and the horrified astonishment this talk evokes. There are certainly a great many people who never go inside a church, and who, nevertheless, would resent the idea that they are out of sympathy with all that the Church stands for, and probably 90 per cent. of them would be angered at the idea of not receiving a burial with religious services. It is one of those things that can't be settled by counting noses. The number of people who regularly go to church must not be taken as a fair index of the religion or amount of Christianity there is in the world."

The Rev. Father Charles H. Colton, pastor of St. Stephen's Roman Catholic Church, said that no rule could well be established for Church support among Catholic congregations in large cities because of the number and varied condition of the people, but in small country and manufacturing districts, where people are more of the same class, a uniform rate of support is often obtained.

"For example," continued Father Colton, "in these districts, in addition to the ordinary basket or open collection, heads of families, and in fact all adults, are asked to contribute from their earnings one day's pay each month. In this and similar ways have been built the magnificent Catholic churches seen all through the country in the manufacturing districts. In cities, however, such a rule would be impracticable for the reasons I mentioned. The practice is to leave every man to do what he believes conscientiously to be his duty, whether he be rich or poor. While some disappoint the Church, the greater number give sufficient to enable it to carry on its work. The greatest help received is from an occasional bequest made by some good souls who have no immediate relations. Of all things the most difficult to speak about is the money question, and those who have the most money are the most sensitive as to any suggestion, much less dictation, of the use they ought to make of it, even for religious purposes."

The Roman Catholic Church, Father Colton declared, is steadily gaining in influence among the people in all walks of life. This, he said, was not the result of any propaganda carried on by the priests, who do not believe in seeking to turn a man from his convictions, whatever they may be, but of the piety, zeal, and intelligence of Roman Catholics in general. There are 500,000 Roman Catholics in New York, he said, and the average aggregate attendance on Sundays at the one hundred churches in the city is 300,000. Fully 30,000 converts are made every year in the United States, a large proportion of whom are gained through the marriage of Roman Catholics with persons of other religious denominations. From this and other causes 1,500 to 2,000 converts are made yearly in the diocese of New York alone.

NATIONAL GOLF CONTESTS.

Efforts to Bring Some of the Events to This District — Metropolitan Association Ticket.

In marked contrast to the reluctance among golf clubs last year to apply for the National championship tournaments is the unusual energy displayed this season to bring those big events here. Inter-club rivalry, therefore, is likely to play an important and exciting part in the deliberations at the annual meeting of the United States Golf Association, Feb. 28, at Delmonico's, Fifth Avenue and Forty-fourth Street.

Secretary Robert B. Kerr announced yesterday the clubs that have applied for one or more of the three championships. For the amateur, the blue ribbon event of the series, the applicants are the Garden City and the Lakewood Golf Clubs. Four have asked for the women's event. They are the Garden City, the Lakewood, the Baltusrol, and the Shinnecock Hills Clubs. Seven rivals are in the field for the open championships, generally considered the professional competition. They are Garden City, Lakewood, St. Andrew's, Myopia Hunt, Chicago, Onwentsia, and Midlothian, the latter three of Chicago.

This is a good showing, when it is remembered that last year only one formal application was received—that of the Baltimore Country Club—for the open tournament. The selection of all courses was then left to the Executive Committee. The same policy may be repeated this year, but there is a strong impression that the delegates will cast the deciding vote themselves. They have a month before the meeting to think over the question and determine what clubs will receive their support. According to the constitution, only the associate clubs can vote. These are the one-hundred-dollar clubs in the association, and they only are eligible for the plums and the vote. There are about twenty-five of them, while of the allied clubs there are more than 120. The latter can talk, but not vote.

The list of applications shows that Garden City and Lakewood are "in it" for what they can get. The idea evidently is that they want something and will be ready to take whatever the delegates award them. Garden City has been spoken of most prominently as the club for the amateur event, but if it is selected, the event will probably be played in the Fall. Many golfers think that the time chosen last year was too early, and as the Garden City Hotel will not be ready for occupancy until late in the season it would be impossible to hold a big event there without ample accommodations.

In this latter respect Lakewood is admirably fitted. The close of the season there early in the Spring precludes the big event at that time of the year, and the first week in November would be the earliest that the contest could be held. That would be rather late for the amateur fraternity. As three months must intervene between the amateur and open tournaments, the latter could very well go to Lakewood early in the season. "It looks to me," said a golfer yesterday, "as though Garden City and Lakewood were in it to help each other out, and I would not be surprised to see each club get one of the events."

Shinnecock and Baltusrol are likely to fight it out for the women's tournament. Each has plenty of friends, but if it comes to a tussle Shinnecock stands the better chance. Three Chicago clubs have applied for the open event but the sentiment in the East is that the West has had its share for the time being, and it seems probable that nothing will be given to that locality this year. In the meantime the qualifications of the applicants will be the basis of many earnest discussions in golf circles, and the delegates ought to go to the annual meeting with minds fully made up as to what they will do.

Secretary John Du Fais of the Metropolitan Golf Association announced yesterday the ticket presented by the Nominating Committee for officers to be elected at the annual meeting of the association, to be held next Thursday night at the Metropolitan Club. They are: President—Robert H. Robertson, Shinnecock Hills Golf Club; Vice President—Walter Breese Smith, Tuxedo Golf Club; Secretary—John Du Fais, Baltusrol Golf Club; Treasurer—William Fellowes Morgan, Morris County Golf Club; Executive Committee—Oliver W. Bird, Jr., Meadow Brook Hunt Club; Percy Chubb, Garden City Golf Club; Robert Bage Kerr, Lakewood Golf Club; Arden M. Robbins, St. Andrew's Golf Club; Charles F. Watson, Essex County Country Club.

The principal change is the retirement from the Presidency of Henry B. Hollins. A more important question to be determined at the meeting will be the date of the Metropolitan Championship, and the links where that event will be held. Owing to the burning of the Garden City Hotel last Fall, the event may be held in May at another club.

SMITH A WINNER AT GOLF.

Beats Rawlins at Tampa in Record Game Over the Course.

Special to The New York Times.

TAMPA, Fla., Jan. 27.—Willie Smith, the open champion for the United States, played phenomenal golf here to-day in the finals of the three days' tournament, thereby winning the purse of $100. He not only beat Harry Rawlins by six up and four to play, but lowered the record established by Rawlins yesterday by three points, making it 72. Rawlins played a fine game, but the pace commenced to tell on him toward the end of the second round, while Smith still played in beautiful form.

They started off this morning with long drives, halving the first hole in four. On the second Smith drove his ball twelve feet from the hole, Rawlins putted his to the left. Smith won in three to four. Indifferent putting by Smith gave Rawlins the third in four to five, making the game square. Both played the fourth hole in regulation five. On the fifth they cleared all hazards and halved the hole. The sixth was halved in par four. By superior mashie play Rawlins won out the seventh in three to four. On the eighth Smith overdrove Rawlins twenty yards, but by fine short play the latter was able to make a half and the outward hole went to Rawlins with five to six, making him two up. Turning for home, Rawlins holed a wonderful four to Smith's five. At eleven Rawlins pulled off a half by holing a fifteen-foot put. The twelfth or long fell to Smith by skillful mashie work. On the thirteenth he was unlucky in getting a bad lie from his drive, but recovered and after playing two more, actually won. The fourteenth proved a good half in five, as did the fifteenth in four. Smith evened up the game on the sixteenth by holing a put from the edge of the green, but on the seventeenth drove out of bonds to the right and had to return to tee for another play. Rawlins won this, which made him doormie. With the aid of a 200-yard carry, Smith won the last hole, and they were then all even.

After the second round started it was early seen that a record game was in store for the spectators. In the last nine Smith did the first five holes in 16 and Rawlins 18. Phenomenal playing of this kind has never been seen in this part of the country. The men kept up this gait for the remaining four holes, when the totals read: Smith, 35; Rawlings, 37. Their medal scores were: Smith, 78-72; Rawlins, 78-75.

In the second division Tom Dunn won the consolation prize of $25 by defeating W. E. Burlock, Jr., fourteen up. Lancelot Servos made the longest drive in the contest that followed the match, thus winning a purse of $10. His ball carried 230 yards. Smith and Low were both over the 200-yard mark, as was Rawlins.

NATIONAL LEAGUE OUTLOOK.

Baltimore, Washington, Louisville, and Cleveland May Leave the Circuit.

The past week has shown some development in the baseball affairs of the National League and American Association of Baseball Clubs. The committee appointed at the meeting last December to reduce the circuit after a long delay got to work in Cleveland. Those who attended the meeting refused to give out any information, but there is every reason to believe that the circuit will not include Baltimore, Washington, Cleveland, or Louisville when the committee makes its report to the League next month.

The Washington, Cleveland, and Louisville Clubs have decided to relinquish their places in the circuit. This much was learned from a club owner who attended the conference.

The trouble with the Baltimore Club seems to centre in the fact that McGraw and Robinson have signified their intention to drop out of the League. A rival club, controlled by McGraw and Robinson, has a franchise in the American Association now being organized, and has secured a lease of the grounds used by the Baltimore Club. From this it looks as though the present Baltimore Club would be left without grounds, and if it is true that the majority of Baltimore players will jump their contracts and play in the new association under McGraw, it will leave the Baltimore Club without a team, which is considered by many to indicate that an eight-club circuit will be arranged. The Baltimore Club would then have nothing to sell to the League in giving up its franchise. Manager Hanlon of Brooklyn, formerly of Baltimore, last year valued the releases of McGraw and Robinson at about $25,000, and if he was forced to sell them they would certainly bring at least $20,000.

It is reasonably sure that all players who cast in their lot with the new association will be blacklisted by the National League and all other leagues under the National agreement.

President Johnson of the Western League and President P. T. Powers of the Eastern League attended the meeting in Cleveland. The Western League will secure franchises in Cleveland and Louisville. The Eastern League wants to control the franchises in Baltimore and Washington, if satisfactory arrangements can be made.

GOSSIP OF THE CYCLISTS.

The annual bicycle show that came to a close at Madison Square Garden last night was a veritable panorama of wheels. It was one of the best exhibits ever held, and in point of attendance the managers claim it was far more successful than any of the previous shows. This is taken as an indication that cycling will be more popular than ever this season. The show developed the fact that there are many new features in the 1900 model of wheels. There was an absence of fads and freaks just added to the machine to attract attention, and which are never of any service in a practical way.

The show demonstrated that there is a general improvement in the construction of tires, particularly in relation to their valves, which have always been a source of worriment to a rider. There is a variety in the way of cranks, some wheels being constructed with the solid rectangular crank and some with the square crank with a groove cut out on the under side. There are many improvements in the spoke fastenings. One of the most notable improvements in this line is on a wheel in which the hub flange on the sprocket side of the rear hub is made so that the spokes slip into a buttonhole slot and pull taut, and the spokes can be removed without detaching the sprocket.

As was expected, the coaster brake proved to be one of the greatest novelties at the show. There were nine varieties of this new device to be seen at the various booths. Some riders have objections to a brake in the rear hub or to any that affects the rear hub. One maker had on exhibition one of the "free wheel" devices, as they are called in England. It permits the wheel to be set free so as to revolve while the sprocket and cranks are stationary, there being no brake appliance on the rear wheel. This particular wheel, however, is not without a brake. There is one attached to the front wheel. It is of the plunger pattern, but instead of there being an ordinary spoon piece on the end of the plunger, the rod branches like an inverted Y, and to each arm is attached, so that it revolves, a hemisphere of rubber-covered wood. When the brake is set against the tire the rubber-covered wood acts as rollers, so that there is no wear of the tire.

The chainless type of wheels came in for a great share of attention. The most notable improvement in the chainless is the decrease in weight over last season.

One of the most striking facts impressed upon the critical investigator at the show was the improvement that has been made in the lower-priced wheels. While the chainless and the highest-grade chain wheels have been benefited by the general refinement of methods, the medium grades have not been neglected, but have come forward in a style that has brought them to where the high-grade wheel was a year ago. Indeed, some of the so-called cheap wheels are equipped with the up-to-date parts found in the high-grade wheels. It is safe to say that a good serviceable wheel can be bought for $35.

Every cyclist was interested in the exhibition of saddles. As in previous years there was a large variety of saddles, all of them designed for comfort. One type for women is made of natural leather, with an extended and curved pommel, but without the flap of leather usually attached to the pommel. For heavy riders there is what is known as the modified cavalry saddle. It is large, with raised pads of wood felt, and is fitted with coil springs under the rear. A majority of the saddles shown have the high back, which not only supports the body, but will, with the pommel, which gradually slopes upward, prevent the rider from slipping either backward or forward.

The Board of Officers of the New York Division of the League of American Wheelmen has instructed the delegates to the National Assembly, to be held at Philadelphia, Feb. 14 and 15, to exert their efforts to secure the publication of an official organ to be devoted exclusively to the issuing of official announcements and communications; to the latest information respecting good roads, touring, cycle improvements, and cycle path construction; and to the passage and amendment of laws relating to cycling and other matters of interest to cyclists, and tending to increase the membership and influence of the League as a cycling organization.

In addition to the space necessarily required for official matters and the good roads department of the work, the aforesaid organ should devote a large amount of space to advancing the touring interests of the members by publishing in every issue maps and itineraries, according to the belief of the Board of Officers.

AMONG THE OARSMEN.

The decision of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen to hold the National regatta of 1900 in the Harlem River has put new life into the rowing clubs in and about this city, and there is every prospect of the season opening very early if the weather permits. Several of the Harlem River organizations have kept crews in training all Winter, and owing to the many mild days they have done almost as much training on the water as they have on the rowing machines in the gymnasiums.

The famous Nassau four, which carried everything before it last season, is in excellent condition, and will be boated as soon as the weather will permit. Capt. Brown of the Atalanta Boat Club already has a long list of candidates for a junior eight-oared crew, and he expects to have them at work

EFFECT OF VASSAR ATHLETICS.

Indorsement of Physical Training by President Taylor.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Jan. 27.—The young women at Vassar are highly pleased with an address made several days ago by President Taylor before the students of the Halstead School in Yonkers. They regard it as a distinct indorsement of the athletic side of student life at Vassar, to which much attention has been paid of late, and which has transformed the general appearance of the students. In the course of the speech at Yonkers President Taylor said:

"You may ask if the colleges for women are sustaining themselves. I will say that the best women's colleges ask no favors from the best of colleges for men to-day for intellectual standards. We are keeping up the high ideals of scholarship; and when it comes to the physical standard, that is equally good. In recent years we have kept pace with the colleges for men in physical training. If you desire to see healthy, strong, and vigorous women, you should see the 650 young women at Vassar.

"Sane, healthy, frank, and wholesome young women, free from morbidness, are the kind to be found at our college. That is the tone they maintain because that is the ideal they are seeking. The question is often asked, 'Can they stand the strain of such an education?' Nearly all of them go out of college stronger and healthier than when they enter. Forty years ago, when Vassar was founded, it was called 'Vassar's folly,' but we are now living under a vastly changed condition of things. The movement is growing apace, and it is the movement of our time."

COLUMBIA WINS AT HOCKEY.

Defeats Brown University by 7 to 2 in the Intercollegiate Tourney.

Another game in the intercollegiate hockey tournament was played last night between teams representing Columbia and Brown Universities at the St. Nicholas Skating Rink. It was won rather easily by the former, the score at the finish being 7 goals to 2. Toward the end of the second half the Brown players objected to Mortimer, one of the umpires, claiming that he was unfair in his decisions. They refused to continue unless he left the game, which he did.

Henderson made the first two goals for Columbia in the first half shortly after the opening of the game. Wolf and Eyer also made goals for Columbia in this half. Pevear and Bates scored for Brown, making the score at the end of the half 4 to 2 in Columbia's favor. In the second half Henderson succeeded in making two more goals, and Wolf made another, bringing the total up to seven. The following is the line-up:

SEVENTH REGIMENT SHOOTING.

Contests in the Non-Expert and Prone Classes.

The ranges at the Seventh Regiment Armory last night were occupied with the riflemen contesting for the five prizes annually awarded in the non-expert and prone-class matches. The scores in each match were made in seven shots standing at 200 yards and seven shots prone at 500 yards. Those who have never made 68 in any competition are admitted in the non-expert match. The prone-class match is so named because the prone scores are shot first and also serve as the basis in deciding ties. The entries last night numbered more than 100 in each match. The scores of the prize winners follow:

Ten Clubs in the League.

President Soden Says It May Be Cut Down to Eight.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 27.—President Soden of the Boston Club returned to Boston from Cleveland yesterday afternoon, and was this morning found at his office. When asked what he thought the probabilities were regarding the coming season, he said:

"It looks to me like ten clubs, but we may be able to get it down to eight. It is practically certain that Cleveland and Louisville will drop out, but I don't know any more about Washington and Baltimore than any one else does.

"Yes, we must pay something to Cleveland and Louisville, and they can make all they are able to out of the sale of their players. I am not at liberty to state what the amounts involved are."

Mr. Soden said that he knew nothing except what he read in the newspapers about the stories from Baltimore saying that McGraw and Robinson, the whole Baltimore team, and Clarke of Boston are going over to the association. The Boston Club, he said, was not doing any worrying about Catcher Clarke.

Mr. Richter withholds the man's name, but says that he now has two sites for ball parks in that city.

J., was turned over to the association, and it was decided to begin on this site a $20,000 home before long. John M. Carter, Jr., of the Journalists' Club, Baltimore, is President of the association.

After Mr. Green's death Col. Rivers of New Orleans secured the house and gave it the name of Hotel Rivers.

Mr. Putney said last night that henceforth the hotel will be known again as the Rossmore. Col. Rivers will return to New Orleans.

SLOT GAS METER DEALT DEATH.

Mrs. Alice Kelly, twenty-four years old and the wife of John Kelly, a mechanic of 464 Court Street, Brooklyn, was found dead in the parlor of her home at 6 o'clock last night by her husband when he returned from work. She had been suffocated by escaping gas.

They were married in October of last year and moved into the Court Street house on Nov. 1. The ground floor consisted of a vacant store, which was rented last Friday by John Gee, a fish dealer. The Kellys had not burned gas but Gee yesterday morning had a slot meter put into the cellar.

When he dropped in a quarter late yesterday afternoon he was unable to get any light. He was talking about the machine and its uselessness when Kelly came home and found his wife had been suffocated while taking a nap in her parlor. Investigation showed that the end of a gaspipe which protruded

GRUBER ATTACKS QUIGG

Rally of His Friends in District Leadership Fight.

CONDEMNS MAZET INQUIRY

Mr. Gruber Says It Cost 20,000 Votes Daily—Quigg Accused of Knifing Adler.

The friends of Abraham Gruber, the Republican leader of the Twenty-first Assembly District, met in the assembly hall at the southwest corner of One Hundred and Sixth Street and Broadway last night, to express their preference for him in the fight which George C. Austin is making against him with the district leadership as a prize.

It was supposed at the time of the last Republican County Committee meeting that Gruber and Austin had patched up their differences, especially as Austin then supported a measure Gruber was urging, but this report, it is declared, was simply a huge political joke. The fight which is precipitated by Gruber's fight with President Lemuel E. Quigg of the County Committee is raging bitterly, and will culminate at the coming March primaries.

H. M. France presided at the meeting last night, and the speakers, chief of whom was Mr. Gruber, denounced Quigg in unmeasured terms. Mr. Gruber impugned the wisdom of the Mazet investigation, and reiterated his views of Quigg's unfitness for his place. William S. Bennett, the first speaker, declared that Austin had told him that Quigg had come to him (Austin) right in the heat of the last Aldermanic campaign, in search of a new leader for the district. Mr. Bennett instanced this, he said, to prove Quigg's disregard of party interests.

"Mr. Gruber gets nothing out of politics," said he. "His expenses for the district run into the four figures yearly. They want to replace him with a man who gets from $5,000 to $15,000 yearly out of politics, and therefore has to do the bidding of those above him. The Austin movement is the deadest thing in history since Lazarus."

E. F. Phillips, the next speaker, said that since "the peg on which Quigg hangs his hat got too small for him," he told Republicans who came to him for favors to wait. "I understand Mr. Austin is an office holder," said he, addressing Mr. Gruber.

"Yes," said Mr. Gruber. "He is counsel for the Manhattan State Hospital—an office specially created by statute."

"Well," said Mr. Phillips, "I'm sorry for the Manhattan State Hospital. I don't want to use any qualifications about Mr. Austin's ability, only I wish some one would get a good fat place for me." [Laughter.]

SAYS QUIGG HURTS PARTY.

"I'm glad," he continued, "we have a few men in this district independent enough to stand up and say, 'Damn Mr. Quigg,' or 'Damn anybody else who wants to use the party in his own interest.' I think the party would be 5,000 votes better off if Quigg were never in it. Show me a Republican for whom he ever did a favor! The intelligent element can't swallow him.

Mr. Gruber was then introduced and heartily applauded. He read the speech which he delivered at the County Committee meeting last September opposing Quigg's re-election. "Immediately upon my making that speech," said he, "Mr. Quigg began to suggest that it was time to relieve Mr. Gruber of the Twenty-first District leadership. He sent for the men in that district who held office and told them he was going to take the management of the campaign funds there away from me, notwithstanding the fact that after I had made that speech the district delegation had unanimously elected me leader."

Mr. Gruber then went on to sketch the political history of the district since he took hold, twelve years ago, and spoke of his having recommended men for office (including Mr. Austin on four occasions) who were not his personal friends. The Democrats had only carried the district in one year, said he, in 1897, when the Republican Party was divided, and even then Mr. Olcott, Republican candidate for District Attorney, had carried it.

"I've got a whole lot of scars I received fighting for the organization," said he. "What is the organization? Is it a man who gets cold, who overeats and gets dyspepsia, who gets tired and has to lie down, who gets the sniffles when he wets his feet and catches cold? Or does it consist of all the enrolled Republicans of the district? Mr. Austin and his friends, in opposing me at the March primaries, are strictly anti-organization."

GRUBER ON QUIGG.

"I say, without any personal feeling, that Lemuel Ely Quigg is politically unfit to be President of the Republican County Committee. [Applause.] It behooves every Republican who loves his party to do all he can, day in and day out, to drive Quigg out of the Chairmanship. Talk to Republicans wherever you meet them and you will find that 90 per cent. of them say his occupancy will lose 20,000 votes for the Republican Party in this county at the next election.

"Mr. Austin went about and said, 'Gruber's my friend (and then he cried inwardly.) Everybody loves him. But he ought to go. He's against McKinley and against Roosevelt.' Why, every Republican in the land wants the renomination of William McKinley. The primaries to choose men to nominate a candidate for Governor will not take place till next September, and if Lemuel E. Quigg is for Roosevelt, then it will be because he is compelled to change his mind in the meantime.

"Then Austin's friends say, 'Oh, Gruber can't get any more patronage for the boys, and those who follow him will continue to have long thirsts.'" Here Mr. Gruber took a drink of ice water and resumed:

"Well, all right. It is not the first time in politics men have stood up for principle. It's not the first time men have stood up and said, 'We do not care for offices, but we do care a great deal about political principles.' George C. Austin has gone to Federal officeholders in this district and said, 'If you, Mr. Officeholder, want to follow Mr. Gruber, why, I can't be responsible for what the Collector of the Port may do.' Those men have came to me and asked me what to do, and I have said, 'Go to Mr. Austin. I would rather you had your bread and butter than that you proclaimed my name from the housetops.' But some of those men are made of the stuff martyrs are made of. I have known men living in tenement houses, earning $2.50 a day, with wives and children to support, who have said in reply to Mr. Austin, 'You can have your office. I'll stand by my friend.' And their friend is willing to take his shirt off for them. [Applause.]

WARNS COLLECTOR BIDWELL.

"I should just like to see Collector George R. Bidwell—who is busily engaged in this fight and who got his office largely through my influence—touch the head of a single man in New York because he votes for the man he loves. We'd make things so hot around the Custom House that a cry for ice would go up to heaven.

"But I don't want those men to risk their heads for me. I am not anxious to be a leader, so that I can stick out my chest and walk all the way through this district and say, 'All this territory belongs to me.' That sort of thing doesn't appeal to me. Some people like to play chess, some like to play the piano, and I like to play the game of politics. But I like to play it fair, and in the best interests of the Republican Party. Here, only in this city, the centre of the wealth and learning of the country, we, as a party, lie prostrate on our backs, not able to command the confidence of the voters or the respect of the enrolled Republicans!"

Mr. Gruber then went on to pay his respects to the judgment of the party leaders which dictated the Mazet investigation. He spoke of his "respected friends, Frederick S. Gibbs, Lemuel E. Quigg, and the senior Senator from New York," going to Albany and returning to announce that they had won a moral victory in securing that investigation.

"There were men in the party like Cornelius Van Cott," said he, "who in the early fifties had forgotten more about politics than the President of the County Committee could learn in ten years by hard study and application. They weren't consulted. Nobody was consulted as to counsel for the committee. They chose Mr. Moss, I suppose, to give it some respectable clothes. Well, the Mazet committee went at everything without any advice as to what ought to be investigated, and finally they dug up Ramapo. Then every Republican said: 'Now, we've got the Democrats tight. We've connected them with water.' [Laughter.]

COST 20,000 VOTES A DAY.

"Well, you all know what the Ramapo investigation developed. The committee went on every day, and every day it sat 20,000 Republican votes went into the sewer.

"Then election came, and the Bryanite-Labor-Republican-Good Government-Citizens' Union-Glory Hallelujah combination polled less than 90,000 votes, and Quigg was beaten in his own district. Even old Republican districts went Democratic. Down in the Eighth, for instance, where Charles Adler and Charles Murray had been working for years to build up a Republican organization, Quigg went in and said: 'Your man, Adler, can't be retained because he voted against the Astoria Gas bill.'

"After election the only bright spot, the only place where a Republican could draw his breath and say, 'Thank God!' was the Twenty-first Assembly District. Mr. Quigg and Mr. Austin made up their minds there was too much happiness here. So they came up here with a shovel and a shroud and a coffin. An old German proverb says, 'He that digs a grave shall be laid in it,' and the man that goes through the world seeking whom he may slug is pretty apt to get slugged. To capture Spion Kop does not always mean that you can hold it. At present I am in Natal, and I propose to stay there till I am licked by Quigg and Austin, and if I am licked in the March primaries, you will find me up at 9 A. M. the next day. I'll be doing business at the old stand, and the war will be still on. [Applause.]

"I can afford to fight Quigg and Austin as long as Quigg and Austin are dishonest politically, and not doing their best for the Republican Party. I hope always to be 'on the level' with everybody, as I hope everybody will be with me."

Mr. Gruber here paused and invited any one who could say that he had ever had to be asked a second time to do a Republican a favor or to do something for the good of the party, to speak. No one spoke.

He concluded by saying that there was but one opinion in the district on the fight against him—that it was conceived in iniquity, and that only the officeholders were for Austin. "When they shout, 'I'm for Austin,'" said he, "they are sure to do it where he can hear it, and they usually shout the loudest when their thirst is most extensive."

Of these, 8,660 are secular priests, and 2,976 are members of religious orders, such as Jesuits, Dominicans, Franciscans, Paulists, &c. The churches number 10,339. Of these, 6,400 have resident pastors, and 3,930 are mission stations attended by priests who are attached to other churches.

There are 10 Catholic universities, 30 secular seminaries, with 2,630 seminarians; 79 religious seminaries, with 1,198 seminarians; 178 colleges for boys, 662 academies for girls, 3,811 parishes with schools, with 854,523 pupils. In 251 orphan asylums there are 35,453 orphans, and the charitable institutions number 827. The number of children in Catholic institutions is 980,670.

The statistics for 1900, compared with those for 1899, show that the Catholic population of the country has increased 222,265. The number of priests has increased 517 in the last year, and the churches 237.

In the Archdiocese of New York, which is the most important ecclesiastical district of the Catholic Church in the United States, there are reported to be 825,000 Catholics. The Archdiocese is ruled by one Archbishop, one Bishop, and 676 priests. The churches with resident pastors number 259, missions with churches 120, and the chapels 154.

There are three universities, one seminary, with 112 students; eleven colleges for boys, thirty-eight academies for girls, 190 parochial schools attended by 43,417 pupils; six orphan asylums, with 2,307 orphans; sixty-seven charitable institutions, and 68,269 children in Catholic institutions.

The diocese of Brooklyn, which includes the whole of Long Island, contains 500,000 Catholics, whose spiritual interests are looked after by one Bishop and 318 priests. They attend 145 churches and 20 chapels. There is one seminary, with 54 students. The colleges for boys number four, and the academies for girls 16. Sixty-four parochial schools are attended by 29,929 pupils, and 12 orphan asylums shelter 3,590 orphans. The charitable institutions are 25, and the children in charitable institutions number 36,715.

In the State of New Jersey the Catholics, who number 344,490, are divided into two dioceses—those of Newark and of Trenton. The Newark Diocese has a Catholic population of 272,490, 256 priests, and 153 churches. In the Trenton Diocese there are 72,000 Catholics, 120 priests, and 114 churches.

The Catholic diocese that contains the smallest number of priests, churches, and Catholics is that of Alaska, in which there are only 13 priests, 5 churches, 5 chapels, 4 parishes, with schools, 2 charitable institutions, and 1,000 of a Catholic population.

SHORTER ROUTE TO LIVERPOOL.

The Dakotas Plan an Outlet by Way of Hudson Bay.

WHITE ROCK, S. D., Jan. 27.—At the opening of the Red River Drainage Canal convention Edgar M. Bennett of Big Stone City, S. D., delivered an address outlining what it is proposed to accomplish. He pointed out that by making reservoirs of Big Stone and Traverse Lakes, as recommended in the 1892 report of the Government Engineers, the Red River Valley would be delivered from floods and the beginning would be made in a system of navigation beginning at the foot of the Big Stone Lake and extending 990 miles north to Lake Winnipeg and eventually to Hudson Bay.

Big Stone Lake would thus be 1,300 miles nearer Liverpool than Chicago and 1,400 miles nearer than Duluth. The cost of the reservoir system would be $1,000,000, but the losses by floods in the Red River Valley have already been ten times that amount.

WOMAN STABS HER HUSBAND.

It was reported to the police of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station last night that Abraham Cohen, twenty-sixt years old, the proprietor of a ladies' tailoring establishment at 49 West Thirty-fifth Street, had been stabbed in the breast, and that his throat had been cut by his wife, Sadie. The Cohens live at 326 East Thirty-sixth Street. They have a baby two years old, and Cohen's brother lives with them.

On Wednesday night Cohen, with his wife and child, went to visit Mrs. Cohen's brother, who is named Schinsky and lives at Eighty-first Street and Third Avenue. The woman and her brother six months ago had a quarrel, and, although not the best of friends, frequently visited each other.

When Cohen woke up Thursday morning he found that his throat had been cut, and that he had been stabbed in the breast. His wife was standing beside the bed. In her hand she held a large knife, the blade of which was covered with blood.

When the detectives went to Schinsky's house last night they learned that Mrs. Cohen had been sent to St. Vincent's Hospital. At the hospital they were told that the woman had just been admitted to be treated for nervous prostration. She was placed under arrest and a policeman placed to guard her.

The woman when questioned merely said that if she had cut her husband's throat she did not remember anything about it. Cohen was removed to his home after, and is now in a critical condition.

Newfoundland Wreck a Fisher.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Jan. 27.—There is nothing new from the wreck of the large unknown vessel which went ashore on Wednesday, Jan. 17, on Foxtail Point, in Bay St. George. The locality where the ship struck makes it certain that she was a herring vessel leaving Bay of Islands, as a deviation of one point of the compass, would land her right on the rocks. Though the wreck is almost certainly that of an American ship, it is possible she is a Canadian vessel, three of these also having left Bay of Islands recently.

Dominion Liner Still Aground.

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 27.—The Jamestown is still stuck in the sand on Boush Bluff, where she grounded early yesterday morning in returning from Newport News to this city. Every pound of her cargo has been removed, but the efforts to float her on the tides this morning and evening proved unsuccessful on account of a strong northwest wind. The effort will be renewed in the morning, but with little hope of success unless the wind changes.

Whirlwind Damages American Ship.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The ship Challenger of Bath, Me., Capt. Gould, from Hongkong Oct. 6 for New York, passed St. Helena Jan. 4 jury-rigged forward, having lost bowsprit, foretopmast, and maintopgallast mast, which she reported occurred in a whirlwind Dec. 12, in latitude 30 south longitude 34 east.

MR. MONNETT ON TRUSTS

Standard Oil His Example of All Their Imputed Evils.

One-third of the Present United States Senators He Accuses of Receiving Favors.

Attorney General F. S. Monnett of Ohio delivered his deferred lecture on trusts before an audience that nearly filled the Young Men's Christian Association Hall last evening. He was to have spoken at the Cooper Union a few weeks ago, but the lecture was abandoned at the last moment, it was rumored, because of the antagonism of the Standard Oil Company, against which Mr. Monnett has long carried on a fierce legal warfare, but this was denied.

The lecture was under the auspices of the Manhattan Single Tax Club, and Mr. Monnett read from a manuscript. He quoted many legal authorities, some of them English jurists of 150 years ago, in support of his position that the powers of great corporations should be brought under closer Governmental supervision, particularly with a view to prevent discriminations in favor of their larger customers, which he described as their greatest evil. Whenever he needed a specific instance, he almost invariably fell back on the Standard Oil Company to furnish it. While the speaker was telling of the great profits of the oil corporation a man called out, "I think we should call for special prayers for Rockefeller."

"Oh, I have no doubt he is getting his Sunday school lesson to-night," replied the Attorney General.

Mr. Monnett said, in part:

"I do not believe I am a pessimist. I know I never lost a fortune by the trusts, for I never had one to lose. There are State, National, and international undertakings which require combinations of capital and combinations of labor. The physical endurance, mental scope, and length of life of the ordinary business man was not commensurate with the business burdens of the nineteenth century, and therefore, we have built up a new creature, omnipresent, omniscient, and even immortal, that works night and day upon the land and sea.

"This new creature, almost a divinity, has accomplished some of the wonders of this age. Its beneficiaries have written its biography in hopeful lines, but no one has yet written its obituary. He must be blind indeed who does not see in all this some triumph of mind over matter.

"I am not here to demand the equality of fortune nor the division of wealth, but to insist upon the God-given right of equal opportunity and upon the wealthy bearing the burden of taxation equally with the poorer, struggling, weaker portion of the community.

"This Empire State is a corporation. Its charter is its Constitution, and its by-laws are its statutes, and, combined with forty-four others, it forms the Government, which makes a fair illustration of the ideal development of the trust.

"Every dollar that the Rockefellers, the Rogerses, the Pratts obtained from rebates from railroad corporations through favoritism in terminal charges and fictitious billing has been as wrongfully wrung from the pockets of the owners of the oil rocks in Pennsylvania and the washerwoman filling her oil can at the corner store in this city as any dollar that any man ever took by embezzlement.

"The Standard Oil Company was ungrateful enough to build a pipe line as competitor to the railroads which had fattened it, but they never reduced the price of oil anywhere or at any time when they did not have to do it through the meagre competition which outsiders were able to give them.

"Instead of using the advantages derived from the Government for the common welfare and benefit this model Sunday-school building, church-organizing, and philanthropic organization has exacted, extorted, and filched from the helpless widow and the day laborer 100 per cent. more for its commodity than under the law of good morality it was entitled to—100 per cent. taken from the washerwoman's wages to be dropped to-morrow into the Sunday school box.

"The question as to whether or not Aguinaldo has insulted our flag 12,000 miles away is an affair of more importance in the eyes of State and National and editorial savants than the fact that National sovereignty is defied and courts spit upon by these criminal trasactions that they do not dare disclose under judicial demand. The trusts in Ohio are now in exactly the same position as a felon in a New York Police Court who says: 'I dare not open my mouth and testify because it would incriminate me.' Unless you men that are sufferers and victims lift up your voices the courts may become lax."

Mr. Monnett then entered into a long discussion of social topics with his hearers. He said he thought the judiciary was, in the main, ready to do its duty, but Government officials were needed who would enforce the laws. He said in the course of his remarks that he believed that at least one-third of the members of the present United States Senate had received fees, dividends, or other emoluments from great corporations, and added that it was noticeable that when any of the great trusts became involved in court litigation of any kind they generally called upon members of the National Legislature or Government officials to defend them instead of members of the bar in private life.

DOCTORS OF PEDAGOGY DINE.

Chancellor MacCracken on the Contest Over Unification Bills.

The seventh annual dinner of the Doctors of Pedagogy was held last evening in the Hotel St. Denis. Forty graduates of the School of Pedagogy of the University of New York were present. B. C. Magre, President of the School of Pedagogy, presided. At the guests' table were also Dr. Thomas Hunter, Chancellor Henry M. MacCracken, and Col. Alexander P. Ketchum.

Among those present were Dr. E. L. Stephens, President of the Southwest Industrial School, Louisiana; Dr. William Army, Principal of the Orange High School; Dr. A. F. Thompson, Superintendent of the Jersey City High Schools; Dr. Thomas O. Baker, Principal of the Yonkers High School; Dr. J. M. Taylor, Mrs. Jennie B. Merrill, Superintendent of New York Kindergartens, and Dr. A. G. Merwin.

Dr. MacCracken, in speaking to the toast "The University," said that New York University has officially taken no side in the present contest at Albany regarding unification. "This is partly," he said, "because neither the one side nor the other is fully indorsed by our corporation or Faculties. We prefer to wait to see the bills that may be introduced. The matter is so important that I ask every friend of education, and in particular the friends of New York University, to study the proposed measures and to let their voices be heard for the very best.

"New York State is logically bound to either refuse to give money from the State Treasury to university schools of pedagogy or else to subsidize in due proportion every university school of pedagogy that will accept the State requirements. I favor the State Government, when unification shall have been accomplished, adopting a definite policy as to State appropriations."

STATE OF NEBRASKA OVERDUE.

Friends of Passengers Make Inquiries at Steamship Offices.

Several inquiries were made yesterday at the office of the Allan State Line by friends of persons who took passage on the overdue steamer State of Nebraska, which sailed from Glasgow on Jan. 10. She was said to have on board twenty passengers.

She is a slow vessel, and last year she was overdue five or six days on two trips from Glasgow, but she was reported en route by faster vessels. She has not yet been reported on this trip. She was due here on Jan. 22.

Six persons, four trainmen and two passengers, were injured, one seriously.

PALISADE COMMISSIONERS OUT

W. C. Morse and J. J. R. Croes Resign at the Request of Gov. Roosevelt to Clear a Muddle.

The announcement was made in this city yesterday that Waldo C. Morse and J. James R. Croes of Yonkers, the two living of the three members of the Palisade Commission appointed in 1895, have resigned, at the request of Gov. Roosevelt. The resignation, it is said, was directly brought about by a notice from the Governor asking them to appear before him and show cause why they should not be removed.

The resignation somewhat simplifies, it is said, a situation which had become embarrassing for Gov. Roosevelt, and has led recently to more or less humorous complications. One bill relating to the preservation of the Palisades, sent to the Governor by the old commission, it now before the Legislature, having gotten there in some mysterious way, and another bill prepared by a new commission appointed by Gov. Roosevelt last year, and acting conjointly with the New Jersey Palisade Commissioners, is to be introduced into the Legislature to-morrow night.

Gov. Roosevelt, since he discovered that the 1895 commission's bill had gotten past him, it was said yesterday, has been casting about for a way to get out of the muddle.

The explanation of all this dates back to 1895, when the Legislature passed a law authorizing the Governor, then Levi P. Morton, to appoint a committee of three to confer with a similar commission from New Jersey, the two bodies being appointed for the purpose "of adopting such means as may be deemed expedient and necessary in the view and for the object of securing action on the part of the United States Government for the acquisition of that part of the west shore of the Hudson River within the States of New York and New Jersey known as the Palisades, to be set apart for a reservation or for the purposes of fortifications."

The result of this proposition to preserve the Palisades was that a joint commission from the two States went to Washington, but upon investigation the plan was found to be impracticable, and was abandoned, because chiefly of the great expenditure found to be necessary to acquire the lands. It was supposed then, it was said, that the New York commission's duties were at an end, and that Messrs. Morse and Croes took the view that the plan for a military reservation was impracticable, in line with the ideas of military officers who passed upon the question.

It was said, also, that, while the Governor has power to remove at his discretion, he did not remove them before, apparently taking it for granted that they were out of existence as a commission, and consequently appointed his own commission to work with the Jersey Commissioners on a new plan for preserving the Palisades. To all intents and purposes the old commission was ignored as out of existence.

While the new bill was being put in shape the commission of 1895 took to Albany another report and bill favoring the old military park idea, and proposing that New York State appropriate $250,000 to be paid to the United States to aid in securing the property for this purpose. This bill, it was said, in some way got into Gov. Roosevelt's hands, was approved "by mistake," and introduced into both houses, where it has been bothering the legislators to know what to do with it.

Gov. Roosevelt is reported to have said that he never approved it or the report, and just how it got into both houses has not yet been explained. The new bill proposes to condemn land at the foot of the cliffs, and small portions on top of the Palisades.

THIEVES MAKE A $500 HAUL.

Confidence Game Successfully Worked in a West Thirty-third Street Boarding House.

Mrs. E. M. Weil, who keeps a boarding house in West Thirty-third Street, is congratulating herself because she refused to cash a check for two new boarders. A woman who resides in the house is mourning the loss of jewelry and clothing estimated to be worth $500, which the same new boarders, it is believed, took with them when they disappeared without a formal leave-taking.

About 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon two fashionably dressed young men carrying dress suit cases called at the house and engaged two rooms. They said they were A. B. Towns and William S. Sanford, that they came from Syracuse, and were engaged in secret service for the Government. They added that they had offices at 280 Broadway, and gave as reference a Mr. Hall, supposed to have offices in the same building.

They were most courteous and affable, and expressed their intention of paying for their rooms in advance. They offered Mrs. Weil a check for a large amount. Mrs. Weil explained that she couldn't cash the check just then. The men assured her that it didn't matter, and that they would get it cashed and pay her the rent in the evening. They went out ostensibly to give instructions for a quantity of luggage to be sent to them. About 3 o'clock they returned, and were shown to their rooms.

An hour later a woman who occupied apartments next to the room allotted to Towns returned after a brief absence to find that her jewelry, furs, and best silk dresses were missing. The new boarders were also missing, and had left no trace behind save the frame hangers on which the stolen garments had been hung, and which were found in Towns's room.

MRS. MINTON DIES SUDDENLY.

Wife of Charles T. Minton—He Discovers Her Body.

Mrs. Margaret E. Minton, wife of Charles T. Minton, a member of the Stock Exchange, was found dead in her bed at the Brevoort House, Fifth Avenue and Eighth Street, by her husband upon his return home from his office in Wall Street yesterday. Mr. Minton found the rooms in darkness, and upon striking a match, discovered his wife lying dead on the bed.

Mrs. Minton was a Miss Rogers. Her father, Henry M. Rogers, was a well-known resident of this city. She was forty-two years old, and a native of this city. Her death was due to apoplexy and Bright's disease. She had been married eighteen years, and leaves two sons. Assemblyman Maurice M. Minton is her brother-in-law.

The funeral will be held from the Church of the Ascension at 2 o'clock P. M. to-morrow.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Business of Fair Volume, but Along More Conventional Lines.

BUYING OF APARTMENT SITES

Pending Legislation—Latest Sales—Little of Importance at Auction—Offerings for This Week.

In point of large transactions and those to which any general interest attaches the last week has made a rather poor showing. There has been a fair volume of business, however, and even if it has followed somewhat conventional lines, this is only to be expected and need not be made the basis for any apprehension as to the character of the Spring market.

The reselling of the Orphan Asylum block goes on apace. Scarcely a day passes without some addition to the list of wealthy men who will build residences on Fifty-first and Fifty-second Streets between Fifth and Madison Avenues. The sale of the stables belonging to the Ward estate on the north side of Fifty-second Street just west of Madison Avenue is, it is believed, only the first of a series of transactions which will end in the conversion into residence sites of all the similar properties on that block. The other stables are owned by the Goelet estate and others, who, up to the present, have persistently refused to sell. It is reasonable to suppose, however, that with fine dwellings on the south side of the street instead of an institution, that the folly of maintaining stables on such desirable lots may appear to these owners.

Vacant property sales, most of them preliminary to apartment house building operations, included several desirable plots—the northwest corner of West End Avenue and Seventy-ninth Street, the southeast corner of Broadway and One Hundred and Second Street, and four lots on the south side of One Hundred and Sixteenth Street, adjoining the Amsterdam Avenue corner. Joseph Hamershlag took title to the single lot at the northwest corner of Central Park West and Sixty-seventh Street from Russell Sage, and increased his holdings later in the week by buying two adjoining lots from Collis P. Huntington. The only deal of any importance reported from the Bronx was the sale of the block of twenty-four lots bounded by Wales and Beach Avenues, Kelly and Beck Streets.

Two pieces of pending legislation are watched with no little interest in real estate circles, although neither one of them gives signs of affecting the market very seriously—not, at least, in their present intangible shape. The proposed mortgage tax is receiving the discussion which it merits, and if the legislators at Albany are paying any attention to all that is being said and written on this subject, there need be no fear that the vote on the measure will not be an intelligent one.

The other bill that is commanding attention, although in no such measure as the one providing for the mortgage tax, is that making it a misdemeanor to offer a piece of property for sale or to negotiate a loan upon it without being duly authorized so to do by the owner or his accredited representative. This bill is looked upon with favor by nearly all reputable brokers. It seems to be the general opinion, however, that that part of the measure relating to the sale of a property, while perhaps not actually objectionable, is to a large extent unnecessary. It is pointed out that the offering of a property without authority is not liable to do harm of any serious nature either upon the property itself or its owner, except perhaps a little annoyance to the latter. Attempts to negotiate a loan, on the other hands without being duly authorized, might very easily work to the detriment of the property involved and to the financial disadvantage of its owner. The latter section of the bill, therefore, meets with general approval, particularly among those brokers who are interested in the welfare of the mortgage loan branch of the business.

Slawson & Hobbs have sold for Stewart & Smith, to Charles Osborne, the five-story American-basement dwelling, 321 West One Hundred and Sixth Street, 18 by 80 by 100.

Albert L. Conklin, Jr., has bought from Elizabeth A. Talbot the three-story dwelling, 102 West Forty-sixth Street, 20 by 100.

F. Hartley Proctor is the buyer of the 50-foot plot, with stables, on the north side of Fifty-second Street, 120 feet west of Madison Avenue.

Robert Willets has sold the four-story brownstone-front dwelling, 17 East Eighty-third Street, 18 by 102.2.

A. M. Bendheim has sold to Joseph Roberts, for $28,500, the four-story building, southeast corner of Avenue A and Eleventh Street, 20 by 75.6.

It is reported that Daniel B. Freedman has bought the four-story dwelling, 38 West Ninety-seventh Street, 18 by 100.

Max Marx has sold, through Williamson & Bryan, to Timothy F. Sullivan, the plot northwest corner of Park Avenue West and One Hundred and Seventy-ninth Street, 25 by 82; also to W. C. Coffin, the southwest corner of Morris Avenue and One Hundred and Forty-eighth Street, 25 by 92, a five-story flat, with stores.

H. T. Gurney has sold for Robert F. Horsey, his country place at Oyster Bay, L. I., at one time the home of Col. S. V. R. Cruger. The property adjoins the large estate recently sold to Camille Weidenfeld of Lawson, Weidenfeld & Co. The purchaser of the Horsey place is one of the H. B. Claflin Company.

A building loan contract was placed on record yesterday, made by Hellner & Wolf, with Owen Costello, and involving the property on the south side of Eleventh Street, 180.10 feet east of University Place, 25 by 98.9. The amount advanced is $40,000.

A large deal was closed in Brooklyn real estate yesterday by Vanderbilt Soader and Joseph E. Segrell, by which S. Clarke Rowen secures the following properties: The two-story and basement brick dwellings 424, 426, 426A, 428, and 430 Lewis Avenue; the two-story and basement stone dwellings 186, 188, 190, 190A, and 192 Decatur Street; the brick apartment house 583 Pacific Street, the brick apartments 542A, 544, 548, and 552 Lexington Avenue; the two-story and basement brick dwellings 564A, 566, 568, 570, and 572 Lexington Avenue, and 1,077 Fulton Street; the three-story dwelling 46 Chauncey Street, the brick store and dwelling 679 Atlantic Avenue, the dwellings 574, 576, 578, 580, 582, 584, 588, 590, and 592 Herkimer Street, and a number of apartment flats where improvements will soon be started by Mr. Bowen.

The Auction Room.

Offerings last week were few and, with the exceptions of 632 Broadway and 6 Park Place, wholly unimportant. The sale of the former parcel likewise lost much of its interest when it became evident that parties interested in the partition suit were to be the most active bidders. Competition for the Park Place piece hardly came up to expectations, possibly through the failure of the National Broadway Bank, which owns the adjoining Broadway corner, to take part in the bidding. The bid started at $90,000 and advanced to only $104,000, at which figure Peter McDonnell became the purchaser. The property was subsequently resold by him to Frederick B. Jennings, owner of 234 Broadway, but at how much of an advance over the auction figures is not known.

Of the voluntary offerings for this week, perhaps the most important will be that announced by Bryan L. Kennelly for Wednesday involving five lots on the north side of Ninety-second Street, 94 feet east of First Avenue, together with five abutting lots on the south side of Ninety-third Street, making in all a plot 125 by 200. Other properties to be put up at public sale by the same auctioneer include 624 to 625 East Ninth Street, 61 and 63 East One Hundred and First Street, 390 Madison Street, and 46 West Sixty-fourth Street.

President Hill's First Vacation.

From The St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer Press.

James J. Hill, President of the Great Northern Railway Company, will enjoy this Summer his first vacation since he became a railroad man twenty years ago. He will pass several months at Paris during the Exposition. Mr. Hill will be accompanied by most of his family, but his sons, J. N. and L. W. Hill, will, it is said, remain here in their father's absence, and go abroad after his return. Mr. Hill is said to have leased already at Paris a house which his family will occupy. Mrs. Hill and her daughters will sail, it is expected, about the first of May. Mr. Hill will start later, and come back earlier. He will remain absent but two months, being unwilling to stay long from the centre of his important business interests. He has gone frequently abroad, and he has often been accompanied by members of his family. But this is the first time that his object has been relaxation.

COTTON.—The cotton market was strongly bullish, a fact that some regarded as particularly significant in view of the recent reverses sustained by the English forces in South Africa. Prices at the opening showed an advance of 2@9 points. There was a further advance of 2@4 points, with a partial recession as the market drew toward the close, under selling for realizing purposes. The undertone of the market throughout, however, was unmistakably firm, the principal factor of strength being the strong attitude of Southern spot sellers. The morning's advance in the local market was attended by active covering and by extensive buying for Southern and Wall Street and other large accounts. The crop movement was light; contradicting predictions of an increase in receipts on account of heavy export purchases at the interior. The statistical situation was a confirmation of previous estimates, pointing to subsiding supplies. The market closed steady at a net advance of 3@7 points.

BREADSTUFFS.—WHEAT—There was further activity in wheat yesterday, and a sharp advance in prices at one time, following bullish advices from abroad, particularly from France. Toward midday, however, realizing developed on a moderate scale and the attendant decline left the market at the official close rather easy at ⅛c under top point. The advance in Paris amounted to 15@25 points. This circumstance led to various rumors that manipulation was responsible in part for French strength, as well as unfavorable crop news. Still another factor in the early advance was a report that both Rosario and Buenos Ayres had been closed by the plague. Further war news, and continued cold weather in Winter wheat States, acted as minor bull points during the forenoon, and until May reached 75⅝c there was little or no influential selling. At that point room operators began to take profits, and it was not long before the market had an easy look, breaking about half a cent. On the whole, trade was reasonably broad. Northwest receipts amounted to 299 cars, against 374 cars last week. Export business was unimportant.

PINGREE DISCUSSES MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP

Michigan's Governor Says It Is a Future Certainty.

Sharp Line Drawn Between Public Utilities and Private Enterprise—Street Railways Considered.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—At the Marquette Club to-night Gen. Pingree of Michigan and Charles T. Yerkes debated the municipal ownership and operation of street railways. Gov. Pingree said in part:

"Municipal ownership is not a new thing. The principle involved in it is almost as old as democratic government itself. There are more than three hundred varieties of undertaking and businesses now engaged in by Governments. Among these are schools, parks, streets, bridges, water works, libraries, museums, armies, navies, Post Offices, lighting plants, &c. They are either for the benefit or convenience or protection of all the people. None of them is now regarded as the especial province of private corporations. One by one the Government has been assuming the ownership and control of these public utilities. Very little complaint has been heard because it has done so.

"At the beginning of the century there was only one public water works in the country. Now, over 53 per cent. of the water works are owned by municipalities. Nowadays the supply of water is looked upon as a proper Government function. Even private interests have ceased denouncing advocates of municipal ownership of water works as demagogues, Populists, Socialists, and Anarchists. In a few years there will not be a private water supply corporation in existence. In Illinois 78 per cent. of the water works are owned by the people, and in Michigan 81 per cent.

"Two decades ago there were no public lighting plants in the country. Now there are nearly 400. Private owners of lighting plants are vigorous in their condemnation of municipal ownership. But with the growth of public sentiment their epithets are becoming milder. They have ceased scoffing at the advocate of municipal ownership of lighting plants as an Anarchist. According to them, he is now a Socialist. A few years from now he will be called a demagogue. After the private lighting plants have practically disappeared, people will wonder why public ownership of them was ever opposed.

"Water, light, and transportation are the three great public necessities. Public ownership of the first two being assured, the last, namely, transportation, is bound to follow.

THE STREET RAILWAYS.

"I will endeavor to state and then answer the principal objections which are offered to municipal ownership of street railways. I believe, however, that most, if not all, of these objections have already been answered by actual experience under municipal ownership of other public utilities.

"The first objection is that City Governments should not engage in businesses which properly belong to the domain of private enterprise. A Government which does so is socialistic in character, the objectors say. Socialism is the inevitable ultimate outcome of municipal ownership.

"This is one of the principal objections urged against municipal ownership of street railways. It has its origin, of course, in the offices of private street railway corporations and other natural monopoly corporations. It is repeated by their attorneys. It finds an echoing response among other people of high financial and social standing, whose fortunes have been made by means of special privileges and favors, granted and bought from legislative bodies, National, State, and city. But the most powerful and effective opposition, by word and deed, to municipal ownership of public utilities, does not come from the owners themselves of franchises and other special privileges. It comes from that large class of people who cater to the capitalists—who follow them blindly—who seek to curry favor with them for financial and social reasons—who imitate them, or to speak more plainly—and perhaps in not very elegant terms—the 'toadies.'

"I do not wish to be understood as decrying or as speaking contemptuously of the capitalists or the wealthy proprietors of large enterorises, as a class. I have nothing but admiration for their skill and pluck in managing large affairs, provided they have reached their positions by honest methods unaided by special privileges. They will generally be found among the advocates of municipal ownership. It is my purpose, rather, to emphasize the fact that the cry of 'Socialism' comes principally from those who have gained their wealth and position because of special Government favors and privileges, and also from their blind followers.

NOT PRIVATE ENTERPRISE.

"I do not claim that Government ownership should extend beyond natural monopolies. The streets, rivers, and other water courses belong to all the people. There is no reason why a favored few should make money out of them at the expense of their real owners. The people should reclaim, and operate for their own benefit, such natural public monopolies as streets and street railways, telephone plants, gas and electric lighting works, water works, canals, ferries, bridges, harbors, water fronts and docks, &c. There is a well-defined line between private enterprise and public ownership. I would be the last to assert that Governments should engage in businesses naturally belonging to the domain of private enterprise.

"A business which requires an extensive use of the streets, or which is a natural monopoly, like a street railway, is not the especial domain of private enterprise. It is a business which properly belongs to the people, and should be operated by them for their own benefit. Private companies have no right to that kind of a business. They are the usurpers, although they would have us believe that municipal ownership is an effort to rob them of vested and natural rights—a claim that is preposterous when we know to whom the streets belong. It is absurd, therefore, to say that municipal ownership of street railways leads naturally to municipal ownership of drug stores, dry goods stores, grocery stores, &c. Yet that claim is frequently made, and advocates of municipal ownership of street railways are consequently called 'Socialists.'

"Probably the objection to municipal ownership most frequently urged is that it would tend to greater corruption in city government. Fearful pictures of evil are painted. It is said that the political bosses would control the management of street railways, for instance, and cities would be boss-ridden and boss-plagued. You are familiar with the argument. It originates, as usual, with those whose interests lie in the perpetuation of private control. It is skillfully fanned and encouraged by them and by their agents. The influence of this objection is unquestionably great. It is like the cry of 'Socialism'—advanced to frighten people.

EVILS OF CITY RULE.

"Our City Governments are suffering from various ills, boss plague, ring rule, and corruption in Common Councils being among them. But these evils exist because of the indifference of the people, and especially because of the neglect of the ordinary obligations of citizenship by those who declaim the bitterest against those evils. The only way to cure these ills is to rouse the people to an appreciation of their obligations as citizens. Not until then will the cause be removed. I have no hesitation whatever in stating that there is infinitely more corruption now under private ownership than there ever has been, or ever could be, under public ownership of public utilities. I do not make this assertion upon the strength of the testimony of others. I know it from personal experience.

"The granting of franchises to private corporations is the direct cause in nearly every city of the most dangerous form of corruption—namely, bribery. The disgraceful and discouraging feature of it is that those citizens who rarely attend primaries and who are loudest in their denunciation of municipal ownership, are many of them parties (indirectly perhaps) to the corruption surrounding the granting of franchises. While Mayor of Detroit, I was offered $75,000 if I would sign a gas franchise, or if I would be out of town and let it become a law without my signature. At another time I was reliably informed that a fund of the same amount was subscribed to induce me to sign a street railway franchise for high rates of fare.

BRIBERY IN NEW YORK.

"You will remember when a street-railway franchise was secured in New York City that it was proved that a large number of the Aldermen had received $20,000 apiece for their votes. Those who have been intimately associated with city government in our large cities, although they may not be in possession of facts sufficient to secure conviction, know that scarcely a franchise is granted to a private corporation in which there is not bribery in some form. It is also well known that candidates for Aldermen are allowed, in many cities, to select men for conductors and motormen on street railways. This is but another way of paying for their votes upon franchises. On the other hand, where the employes are working for the city, it is impossible for a boss to control their votes. This is well illustrated in the case of postmen. A Postmaster General of the United States once told me that officials of the Post Office Department had tried repeatedly to influence and control the votes of the Post Office employes throughout the country, but found it absolutely impossible to do so.

"I believe that public ownership will purify, rather than be an additional cause of corruption in, politics and municipal government. The extension of municipal ownership leads to a more enlightened public conscience, and a more direct interest in municipal government, by the people. Under such circumstances, deception and fraud become less possible. I do not believe that there is any force in the objection that municipal ownership leads to corruption in city government. I am confident that the reverse will be found true—that city ownership will not only tend to purify municipal government, but that it will also bring a larger proportion of citizens to a better realization of the duties and obligations of citizenship.

"A third objection to municipal ownership of street railways is that railways cannot be managed as economically as under private ownership, where the incentive to economical management is so much greater, because of the opportunity for private profit. This objection is absolutely without foundation. The history of municipal water works and lighting plants proves, beyond contradiction, that the cost to the consumer is very much less under public ownership.

WHAT NEW YORKERS PAY.

"As business men, you know that the private company operating street railways is compelled to charge fares high enough to pay dividends and interest upon heavily 'watered' stock and bonds. One of the most striking illustrations of this is the case of the Metropolitan Street Railway lines in New York City. At the time the figures were produced, the nominal capitalization per mile of track was $1,130,000. The market capitalization was $2,225,000 per mile, while the cost of duplicating the system did not exceed $100,000 per mile. You will thus see that there were twenty-two parts market value to one part actual value. In other words, there were $2,125,000 'water' in the market value and $1,030,000 water in the capitalization for each mile of track. Is it any wonder that the New York lines were obliged to charge high rates of fare in order to pay interest and dividends upon so much 'water'?

"Under municipal ownership of street railways this would be impossible. The people would ride at cost, which would mean three-cent fares and less. Even if public ownership were twice as expensive as private ownership (which I do not admit) the results of municipal ownership, with fares at cost, would be far preferable.

CHEAP FARES WANTED.

"I do not believe in granting franchises conditioned upon the payment of taxes upon earnings. I have always contended that the sole condition upon which franchises should be granted is a reduction in fares. I firmly believe also that the time has come when street railways can be operated successfully, and yield reasonable interest upon the actual investment, under three-cent fares. If run at cost by the city, the fare can be reduced to two cents in most instances. As I have often stated upon the platform, there is no reason why the poor washerwoman who patronizes the street railways should, through the fare which she pays, help the well-to-do property owner pay his taxes.

"The streets belong to the entire people, and the granting of the use of them to street railways should result in benefits to all the people and not alone to those who own property."

VALUE OF CITY REFUSE.

Privilege of Sorting to be Offered to Highest Bidder.

The contract entered into between Herbert R. Tait and the city, by which the former has the privilege of sorting over the refuse gathered up by the carts of the Street Cleaning Department, will expire soon, and Commissioner McCartney proposes to award the contract for six months to the person who will bid highest for the privilege. Mr. Tait originally received the privilege from the late Commissioner Waring, at the time the department was being organized on its present lines, and he has worked ever since at a pier rented by the city, at the end of East Eighteenth Street. If the amount bid is large enough, the system will be extended so that every load of refuse collected will be treated, instead of only a small percentage, as at present.

Mr. Tait during 1898 received 15,345 loads of refuse, for which he paid the city $41. In 1899 he handled 12,925 loads and paid $31,000. Only 3 per cent. of the paper carts were turned over to the contractor last year, and, as this class of refuse is extremely profitable, Commissioner McCartney hopes to be able to obtain a large sum for the privilege by handing over all the refuse to the successful bidder.

The scow-trimming contract for the year will also be let on Feb. 5. This privilege has produced a revenue of $50,000 a year ever since it was put into operation.

BOY HAS A REMARKABLE ESCAPE

Tossed Fifty Feet Into the Air by a Locomotive—Practically Unhurt.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Jan. 28.—John Beirne, thirteen years old, had a remarkable escape from death to-day at Elizabethport. He was crossing the tracks at Second Street and Port Avenue and was struck by the locomotive of a fast freight. His body was thrown fifty feet into the air.

The train was stopped and the crew went back expecting to find his mangled body. They found the lad lying close to the track, stunned. There was a lacerated wound on one knee, but otherwise he seemed unhurt. He was taken to the hospital and thoroughly examined, but no bones were found broken. He was removed to his parents' residence at 650 Court Street.

Rig Hit by Train, Occupants Escape.

MADISON, N. J., Jan. 28.—While Miss Louise and Jennie Hancock of Madison were returning home from a reception at East Madison at 11 o'clock last night, their carriage was struck by a freight train at the Green Village road crossing. The wagon was overturned, and the two young women and the driver were thrown under it. They escaped with a few bruises.

MRS. C. E. COX IS MISSING.

She Fails to Call to Get Transportation to Bridgeport, Conn.

Mrs. Caroline E. Cox, the Bridgeport (Conn.) woman who applied a few days ago to George Blair, Superintendent of Outdoor Relief of the Charities Department for transportation to her former home, did not return yesterday as she had been instructed to do. In her application Mrs. Cox said she had property in Bridgeport, and that she had left there owing to the fact that the Charity Commissioners had declared that she should be examined as to her sanity. She feared that she would be incarcerated, and as a result fled to this city a few weeks ago. For some time she staid with friends in Central Park West.

Superintendent Blair wrote to the Bridgeport authorities regarding the woman and received this reply:

"She belongs to this city. Her first husband and herself come of good families. She has been worth considerable property, but was beat out of it by Cox, her second husband."

The Bridgeport authorities said they were willing to take care of Mrs. Cox when she returned to that place. The woman is well known in this city.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Jan. 27.—The will of Mrs. Elizabeth Minturn Hardenbergh was filed for probate to-day. It disposes of an estate valued at several hundred thousand dollars. Apart from a few bequests to charity and to her sisters and the children of her sisters, the entire fortune is divided among the four children of her husband by a former marriage. Mrs. Hardenbergh leaves $30,000 to the Second Reformed Church of New Brunswick.

LEGAL NOTES.

DUTY AND LIABILITY OF SHERIFFS.—In June last William V. Malloy, Sheriff of Westchester County, having discharged Susan Slater Weeks from the county jail, where she had been committed by order of the Surrogate, he was adjudged, in a proceeding brought against him by Laura Leggat, to be guilty of contempt of court, and was fined $250. Mrs. Weeks's commitment was for neglecting or refusing to comply with the Surrogate's order directing distribution of certain funds which had come into her possession as executrix of Laura Slater. Before her discharge by the Sheriff, Mrs. Weeks's commitment had been judicially declared in habeas corpus proceedings to be "void upon the face," by a court of competent jurisdiction. The Appellate Division of the Second Department has directed a reversal of the order committing the Sheriff for contempt, holding, Justice Woodward giving the opinion, that it having been judicially determined in the habeas corpus proceedings that the prisoner was illegally confined, such judicial determination protected the Sheriff in discharging her. The Court held that it was not the province of the Sheriff, in habeas corpus proceedings, to inquire whether the Court, in directing the discharge of the prisoner, had erred in acquiring jurisdiction. While neglect of the formalities provided by the code might afford grounds for reversing the decision of the Judge, it did not subject the Sheriff, who acted under the order of the Court, to punishment.

TAXATION OF CORPORATIONS.—In 1898 the Cornell Steamboat Company, engaged in the business of towing vessels upon the Hudson River, was assessed by the City of Kingston, where it has its office, for $250,000 for personal property in addition to its real estate. Subsequently by the testimony of the company's President, after objections had been filed, it was shown that its property amounted to $890,000, while the amount of its debts, mortgage indebtedness, and real estate aggregated $945,000, leaving a deficiency of over $54,000. In a proceeding to review the assessment, the sum of $250,000 was stricken out, and that decision was affirmed by the Appellate Division of the Third Department. The orders below have recently been modified by the Court of Appeals, so as to fix the value of the company's personal property for assessment at $95,251.77. This sum was arrived at by deducting from the value of the assets the sum of $550,000 instead of $700,000 as the amount of the mortgage indebtedness. The Court holds unanimously, in an opinion by Judge Haight, that a corporation is included in the word "person" as mentioned in Sections 21 and 37 of the tax law, providing for deduction of debts from personal property, and the company was therefore entitled to have its debts deducted from the value of the property in an assessment of its personal property for town, county, or municipal purposes. The provisions for the assessment of capital stock of a corporation at its actual value made by Section 12 of the tax law was held not to conflict with or prohibit a deduction of the company's indebtedness in determining such value. The Court holds also that good will is not taxable property for town, county, and municipal purposes, and that debts or liabilities contracted in the purchase of such property should not be deducted from the value of the taxable personal property.

TRUST FUNDS AS COLLATERAL SECURITY.—In a suit brought by Gertrude M. Randall and others to recover fourteen bonds of $1,000 each, in possession of the Bank of America, it appeared that the bank held them as security for notes of the firm of Caldwell & Bunker. No claim was made against the bank, its right to these bonds as pledges not being questioned, but it was contended that other securities held by it for the notes should be first applied to their payment. It appeared that these bonds were part of the estate of Mary H. Holley, who married William R. Bunker, one of the members of the firm. She died in 1891, and by her will left her residuary estate to her husband in trust for her two daughters, with remainder to their children. These daughters and their children are the plaintiffs, and the action was defended by Sherman W. Knevals, assignee of Caldwell & Bunker, who was joined as defendant. A judgment of the Appellate Division of the First Department, affirming the judgment given at Special Term, on the report of a referee, in favor of the plaintiffs, has been unanimously sustained by the Court of Appeals, which held, on the opinion of Justice Barrett below, that the firm of Caldwell & Bunker, which took these bonds as security for a loan to W. R. Bunker, one of its members, was not a bona fide holder of them, as the knowledge of the borrowing partner concerning their ownership was imputable to the firm. In any event, the bad faith of W. R. Bunker, the borrowing partner, if not conclusively imputable to the firm's assignee as matter of law, threw upon such assignee the burden of showing good faith, and the absence of notice as matter of fact. The declaration of Bunker, while the firm was in existence and practicing its ordinary business, that the bonds then in possession of the firm belonged to the trust estate, was held to be admissible against the assignee.

VETERAN FIREMAN DEAD.

Cold Contracted on Duty Kills Capt. Joseph Shaw.

Capt. Joseph Shaw, foreman of Engine Company 43, in the New York Fire Department, died at his residence, 238 East Eighty-seventh Street, yesterday, from pneumonia, resulting from cold he contracted at a fire on Ward's Island, Nov. 16. He was born in Ireland in 1836, and came to this city when a boy. On becoming twenty-one years old he joined Engine Company 13 of the old Volunteer Fire Department, then stationed in Duane Street. When the new department was organized Capt. Shaw was assigned to duty on Engine Company 12, in William Street. In 1879 he was made an assistant foreman, and foreman in 1881 of Hook and Ladder Company 13. There he remained until 1898, when he was transferred to Engine Company 43.

Capt. Shaw was one of the most popular firemen in the department. In 1885 he won the Stephenson medal for having the best disciplined company in the department. He has frequently been rewarded for bravery, and his company was always said to be one of the best working companies.

He leaves a wife and seven children, four of whom are boys and three girls, ranging in ages from nine to twenty-four years. The funeral will take place Tuesday morning from the Church of Our Lady of Good Counsel.

St. Mary's School Alumnae Dine.

The alumnae of St. Mary's School, 8 East Forty-sixth Street, gave its annual luncheon at the Hotel Manhattan yesterday. A musical programme and addresses by prominent graduates of the school were included in the afternoon's entertainment. Among those present who contributed to the success of the luncheon were Mrs. William Reynolds Brown, President of Vassar Alumnae; Mrs. Ernest P. HIGHWAYMAN'S FIERCE ATTACK

Bodger, Bearing Large Sum from Bank, Followed and Knocked from Car—The Robber Escapes.

A most daring attempt at a daylight highway robbery was made yesterday morning some time after 11 o'clock in One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, near Seventh Avenue. The victim of the attempted robbery was Thomas W. Bodger, who lives in Amsterdam Avenue, between One Hundred and Thirty-first and One Hundred and Thirty-second Streets, and who is the confidential assistant of George Grossman, a dealer in sand and cement at 606 West One Hundred and Thirty-first Street.

Bodger went to the Twelfth Ward Bank at 11 o'clock to deposit $400 in checks. He drew out $300 in bills to pay the employes of Mr. Grossman. While in the bank he noticed a large, heavy man with sandy hair and mustache and with peculiar movements watching him. He placed no significance on this at the time. After placing the bills in his inside coat pocket he buttoned up his coat, and over it his overcoat, and started for his place of business.

Bodger ran to a car at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and Lexington Avenue, near where the bank is located. The man he had noticed in the bank ran behind him. The car stopped. In some manner in boarding the car Bodger stepped on the foot of the man. The latter resented it, and some emphatic conversation was indulged in. Both Bodger and the man stood on the rear platform. At Seventh Avenue the car stopped to let off a passenger.

Suddenly and without warning the large man dealt Bodger a heavy blow on the nose, knocking him from the car platform and splitting his nose from the bridge to the tip. The stranger jumped from the car and stooping over Bodger thrust his hand inside Bodger's overcoat. Bodger yelled "Police! thief!" The man arose and dashed away, going up One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street to Eighth Avenue, and turning into the latter thoroughfare. There was no one about at the time and the man escaped arrest. The conductor jumped from the car and picked Bodger up. He was dazed. He went into a neighboring drug store, where a physician attended to his nose, and then he went to the office of Mr. Grossman and reported the affair.

The matter was then reported to the police of the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station. Bodger and the police both think that the attack on him was a deliberate preliminary to robbery. The buttoning of his overcoat over his inner coat prevented the success of the attempted robbery. Bodger gave the police a description of his assailant.

KILLED HIS BABY BROTHER.

Yonkers Lad Did Not Look to See If the Revolver Was Loaded.

YONKERS, N. Y., Jan. 27.—Max Stark, fourteen years of age, was arrested to-day on a charge of homicide. He shot his eleven-months-old brother Ernest Thursday and the little fellow died to-day. Coroner Banning, after making an investigation and hearing Max's story, was satisfied that the baby's death was accidental and the prisoner was allowed to return to his father's home at 141 Herriot Street after promising to appear when wanted.

Mrs. Stark was sewing in the kitchen Thursday and Max, who is employed in a store as a messenger, was home for lunch. Mrs. Stark sent the boy into an adjoining room for some thread. Max in looking through the bureau came across his father's revolver. Picking it up, he pointed it at his reflection in a looking glass, and then, turning around, saw his little brother lying on a bed asleep.

Without stopping to see if the weapon was loaded, Max pointed it at Ernest and, after taking deliberate aim, pulled the trigger. He was so frightened when he heard the report that he fainted, and when Mrs. Stark rushed into the room she thought Max had shot himself. Just then there was a cry from the direction of the bed.

Turning around, the mother saw a stream of blood flowing down the face of the baby. He had turned half way round, facing his mother, and she saw a wound in his temple. The bullet had penetrated the skull.

Mrs. Stark screamed and neighbors came to her assistance. Max was revived and Drs. Schooner and Kroeber were summoned. The physicians did all in their power to restore Ernest, who was unconscious, but failed. The child was taken to the hospital, where he died at 5 o'clock this morning.

RUTH CONDE IS A BRIDE.

Rumor of the Runaway Marriage of Swits Conde's Daughter Confirmed by Fact—Wed in Utica.

UTICA, Jan. 27.—The story that Ruth Condé, daughter of Swits Condé of Oswego, and Sergeant Major George B. Thorn of this city were married here yesterday by Rev. W. B. Coleman, rector of St. George's church, is true. Mr. and Mrs. Thorn are at the Butterfield at present, and intend remaining there a few days. Mr. Thorn is twenty-seven years of age and his bride is twenty-two. The marriage was legally witnessed, and has been recorded.

Mr. Thorn and Miss Condé came here from the West very early yesterday morning. Mr. Thorn is a member of St. George's church, and it is believed he informed his pastor of the fact that Miss Condé's parents did not favor the marriage. The determination of both to be married was very apparent, however, and the ceremony was performed in Miss Condé's room in the hotel. A rumor that the wedding had taken place got about at 5 o'clock, but could not be verified until late in the evening, and outside of the witnesses and two or three persons there was no one that could give any information. All interested refused to be interviewed or to make any statement until this morning, when the rumor was confirmed.

Mr. Thorn arrived at Oswego Thursday, hired a rig at a local livery, and with Miss Condé drove to Fulton, where they remained overnight at the home of Miss Condé's aunt, Mrs. Brown. On Friday morning they came to Utica.

Miss Marie Dorcas Condé, now dead, sister of the heroine of this elopement, figured in a romantic episode of similar nature three years ago, in which the other principal was Ensign G. L. P. Stone of the monitor Puritan. There was no elopement, owing to the intervention of the young woman's brother, but Ensign Stone and Ensign R. H. Osborne of the Alliance, who helped him in his attempt to win the young woman, were threatened with a court-martial and were put under nominal arrest on their respective vessels for several days while an official inquiry was made into their conduct.

Ensign Stone had met Miss Condé in Washington while he was attached to the cruiser New York, and upon her return to her home at 6 West Fifty-sixth Street, adroitly secured his transfer to the monitor, which was stationed at this city. As long as his attentions were merely friendly he was welcomed by the family, but when he declared him as a would-be son-in-law vigorous parental opposition set in and the young officer was forbidden the house and the family moved to their Summer home at Oswego in order that Miss Condé might be further removed from his influence. Ensign Stone replied to these tactics with a fusillade of letters and declared even to the day of the inquiry that he would marry Miss Condé with or without her parents' consent.

Ensign Osborne helped him, and after the elopement had been defeated, Swits Condé, the father of the young woman, complained to Secretary Long that the young men had used false names, and tried to obtain entrance into his residence under various pretenses giving rise to scandalous newspaper articles. The investigation began on May 31 on the battleship Maine, Capt. Sigsbee presiding over the proceedings. Mr. Condé and various members of his household, including a number of servants, were examined, and after five days the court made its report. Both officers were declared guiltless of any infraction of the naval regulations, and Mr. Condé was caustically informed that if the facts had been known the case would never have been allowed to assume the importance it did.

The Rev. Dr. John Hall, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, announced on June 16 of that year that Miss Condé had finally closed her communication with Ensign Stone, but gossip did not entirely cease until the following January, when the Condés announced Miss Marie's engagement to Lebbeus Harding Rogers, Jr., a Yale student living in this city. She died about a year after her marriage.

GOMPERS SEES THE PRESIDENT.

Legislation Asked in the Interests of Union Labor.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, accompanied by other representatives of labor interests, had a conference with the President to-day to urge upon him their desire that he should advocate certain legislation in which they are interested. They want an eight-hour law for all Government work, a law to prohibit the products of convict labor from being transferred from one State to another, and a law to restrict the authority of Federal courts in the issuance of injunctions in labor troubles.

Mr. Gompers filed with the President informal charges against Claud M. Johnson, Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The charges allege inefficiency and partiality in the conduct of the affairs of the office. Similar charges were filed against Director Johnson a year ago by Mr. Gompers, and, after an investigation by the Treasury Department, they were dismissed as unfounded.

FIRE DEPARTMENT CRIPPLED.

Chief Croker Says It Never Has Been in Such a Condition Owing to Lack of Officers.

The failure of the Municipal Civil Service Commission to furnish eligible lists for promotions in the Fire Department has, according to Chief Croker, interfered with the workings of his department. About thirty officers are needed, and they rank from a Deputy Chief down to assistant foreman.

The ranks of officers have been badly depleted through sickness and death. Two Captains succumbed to sickness contracted while in discharge of their duties. The two officers who died are Capt. Tobin, whose funeral was held yesterday, and Capt. Shaw, who died yesterday.

The department, says Chief Croker and Commissioner Scannell, is crippled, and the men have to work double time. Chief Croker says that owing to the present condition of affairs, the officers are sometimes kept from their respective companies a whole day in doing work for other companies.

"The department has never been in such a condition," said Chief Croker yesterday, "and unless lists for promotions are furnished soon, the officers who are now at work will become worn out, and then there will be another big gap in the ranks."

Lee Phillips, Secretary of the Municipal Civil Service Commission, was not aware of the condition of affairs in the Fire Department. He said the delay in getting out the eligible lists for the Fire Department was largely due to pressure of business in the bureau.

"We did not get down to work until Aug. 1, because of the change made in the civil service laws," he said. "The examinations for promotions in the Fire Department have been going on since early in October, and the lists are now practically completed. The work of rating the applicants is now being done, and some of the lists will be ready within a week."

Camden Saloon Keepers Hard Hit.

CAMDEN, N. J., Jan. 27.—The Grand Jury this morning caused consternation among the saloon keepers by presenting 136 true bills. It was learned that in each saloon keeper's case two indictments were found, so that if, by recourse to a technicality, the defendants escape, Prosecutor Lloyd can try them on the other indictments.

BODY HELD FOR EXPRESSAGE.

Father of George Woodward Says the Charges Are Excessive.

MOUNT HOLLY, N. J., Jan. 27.—When the body of George Woodward, who died in Denver, Col., arrived at New Egypt today there was some misunderstanding about the payment of the express charges, which amounted to $247. The express company demanded the payment of these charges before releasing the casket containing the body.

The dead man was a son of Dr. Woodward, whose domestic troubles were recently made public and who was ordered by the Court to pay his wife alimony. Dr. Woodward this afternoon called at the express company's office, but refused to pay the charges, saying they were excessive.

LODGING HOUSE FOR CHICAGO.

Franklin MacVeagh, Presents Plans for a Municipal Institution.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—Plans for a municipal lodging house have been presented to Mayor Harrison by Franklin MacVeagh, President of the Bureau of Associated Charities. He suggests the establishment of houses similar to those which have been established in New York, Boston, and Baltimore, and have solved the tramp problem in those cities.

The purpose of the lodging house is to provide a suitable place for the man without a home who is willing to work for what help he gets and who now has to share the floor of a police station with the tramp and the criminal. The plan is in operation at the Relief and Aid and Salvation Army lodging houses, but the power is lacking to make a man do any work in the morning after he has had a bed and breakfast. It is proposed to make compulsory baths a feature.

The police, under the plan proposed, will take charge of all men and women found wandering in the streets and begging, and send them to the city lodging house. If they refuse to work they will be arrested as vagrants and sent out of the city.

Nobody was injured.

SIMPSON, CRAWFORD & SIMPSON

Our International Cotton Fabric Assembly.

You are invited to consider the claims, charms and varied richness shown by nearly 500,000 Yards of Staples and Novelties.

From time to time, since the first style came, we gave you bits of Wash Goods news, the tiny instalments, as it were, of a serial story. To-day, adding a tremendously long chapter, we publish the whole in book form.

No stock was ever better bought than this; selected discerningly; with name to guard and fame to strengthen; giving equal room to beauty, newness and values. And these facts hold good (in proportionate measure) all through the long range, that starts with fine, dainty Dimities at 12½c. and closes with the most elaborate $2.00 a yard high novelty.

Eminent artists have lent their talents to this commercial decoration.

Soft sheer weavings pique approval with their inimitable combinations. These will go fast and first.

Rare blends are all about. Pastel greys, lavenders, pinks, blues and niles tone the color-glare. Silk stripes give gleams of gold, silver and vivid shades. Dots, pin stripes, flowers, mosaics, lace effects prove that originality never sleeps.

THIS YEAR'S PRICES TAKE ON A NEW SPECIAL INTEREST.

Statisticians figured out a cotton shortage from obvious data. We took warning. Armed with full powers, our agents waited only for styles to crystallize before pouring in orders. We paid, you pay, ante-advance prices, and while this stock lasts it will STAND BETWEEN YOU AND SUBSEQUENT HIGHER RATES.

Just as an earnest, we quote one special, far out of the ordinary, to take effect to-morrow morning and all day long:

Corded Tissue Imprimes . . . . 15c.

One of the showiest newcomers. Cords in relief hold the fabric firmly strong, light grounds set off pretty printings of fronds and leafage, flowers and figured variety. Later, in Shirt Waist time, we shall have more to sell at advanced prices. To-morrow 70 pieces will be sold out at 15c. per yard.

CHICAGO SHORT OF MONEY

City's Finances in an Unsatisfactory Condition.

DIRT LEFT IN THE STREETS

Even the School Department Must Retrench—Gas Bills Unpaid and Robberies Increase.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—The City of Chicago has just completed a drainage canal at a cost of $32,000,000, but half a dozen rickety bridges and viaducts on important thoroughfares are closed to public traffic because the City of Chicago cannot afford either to repair or replace them. The Board of Education, which annually spends a sum approximating $6,000,000, is hard at work trying to pare down its estimate of expenses for 1900 so it will fit within a shortage of $1,200,000 in its appropriation. When a visitor to Chicago is towed around town by a native to marvel at the skyscrapers and dodge the trolley cars, to inhale the stock yards and consume a little of the smoke, the inevitable question of the visitor is in regard to the dirt on the public streets, which even in the busiest district of the city is amazing.

"Oh, yes," says the Chicagoan, "they are a little bit dirty, ain't they? But have you seen the Board of Trade? It fixes the price of wheat for the world—"

"Yes, but why don't they clean the streets?" persists the stranger.

"Oh, that's simple enough," says the native, cheerfully, "the city hasn't enough money to keep 'em clean."

The fact is indisputable. For some inscrutable reason the finances of Chicago seem, to a layman, to be managetd on the hodge-podge order of the five-pin circus the children hold in a barn. There is never enough money for anything—except to meet the pay rolls. And even that is not invariable. Only a month ago it was seriously said that the school teachers would have to go without their salaries for a while, or else take "scrip" and discount it among the brokerage sharks who infest La Salle Street opposite the City Hall and make a thriving business out of the necessities of certain public servants whose departments are chronically out of ready money. The School Board gets something over $6,000,000 to spend every year, yet it occasionally drifts into the same financial "hole" which other departments of the Municipal Government are perpetually slipping into, and then there must be transferring from one fund to another, robbing Peter to pay Paul, or the teachers must wait for their salaries. At present the Board of Education is of opinion that the school year must be cut short one month to bring expenses within the appropriation. About 250,000 children attend the public schools of Chicago, and it is calmly arranged to cut off a month's schooling from every child to patch up the financial mismanagement of some of the people who get good salaries for looking after the details of the school system.

But that is only one department. There are a lot of people in Chicago who pay taxes. They declare taxes were never so high in the history of the city as they are at present, yet never before were things quite so "short" financially. There has been an epidemic of robberies and "hold-ups"—bold cases of garroting which would have disgraced Paris or London in the sixteenth century. One alderman startled the timorous and added his moiety to the gayety of nations by suggesting in the City Council that a price of $200 be placed on the head of every dead burglar or "hold-up" man brought in. That shows the pass things have come to. But when less sensational citizens turn to the municipal administration and ask for a more rational relief from lawlessness—an increase in the police force—they are met with the same old tiresome answer, "The city has not enough money to increase the police force." There are a trifle over 2,000 police officers in Chicago, covering 184 square miles of territory, and covering it very badly. They do the best they can, perhaps. No one stays awake all night to watch them except the burglars. There should be 5,000 men on the force. But Chicago cannot afford it, and the robberies go gayly on.

There is an election in Chicago twice a year. It is a mighty undertaking under the existing State law. The primaries are held under the law with election officers in each of the 238 primary districts of the city. There is a polling place in each district which is rented by the Board of Election Commissioners. The Judges and Clerks of Election, who serve four days in all, get $5 and $3 a day respectively at each election, and there are three in each polling place. Therefore it is evident that an election costs about $50,000 or $60,000 altogether, including the printing and distribution of ballots and all the other details. But some time ago the Election Board got into the same "hole" that the other departments spend so much time in, and it has never gotten out. Every election puts it just so much further behind. The Judges and Clerks are given "warrants" for their salaries, which are payable sometime—whenever the city gets the money. The brokers opposite the City Hall, with their windows prominently lettered in gold "City Warrants Cashed," would not see the poor Judges and Clerks go hungry, so they cash the warrants at the usual slight reduction from face value, and will by and by collect the face of the warrant, with interest, from the city.

One of the standard commodities of barter and sale among the loan brokers is judgments against the city. A man falls through one of the miserable wooden sidewalks which the city is too busy to inspect or enforce repairs of, and he gets judgment for $5,000 or $15,000. Of course the city cannot pay it. There is no money in that particular fund. But the judgment draws interest and there are lots of people eager to buy it from the lucky litigant and hold it for the interest—indefinitely it would seem.

Chicagoans are fond of pointing out to visitors, with much swelling of the chest, "the richest square mile in the world," including the whole business district of the city. But the city cannot afford to keep the streets of that square mile clean, not to mention the other hundred and eighty-odd square miles in which the 2,000,000 unfortunates live and move and breathe smoke into their patient lungs and wade through mud to reach their doorsteps. There are two public baths in the City of Chicago. That there is urgent demand for more in the congested slum districts of the city is agreed by every one. But the city has not the money to build them.

The city, except a few fortunate miles of the more prominent arteries of commerce, is lighted by gas. The trust gets $14 a year from the city for each gas lamp—that is, the bills are rendered by the Gas Trust, but the city has not the money to meet them, and the head of the Law Department appears in court at stated intervals and confesses judgment in behalf of the city in favor of the gas company. The city owns the plants which operate the existing electric street lights. The way out of the gas muddle is the rapid extension of the electric street lighting from the city plants. But the city cannot afford to extend the electric lighting system just at present, so it continues to confess judgment to the gas company at $14 per lamp.

If the City of Chicago were a private firm it would probably be in the hands of the Sheriff long ago. As a municipality it collects taxes and sets up to do certain things for the comfort and convenience of its citizens, for which they pay good round sums in taxes. But:

It cannot afford to clean the streets.

It cannot afford to collect and burn the city garbage in a city crematory, but allows disease-breeding "dumps."

It cannot afford to light the city by electricity or to pay its own gas bills.

It cannot afford to pay for its elections the year they occur.

It cannot afford to rebuild condemned bridges, but closes traffic on important streets.

It cannot afford to give its public school children a full term of schooling.

It cannot afford to give its citizens sufficient police protection from the hordes of crooks overunning the town.

It cannot afford to replace the obsolete centre pier bridges in its narrow river, with those of the bascule type, and hence is losing the bulk of its grain and lumber trade.

What is the matter with Chicago?

SALE OF GAME OUT OF SEASON.

A Test of the State Law to be Made in the Case of August Silz.

What is practically a test case to determine the legality of the sale of imported game here during the close season in this State has been begun by the officers of the American League of Sportsmen by the arrest of August Silz, a game dealer, at 75 Barclay Street. The case came up Friday before Justice Crane, and Mr. Silz was held for the Grand Jury, being paroled in the custody of his counsel, Kantrowitz & Esberg. The league has retained John S. Wise to assist the District Attorney's office in the prosecution of the case. It is understood that Mr. Silz is backed by the Game Dealers' Association and that in the event of his conviction the case will be carried to the higher courts.

Mr. Silz said last evening that the game which he had exposed for sale was not such as is described in the New York statutes. The alleged deer, which are specified in the charges, he said, were chevreuils, a species of deer which do not inhabit this country, and the quail were becasses, or French woodcock. He said that State Game Protector Edgar Hicks had inspected his stock and told him that he was not violating the law in selling imported game. He declared that he would be able to produce at the trial his foreign bills of lading, and numerous employes of steamship lines to prove that he imported all his game.

The officers of the League of American Sportsmen assert that the sale of game either foreign or domestic, in the close season is a violation of the law. In a statement issued by the league yesterday it was said that the carcasses of ten deer and twenty-nine quails were found in Silz's place after he had been warned to comply with the game laws, and that a test would be made of his case, even to the bringing of a civil action after the present suit is disposed of.

Can Make Vichy Water.

In an opinion written by Judge Shipman, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals has affirmed the decision of the Second Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York in the action brought by La République Française against Carl H. Schultz. The French Republic, as owner of the mineral springs at Vichy, Department Allier, asked for an injunction restraining the use of the name Vichy as applied to a manufactured mineral water, containing the same ingredients as the natural spring, made at the Carl H. Schultz mineral water factory. The application was denied by Judge Wallace in the lower court.

HE WANTED NAETHING.

A Glasgow Bon Vivant Who Was Really Satisfied.

The Rev. Alexander MacColl of Briarcliffe Manor, N. Y., a young Scotch preacher, told a story in reference to a citizen of his native town at a dinner at the Hotel Marlborough the other night, which shows that contentment is a virtue really existent in some cases.

"One of the inhabitants of Glasgow, where I was born," said he, "was making his way homeward on a certain evening, and taking a good deal more than his share of the pavement, when he encountered a Glasgow Town Councilman walking along in a respectable fashion. The Councilman, noticing our friend's unbalanced condition, stopped and shouted with wrathful dignity:

"'Whad d' ye want?'

To this his fellow-townsman blithely replied:

"'I want—naething! I'm as fu' 's I can haud.'"

HAIR CUT WHILE SHOP BURNS.

Customer Compels Barber to Finish the Job in a Grocery Store.

A one-story building was destroyed by fire at 400 East One Hundred and Twenty-first Street half an hour after noon yesterday, attended by various incidents. It burned out a barber and a tailor. The loss to them and the owner of the house was about $1,400. A defective flue started the fire.

There were four or five customers in the barber's shop when the fire started. James Baum, the proprietor, and his assistants had partly completed the work on some of them. Two men were half shaved and one a musician, had had half of a large head of hair removed.

At the alarm of fire customers, assistants, and barber ran into the street, the customers carrying their bibs and two of them some lather. The man who had been cutting the musician's hair was the only man to take his instruments. He retained the scissors and comb he had been using.

This man's customer said he could not be seen with half a head of hair, and he insisted on the job being finished at once. He led the way into a corner grocery, and sat down, while the barber's assistant followed him. Then, while the barber's shop burned and a crowd looked on at the hair cutting in amusement, the barber relieved the musician of the rest of his hair.

BRODIE GOING TO BUFFALO.

Will Enliven the Town with a Saloon and Concert Hall.

To quicken the "sporting blood" flowing in sluggish Buffalo arteries is the task Steve Brodie, bridge jumper and saloon keeper of 117 Bowery, has set for himself. Blood spilled by Charley Mitchell in his fight with Sullivan, Sullivan's colors worn in the same fight, and pieces of the dress of murderers sent to the chair are some of the Bowery novelties he proposes to transplant in Main Street, Buffalo.

"Yes, Sir," said Steve yesterday, "Buffalo is dull, dead, lifeless. Why, all the saloons look alike. They are painted yellow, and you can't tell 'em from a banker's office. I've bought a concert hall resort next to the Tifft House, on Main Street, and I'm going to paint it all green inside and wake up the town with a little Irish. Outside I'll have signs that'll be a novelty to Buffalo. On top of the building there'll be a big Brooklyn Bridge all in electric lights. Another'll be over the sidewalk.

"Inside I'll have a concert hall and bar on the ground floor, above that a gallery and room for dancing, and a hotel in the remainder. I'll reproduce all of my sporting pictures. Of course relics of famous men that could not be duplicated I'll have to take along with me. I mean, for instance, Sharkey's colors, Sullivan's trunks, and Mitchell's colors. I rather hate to leave the Bowery. I've made over $100,000 here, but I expect to do Buffalo some good and make some money, especially during the Pan-American Exposition. My place here will be run by my brother, and I shall move my family to Buffalo."

Boston City Employes Discharged.

BOSTON, Jan. 27.—Another permanent reduction in the Water Department force of this city, to the extent of 93 discharges, went into effect to-day. This is in addition to the permanent cut-down of 72 men about two weeks ago, making in all 165 discharges. There are 64 men on the suspension list. The entire lay-off up to date is 229.

TWO IN AMBULANCE TOO MANY.

Intrusion Restores Patient Whose Illness Startled Car Passengers.

A Broadway cable car had bumped its way down to a point opposite Barclay Street yesterday morning when, amid the startled exclamations of women, a tall, lank young man slipped from his seat to the floor. His eyes rolled and froth lined his lips. The car stopped, blocking those behind, while all hands aboard held a consultation.

A policeman and the conductor carried the convulsed, trembling young man toward the Post Office, just outside of which a Hudson Street Hospital ambulance was standing. As they carefully pushed him in the Post Office doors opened. Four policemen came out carrying a man apparently unconscious. He, too, was placed in the ambulance. In the process his hat fell across the other's face. The first patient, startled at this intrusion upon his privacy, sat up suddenly. Then he crawled out of the ambulance.

"You get back there; you're ill," the surgeon ordered.

"No; I'm all right," the other replied, as he walked away.

Surgeon Sherrill took his remaining patient to the hospital, where an examination convinced him that the man was intoxicated. He was turned over to the police of the City Hall Station, able to talk. He described himself as Alfred J. Hutton, a printer, of 1,338 Third Avenue.

New Post Office for Long Island City.

Contracts have been made for a new Post Office for Long Island City. The building will be put up as a private enterprise, and the ground floor will be leased by the Government. It will be located at 57 Jackson Avenue.

At the Play and With the Players

The illness of Miss Nethersole and the postponement of "Sapho" left the first honors of the theatrical week "easy" between "The Belle of New York" and the new ballet spectacle at the big music hall called the New York Theatre. The recurrence of the first-named piece at the Casino kept that house crowded all the week, but by the least effusive and most discriminating audiences ever seen in the abiding place of burletta. Why it was I cannot tell, but encores were infrequent and violent bursts of applause from disingenuous persons in the rear of the house were gravely hissed down.

Miss Edna May, who is as pretty as ever, but a trifle more affected in her manner than when she went to London, was politely requested to sing one or two of her songs twice; and the disposition to induce Miss Toby Claude to linger on the stage was noticeable, perhaps because Miss Claude is a stranger, deserving welcome on that account, certainly not because she is extraordinarily gifted in a musical way. There is a hint of the uncanny in the appearance and actions of this knee-high comédienne, and though she is not grotesque, like the queer little cockney, Louie Freear, who failed of appreciation here last Summer, and has since made a great hit on her native heath as Shakespeare's Puck, she seems more like a precocious child or an elfin than a woman capable of awakening the passion of love. She and her husband, Mr. Carleton, might well have a play written for them on the subject of Jack the Giant Killer.

To tell the plain truth, "The Belle of New York" is not at this late day a fertile or suggestive topic, even though it ran for nearly 700 nights in London. It is a very good show of its kind, though it always was a trifle slow and is slower than ever now. It is very well done, but genius is not conspicuous in the company. There is no doubt that it will draw crowds while it is on view, but Mr. Lederer is rushing preparations for his new musical piece, "The Casino Girl," in which Virginia Earle will reappear, with what sort of a welcome may very well be imagined. There is no rival of Miss Earle, in the present stage of her artistic development, in "The Belle of New York." Since the era of "The Lady Slavey" she has acted Ariel in "The Tempest," and has had a course of training in the old comedies, to say nothing of her triumphs in "The Geisha," "The Circus Girl," and "A Runaway Girl."

"Broadway to Tokio" is the liveliest of recent productions of its kind, and excepting a few of Mr. Joseph Ott's harmless but Mormon remarks, it is absolutely free from indelicacy. The children may safely be taken to see the new spectacle, for the ballet has always been regarded as safe entertainment for them, and the dresses of the ballet girls are as modest as such dresses can be. The two elaborate divertissements are of fairly dazzling beauty.

There is no doubt, therefore, that the piece will run as long and as profitably as its less lively predecessor, "The Man in the Moon." Yet it suggests few remarks in the way of criticism. A great deal of money has been wisely spent upon it, and while the play itself is not remarkable for wit or ingenuity, it serves, while the incidental specialties are well chosen and well executed. The music of Mr. A. B. Sloane is of the least ambitious sort, but is "catchy" and one or two airs will become very popular. The scenic pictures are pleasing and all the performers are competent.

The greatest individual triumph of the first night was Fay Templeton's. She never before made so pronounced a hit in all her varied career since she acted Robin Goodfellow in "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Grand Opera House. A large fund of personal humor, an attractive presence, a good voice, and facile mimetic powers are in Miss Templeton's equipment. She has nothing to do in the new piece of a remarkable sort. The burlesque cake walk is now in every variety show—why, the most tolerant and tireless observer could not tell. Imitations of the accent and motions of the French chansonette singers like Fougère are common. But it is the way Miss Templeton does these things that makes them tell. If she takes the tide she has now reached at the flood it will surely lead her on to fortune. That much is easily said.

Nothing can be quite so easily said about "The Surprises of Love" at the Lyceum Theatre. The play is not wholly bad either in conception or in execution, and it is novel enough to excite some sort of curiosity. It is grossly and intentionally indecent in one scene, and is elsewhere as innocuous as a child's story book. The piquant fancy on which it is founded suggests such plays as Gilbert's "Tom Cobb," while the main idea in the development was clearly taken from Octave Feuillet's "Romance of a Poor Young Man" and purposely perverted. Manuel, Marquis de Champcey, that ineffable hero of our youth, jumped at the risk of his life to save the reputation of his lady love from the whisper of slander. Leduc, locked by mistake in a garden pavilion with the lady of his love, has no chance to jump and would not if he could. Instead, he leers, and when the curtain falls, some of us remember Boucicault's "Pauvrette," one of the many plays of that happy and storied age when the drama was never immoral. Then, in another act, the satyr dances. With it all, one yawns and rubs his eyes to keep from nodding. It is all, after the rather smart first act, so dull. I doubt very much if MM. Bilhaud and Carre will get their new play acted in Paris.

Yet some of it might seem better with better acting. The gentleman from London who tries to act the vociferous and jealous Academician has the most considerable part in the piece, if not the best, and he cannot act it at all. His symbols for pride of achievement, for vanity, for indignation, for suspicion, are quite unintelligible. So with two of the young women who represent amorous adulators of the hero. They are clearly nothing of the sort, but rather nervous and overemphatic theatrical novices, and the uncertain youth, named Eric Hope on the bill, makes nothing of his part.

On the other hand, no fault is reasonably to be found with Miss de Wolfe's acting in the rôle of the fascinating widow; she is graceful and adroit, and looks a picture. Miss Olive May, as pretty as ever, (like the other May girl,) overdid her part just a bit at the first performance, but there was much genuine humor in her work. Margaret Robinson sang her little song with just the right effect of simplicity, and acted her equally small part with a proper understanding of its value.

"The Surprises of Love" is very prettily set, and it had a respectful hearing the first night, but it is another mistake of a season of many mistakes.

The remarks on Pinero's "Gay Lord Quex," quoted from some of the German newspaper critics, are droll reading. The translation of the play which has had such a long run in London seems to have failed utterly in Berlin. Perhaps we shall not like the piece here. But that will not prove that Pinero is not a first-rate dramatist or that modern English drama is "the most backward and coarsest of all forms of literature." Backwardness, as a fact, and coarseness, also, are too conspicuous in the contemporary German drama. Still, there is no reason why Pinero's play should have been translated for Berlin. There are enough starving German playwrights now.

Another recent discussion in Germany which concerns English-speaking playgoers slightly was started by von Berger's lecture in Berlin on "How to Act Shakespeare," in which he declared that no scenery or stage machinery should be used in performances of the Elizabethan plays. All the same, Prof. von Berger is mistaken. Shakespeare should have every pictorial and mechanical device demanded for Wagner, nothing too much in any department, but in all the best fruits of modern ingenuity and improved stagecraft.

The steady prosperity of the re-established stock company system, wherever it is associated with wise management, and the recent failure to draw, in various cities, of certain "high priced" attractions upon which large hopes had been founded, are significant facts. Present theatrical development is clearly toward the multiplication of clean, well-managed playhouses for the people of moderate means.

The theatres in Boston run on the "popular price" plan have been making a great deal of money lately, while many of the stars and combinations have found Boston a "poor show town." A capitalist who would dare to "back" a big, well-equipped stock theatre centrally located in this city, where the plays of Shakespeare and other worthy and famous works could be acted and the prices of admission could be kept within the limits of the purses of the moderately poor, would surely deserve credit as a philanthropist, and would probably increase his capital if he secured the right advisers.

EDWARD A. DITHMAR.

THIS WEEK'S NEW BILLS.

The deferred engagement of Olga Nethersole will begin at Wallack's Theatre tomorrow night when Clyde Fitch's dramatization of Alphonse Daudet's "Sapho" will be acted for the first time in New York. This play has drawn great crowds in many other cities and has caused a hot but futile discussion of the relation of morality to art in many newspapers.

The protagonist in "Sapho" is a bad woman, to use a familiar phrase which is sufficiently descriptive, and her name is Fanny Legrand, but she is called after the Poetess of Lesbos because of her powers of fascination. Sapho (the French spelling of the name is retained in the play) has a son by a felon named Flamant, who is serving a term in prison, and this child whom she loves is in a charitable institution. She meets Jean Gaussin, fascinates and conquers him, and lives with him as his wife. This new life is the nearest to a respectable existence she has ever known. She is very happy in her love of Gaussin and yearns for her child to share her happiness. Gaussin gives her permission to adopt a child and she thus gains possession of her own boy, but she is betrayed by an acquaintance and this leads to the first misunderstanding with Gaussin and finally to the rupture of their relations and her departure with the liberated convict and their son to lead a new life.

Life is painted without idealization in this play, and the objection urged against it is that it deals with phases of social life that art should ignore. This opens up a big question which is not likely to have any satisfactory answer in a newspaper discussion of the morality of a play. Few persons who have ever taken the aggressive side in such an argument, from old Jeremy Collier down, have had any clear conception of the province of art, or any sympathy with artistic aspirations, but the modern theatre is a huge democratic diversion, and art, after all, is only a small element in its complex constitution. It would decidedly be better for the moral tone of the chattering multitude if the theatre could be compelled to avoid such subjects as the subject of "Sapho." But that fact has nothing to do with its artistic quality.

Miss Nethersole's acting in "Sapho" has been praised in hysterical terms in some of the newspapers of other cities. If it is nearly as good as has been said, it is much better than any acting she has ever done in this town. Her supporting company includes Hamilton Revelle, John Glendenning, Helen Braithwaite, Fred Thorne, Nellie Thorne, and others.

Mr. Conried's programme of German plays at the Irving Place Theatre for the next few weeks is full of promise. To-morrow and Tuesday nights "Im Weissen Roess'l" will be the play. Wednesday night Klaus Arsen's schauspiel called "Am Spieltisch des Lebens," ("The Gamble of Life,") will be acted for the first time in this country. The cast will include Carl Bender, Julius Strobl, Emmy Scroth, Martha Schiffel, Gustav von Seyffertitz, and Meyer-Eigen.

In preparation Mr. Conried has "Der Goldene Kafig," by Felix Phillippi, "Einsame Menschen," by Gerhardt Hauptmann; "Hans," by Max Dreyer, and "Wieder im Roess'l." The story of this week's new play, "Am Spieltisch des Lebens," is told as follows:

Lieut. von Rietberg, a social favorite, and admired by women, is a gambler, and near ruin. He has made the acquaintance of the young Countess Ellen von Triburg, an orphan, and heiress to an immense estate, who in her innocence shows him plainly that she is in love with him. Although earlier ties hold him to the Countess Eva von Brandt, he is unable to resist the fascination of Ellen. Countess Eva has refused the offer of a wealthy elderly admirer, Count von Stengel, but when she sees the fickleness of Lieut. von Rietberg she changes her mind and weds the old Count.

Both couples are living on adjoining estates. Countess Eva is determined never to see Rietberg again, except where a meeting in the presence of others, is unavoidable, and even refuses his proffered friendship, and declines to listen to his explanations. Social obligations, however, bring the two families, whose homes adjoin, into intimacy.

Rietberg and his young wife are for a few days the guests of Count Stengel. During their visit, an old friend of Rietberg, a former officer, Zettnitz, appears on the scene. After an adventurous life in America, he returns to marry the girl he deserted years ago. He gets acquainted with Count Stengel who invites him to spend a night at the castle. Zettnitz is the only man who knew of Rietberg's affair with the Countess Eva, and his presence causes uneasiness to both. At supper he imbibes too much, and after quarreling with Rietberg, discloses the secret, which overwhelms Count Stengel. After a night of meditation this nobleman, however, concludes that his wife's conduct since their marriage has been exemplary, and that her preceding life does not concern him, and therefore forgives her, and offers Rietberg his friendship, but to avoid too much intimacy, he decides to spend the Winter in the South. All three promise to keep this secret from Rietberg's young wife, Countess Ellen, whose innocent happiness is touching. Zettnitz joins in the reconciliation and starts on his further journey, accompanied by the good wishes of those whose peace he so nearly destroyed.

After the performance of "The Degenerates" at the Garden Theatre to-morrow and every night this week, Mrs. Langtry, attired in khaki, will recite "The Absent-Minded Beggar," Kipling's patriotic verses. She explains that a large English contingent in New York demands this recognition of the prevailing English idea by an English actress. She recited the poem with great success in London. While she is substituting her khaki dress for Mrs. Trevelyan's elaborate morning toilet the orchestra will play Sir Arthur Sullivan's music composed for the poem.

A TALK WITH CLYDE FITCH

The Successful Dramatist on His Calling and Its Prospects in America.

The house of Clyde Fitch, the dramatist, looks as if it belonged to him, and as if it was, indeed, the birthplace of plays. It is a quaint little house up in one of the streets among the thirties on the east side, and it is filled with all sorts of quaint and curious things of past but unforgotten days, charming, original pieces of Old World furniture, fountains in interesting marble basins that came from Florence, a real Della Robbia, which Mr. Fitch found and superintended the removal from the wall of a chapel in an old Italian town; funny little heads which hold bracket candlesticks, tapestries, all sorts of things which a collector picks up and for which Mr. Fitch spends his Summers rambling around searching in out-of-the-way towns abroad.

One of the most interesting rooms in the house is the study, done in green, a restful shade, green hangings, comfortable couches, books, of course, and a desk, a good place to work in and a good place in which to talk, and it was there that the dramatist had something to say about plays the other day.

But Mr. Fitch is a modest man, and while he has his own opinions about different things, he does not like to give them out in the form of a monologue. The reporter who called on Mr. Fitch the other day had a long list of questions to ask him, and if they are not repeated, it is because questions, after they have called forth a response, are stupid and uninteresting and take up valuable space. And if full justice is not given to the answers it is because a man who talks fluently and well can never be adequately reproduced in the limited space of a newspaper.

The theatre is probably the most democratic of amusements, the one enjoyed by the greatest number of people of all kinds and conditions, so a man who writes successful plays may be supposed to know about as well as any one what the taste of the public demands. That was the substance of the first question asked.

"Perhaps it is so," said Mr. Fitch, speaking of the theatre as a popular amusement, "though I suppose there are a good many people who never go near a theatre. Still I know that before I had anything to do with plays I was interested in everything connected with the stage. I didn't know then the methods people took to bring themselves before the public and I read everything written about the stage and believed every word of it.

PUBLIC TASTE AND THE THEATRE.

"But can it be said that the public has a taste for any particular kind of a play? How can it be when in a single season there will be so many different plays that are great successes? You will have a romantic costume play, a farce comedy, a dramatization of a book; the people will crowd to see an innocent, bright, clean little play, which might be said to be just the kind of a play they wanted, if at the same time they were not crowding another theatre where there was a play which was just the opposite. There may be, perhaps, a season when there is a preponderance of romantic plays, but that is because one romantic play has been a success and every one then rushes in haste after a romantic play, because they think those are the plays the people like.

"It is hard to tell what kind of a play will make a success. Good plays are not all successful, and some plays that are not considered good make very popular productions. It seems to me that no play will ever succeed unless there is something really good in it—that is, if it is a play which does not have illegitimate advertisement. A play may be licentious; that fact is advertised; people flock to see it on that account, and it achieves a certain success. But for other plays, when they succeed there must be some good reason for it. People like novelty and they like a love story in a play; all mankind loves a lover.

"While there are good plays that have not succeeded, I believe that all the great plays that come down to us, as I find from studying the history of the stage—the plays of the Elizabethan period, the Shakespearean drama, the plays of the Georgian period. Sheridan's plays—met with an immediate success. Because one dramatization of a book has succeeded, it is not at all certain that another will, though a popular book always has a certain amount of patronage assured for the play. The people who have read it and liked it are very sure to go and see how they like it as a play. A good many things go to make up the success of a play. A play may be written which is not so good in itself, but it will give some popular actor a chance to appear in a new way, and the audiences are grateful for the opportunity of seeing a favorite in the play, and it becomes popular.

A popular actor and a popular book will always give a play a certain chance aside from its own merits. It would not be difficult to say that such and such a class of people like such a kind of a play, but taking the people as a whole, the people all over the country, it cannot be said that they like one kind of a play more than another, though for the drama as a whole the taste of the people is constantly improving.

"There is not much to be said about the choice of the subject for a play. History has always interested and amused me, and it is a pleasure for me to write on historical subjects. I had always considered Nathan Hale an interesting character. He was noble and manly; that little love scene might have occurred in his life, and so the play developed around him.

"There is no reason why the history and legends of the country should not be used in this way. Barbara Frietchie must have been an old woman confined to her room at the time when Stonewall Jackson passed through Fredericksburg. I got my details about it from a man who was with him. Whittier used the story, as it pleased him, and there was no reason why it should not be used in another form.

"There is a great field in America, I believe, for plays dealing with the history of the country. Such plays in England are made social documents. There is no reason why we should not have them. To give value to such plays the manners and customs of the people at the time described must be given with accuracy of detail. The object of a play is to entertain and amuse; it is not to teach or to preach. To preach is the work of the churches, and yet it should be artistically accurate and in no way demoralizing.

PLAYS WRITTEN TO FIT ACTORS.

"In writing a play for an individual there is usually an attempt to throw one's self in sympathy with him to look upon the character from the point of view of the person who is to take the part. It does not make the work more difficult, and perhaps it is rather a help to have in mind one person always in connection with the character. But the writer cannot be too much hampered by this. The first object is the story, and it must tell itself in its own way naturally; but if the people who are to take certain characters are always in mind, they will not be asked to do anything entirely out of the range of their possibilities in acting. And yet this is not at all necessary to the success of the actor. "Nathan Hale," in which Mr. Goodwin made a conspicuous success, was not written for him.

"There was no special reason for choosing the plot of 'The Cowboy and the Lady,' in which he is now playing, except that it is radically different from 'Nathan Hale.' He had had a successful run of a romantic costume play, and the Western life of today would give him something entirely new.

"Is it easier or more difficult to write a play than a novel? It requires an entirely different kind of ability. There are novelists who cannot write plays or dramatize their own books, and there are playwrights who cannot write books. There are a great many more books written than plays, though I don't know that it could be said that there are more good books written than there are good plays. Still, nowadays every one writes plays. Every one I know is writing a play, and I have learned—what is it they say?—'All roads lead to Rome,' and all invitations to offers of collaboration."

Mr. Fitch's correspondence is this respect is interesting. He has letters from all sorts of people who wish to act in his plays, assist him in writing them, or have him assist them in their own productions. One young woman is anxious to go on the stage was a teacher of Greek and Latin who wished to bring out the Greek and Roman drama. She told of her aspirations, as well as her personal appearance, height, weight, and complexion. Some one of his own name, some one of whom he had never heard, addressed him as "Dear Cousin." One of the most amusing letters was from an embryo play writer in an Ohio restaurant, a man who was undoubtedly a foreigner, and possibly one of the proprietors of the restaurant, as the name was the same. The letter ran thus, spelling and punctuation copied:

"Dear Sir. Mr. Clyde Fitch. I thought I would write you a few lines in regard to Theatre or Opera plays. For the past year I have been spending considerable time to the making up of plays. It seems as though it was born within one's brain, or it is natural to the one who is possessed of such a mind. Now I have what you might say composed or studied out over a dozen plays, which I believe would make if properly arranged, would meet with success. I have visited most all the leading shows that have showed at our city the last season, and I have got an idea what a fake is an what a success is, and my plays are of no humbug in the least, as I have not got the brain to write something that is simple, they are of talent and interest. Now I don't want any of your plays, or any money, but I am a new beginner and I want to stand in with some one that knows the trade and learn from them. Read my letter and think a moment, if some one young comes to you, and wants to learn. I don't think there is anyone that would turn them away. All I ask from you is give me a few pointers about plays, also explain how a play is written down to be put upon the market, and so forth. Now don't think I am trying to humbug you for I am not that kind. I have found out what my talent is for and I want to get someone who understands something about it to give me a clearer idea of it. For the part in making up new plays is no trouble to me. My brain seems to be always at something and I have no trouble in composing a play, but I want to know how to start the business. I ask you this favor. If I am a stranger. I secured your address from a New York dramatic paper, and thought there was no harm in writing, and should you give me some good advice. I am sure I will repay you. Enclose find stamp and my address."

Some of the letters are answered and some are not. The writer of this epistle being apparently very much in earnest a reply was sent saying something to the effect that as there was as a rule much more chance of success as a writer than as a playwright, the young aspirant with the fertile brain had better remain in his present business.

THE NATIVE DRAMA.

Going on to speak of the drama in America and the American dramatists, Mr. Fitch was enthusiastic.

"America is the great growing country in everything," he said, "and the American drama is not going to the dogs. We are making a wonderful growth in literature, art, and architecture, and the drama is not failing behind, it is improving with the rest. How does our work of to-day compare with the contemporaneous work in other countries? To be sure, the art of painting was started in Italy, but the modern art of the country is not worth a row of pins. We can compare favorably with other countries in all the arts. We have not started a school of painting in America because our artists go abroad to study, but we have a school of architecture, and we are putting up some wonderfully fine and beautiful buildings. We are writing good books; we have fine actors and actresses, and our dramatists are trying to write better plays.

"They say that American dramatists do not have a fair chance, but if we take a healthy, normal view of the situation we need not be discouraged. We have a larger field to fight against than writers of other countries. We have plays from England, Germany, and France, as well as the plays from our own friendly rivals in this country—and we should consider the latter only friendly rivals, for the success which comes to one of us means success for us all.

"In the other countries they fill their theatres with the plays by their own writers. That is so in Germany; in France they have their own, and while some of our plays have been successful in England, they are not anxious for them. But plays from those countries are brought here, and we cannot expect it to be otherwise. It would be madness to ask a manager not to take a play which has been proved to be successful. They are writing fine plays in England, and very good in France, but there is not a bit of doubt of the future of the drama in America.

"American dramatists say that preference is given to foreign plays, but that is not exactly so. We have got to fight and work hard, and if we take a healthy, manly view of it, there is no doubt but we shall succeed. We have a great many theatres to fill, and we are producing nearly as many plays as they are in England. We must find out, if our plays are not successful, where the trouble lies. It has been demonstrated that good American plays can be successful and have an enormous vogue. The people don't care who write plays. They want to be entertained and amused, and if American dramatists write the plays that will do this they will succeed."

RICH DRESSING IN PLAYS

Miss Elizabeth Tyree Talks Sensibly on That and Other Theatrical Subjects.

"Actresses are all getting very tired of the elaborate dressing we have on the stage now, I think," said Miss Elizabeth Tyree, talking about dressing parts one day last week. "They would be glad to return to the old-time simplicity. Think of it, a woman on the stage at one time, if she had a black dress and a white one, would get along very well with a change of ribbons for whatever part she was called upon to take. Now the public demands elaborate dressing, and it is something of a task to realize expectations.

"For one thing, it takes a great deal of money to dress a part elegantly and thoughtfully as well. It is much more difficult to get modern, up-to-date gowns than to dress a 'character' part. Is it a trouble to plan the gowns? Yes, indeed, it is. I lie awake nights planning a modern gown, and then it does not always come up to my expectations.

"As for the expense, it is a great deal more expensive dressing now than it was even three or four years ago. Materials are more expensive, and it costs a great deal more for the making. At one time you could get a gown for $45 or $50, but now you can't get one for less than $100 or $125. The dressmakers consider that their reputations are at stake, and they insist upon putting just so much work into a gown and bringing up the cost to about so much.

"Just look at the straps on the skirt of this gown." [It was the pretty, tan gown that Miss Tyree wears as Connie in "The Manoeuvres of Jane," cut and brought up through the cloth and stitched.] It is a great deal of work, but who in the audience do you suppose sees it? Not one, and yet you can't have it made more simply. My pink gown is a mass of stitching that no one sees.

"And the gowns have to be new and original, for people look for good styles on the stage. One can't wear a model gown. I wouldn't wear one. Women on the stage ought not to be expected to compete in dressing with society women who spend several hundred dollars on each of their gowns.

"It is different in Paris, where different modistes dress the actresses for the privilege of having their work seen on the stage, and do not spare time or expense in doing it. Here the actresses or the management provide all the gowns. The thin materials, laces, chiffons, and tulles, which are so perishable, increase the expense of modern gowns.

"One thing stress might be laid on in gowns for the stage is the need of dressmakers who will consider the use to be made of them and consider hygiene as well as art in the work. Now dressmakers make dresses so snug and draw them in so tightly over the diaphragm that you can't speak in them, Mr. and Mrs. Tom McIntosh, and the Zara troupe.

"The Sunday before a new play I usually spend in loosening the sleeves and getting a little more room in the collars of the gowns that have come home late the night before. Then when the night of the play comes I am all tired out instead of being fresh, as I ought to be. If the dressmaker could get a little idea and know what you are going to do in a gown—for instance, throw your arms around some one's neck—she would be more likely to give you room enough to do it.

"Everything comes out right finally, of course, as I say I alter my gowns. Everything is too carefully arranged on the stage now for accidents to happen—and they are not accidents, they are tragedies.

"We did meet with one accident, though, with 'Trelawny' in Chicago, where Miss Mannering's gowns were lost, and we didn't know it until 12 o'clock, and that afternoon we made her two gowns and got the rest of the things together between us, and that in a play like 'Trelawny.'

"No, it doesn't make any difference to me what my costumes are, whether they are pretty or humorous, if they only help to bring out the part I am playing. I like the costumes best in the best parts. Where the character is pronounced and clear-cut the costumes are likely to be, and they should be. I don't believe small, unimportant parts should be accentuated any more than the smaller objects should be in a picture. They are important as a part of the detail work, but they should not be brought prominently into the foreground.

"People can hardly understand how much difference a costume makes to one's feelings. If you are not dressed properly, it is almost impossible to act the part. People off the stage have the same feeling to some extent. The way a woman is dressed has a great deal to do with the way she feels, and if she is dressed, for instance, some times with particular daintiness it can almost be felt in her manners.

"And, I suppose, it is more so with actresses because we are more temperamental. We make an effort to feel the part for which we are dressed. Two parts that I liked were in 'The Amazons' and 'Trelawny.' I had never worn a man's costume before, and it didn't seem to me that I could ever feel like a boy. But then when I had on the costume, an up-to-date man's riding suit with a nice little cutaway coat, I felt as I think my brother would have felt. Then in 'Trelawny' I didn't feel as though I could wear the tights, but when it came to putting them on it was quite different. I was another person.

"No, I don't like the part of Connie in this play as well as some others. I don't think I am as well suited to it. I don't think I look it. The woman who acted it in England had long, rather lynx-like eyes. I have round eyes and a round face. I am naturally outspoken and haven't any of Connie's attributes.

"Why do I call myself Elizabeth, instead of Bessie, now? It was about four years ago, and I came to the conclusion that Elizabeth was more dignified. I may not always play soubrette parts, though I am not ambitious to do heavy work. I think I am best suited to comedy. But we do grow old on the stage, though they won't let us; names that end in 'ie' are not dignified and it was well to change before it became necessary.

"As for costumes, rehearsing every day, and going late in the afternoon to be fitted, it is hard work, and an actress earns every cent of the money she makes then. If she doesn't at any other time; everything else about the stage is delightful, and stage gowns make all other gowns seem unimportant and not worth while. Off the stage it is pleasant to dress as simply as possible."

VARIOUS DRAMATIC TOPICS.

Julia Marlowe will act Barbara Frietchie in Cleveland this week, Mme. Modjeska will appear in Buffalo, W. H. Crane will be in Boston, and Sir Henry Irving, accompanied by Ellen Terry, will visit cities of Ohio and Indiana. Richard Mansfield will fulfill an engagement in Newark, N. J.; "Arizona" will be acted in Canadian towns, and Stuart Robson will impersonate Oliver Goldsmith in some of the Southern cities. Julia Arthur will be in Chicago, John Drew in Baltimore, and Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon in Milwaukee.

T. D. Frawley lately produced, with his stock company, in San Francisco, Pinero's fanciful comedy, "The Princess and the Butterfly," which ran so well at the Lyceum Theatre in this city two seasons ago. Mary Hampton acted the Princess, while in the rôle of Fay Zulland, a débutante, Mary Scott, in private life Mrs. Neville Castle of San Francisco, seems to have made a noteworthy hit.

The drama called "Lord Byron," lately produced by James Young at Norfolk, Va., appears to be a rather commonplace piece of work, considering the romantic and historical importance of the subject. A revival of interest in Byron, who is esteemed by many the second in rank among English poets, and a writer whose fame is for all time, is quite within probability, and one of the signs of such a revival might be the production of plays and novels dealing with phases of Byron's life. But, according to a sketch of the plot of Miss Rida Louise Johnson's play, it is bad history and is of small value as a study of the poet's character. Mrs. Clermont, the hated heroine of "A Sketch," Lady Byron's companion, to whom Byron attributed his marital unhappiness; the unidentified Thyrza, and other personages who should, it seems, suggest themselves to the dramatist, are missing. Lady Caroline Lamb, whose husband, afterward Lord Melbourne, is curiously called Sir Charles Lamb, and is killed in a melodramatic and impossible duel with the poet, is made the rival of Lady Byron and the cause of that sweet-tempered and gracious woman's return to her father. The Countess Guiccioli appears as the Countess Varjoli. The single cup fashioned from a skull and used in some fairly frugal roystering at Newstead, becomes a whole sideboard full of skulls employed in mad revels. There are four acts and the scene is shifted from England to Greece, the play ending with its hero's death brought about by the treachery of his secretary.

Few variety "turns" of the present hour are as clever as that of the "team" comprising Mr. Nick Long and Miss Idalene Cotton. The lady is a daughter of Ben Cotton, the popular comedian, and she made her first appearance on the stage in W. H. Crane's company a few years ago. She is of short stature, and has a fine head of auburn hair, which is very serviceable in her imitation of Mrs. Leslie Carter as Zaza. But in the "turn" under notice Miss Cotton wears black hair combed close to the sides of her head and represents an Italian woman who helps her husband sell bananas in the streets. They come on in the Longacre Square scene of "Broadway to Tokio," at the New York, with their pushcart, and after the accustomed "sidewalk conversation" in Dago English offer a clever travesty of Italian opera, in a bit from "Ernani," and an imitation of Duse and her leading man in the ball room scene of "Camille."

The device of painted dresses for the dancers, so successfully introduced in the famous orchid ballet in "The Man in the Moon" at the New York Theatre, is employed again to excellent effect in the Firefly Ballet of the new spectacle, "Broadway to Tokio." The dancers now represent insects instead of flowers, and each girl is elaborately installed with an electric lighting plant of great magnitude. Every dancer must carry enough incandescent lamps about her person to fairly illuminate a comparatively long thoroughfare on a moonless night. The dancing in the new spectacle is all admirable. Of the solo dancers, Mlle. Fanchonette is the leader, and she is plump but agile, graceful, and expert, and has a remarkably pretty face. Though they all pleasantly beam upon the spectators, this lady and her associates, the Mahr sisters, who are lithe and comely girls, do not use the sad stereotyped smile of the ballet.

Only once in the present performances of "The Belle of New York" at the Casino, is the run of the piece in London referred to. In the candy shop scene the elder Bronson has a colloquy with the young ladies of Miss Cora Angelique's comic opera company. One of them addresses a facetious remark to him with an English affectation of speech. "Ah!" he remarks, "I see you brought your new dialect back with you." The actor of Old Bronson, E. J. Connelly, is one of those rasping irrepressible comedians like the Londoner, Lonnen, who are never popular here. Mr. Connelly is quite devoid, it seems, of native humor. It is not alone the intrusive memory of Dan Daly's funny performance that makes his wheezing seem so feeble. The part is exceptionally rich and any comedian with a fund of personal humor could make a great hit with it.

"A Juliet of the People," a one-act drama, by Willis Steell, setting forth in simple and natural action and with a touch of poetical feeling, the incidents of a tragedy in humble life, much in the manner of the stories of the operas of the latest Italian school, had a trial performance last week at an exhibition matinée of a school of acting. Its personages are humble Veronese of the present day. Some of them abide in the ruined home of the Capulets, transformed by the cruel irony of fate and time, into a tenement for the poor. A Juliet loves a Romeo and a jealous rival slays him. Mr. Steell has not been heard from hitherto as a playwright, though other plays by him are spoken of now as theatrical possibilities of the future. He once published a volume of poems and his book of travels in Spain is pleasantly remembered. He is a journalist by trade, but that, as a means of introduction to art or literature nowadays, is no better than being a ship-carpenter or a market-gardener.

Toby Claude, the petite Fifi of "The Belle of New York," is not a child, but a married woman and the wife of William P. Carleton, the young giant, who figures now as Young Bronson, the hero of the burletta. They are certainly a strangely matched couple, for there must be three feet difference in their respective heights. Miss Claude, like her husband, comes of a theatrical family. He is a son of William T. Carleton, the famous baritone singer, now of "Three Little Lambs," a nephew of Herbert Standing, the popular London comedian, and a cousin of Guy Standing of the Empire Theatre company. Mr. Carleton began his stage career in small rôles at Daly's Theatre some years ago, and thereafter played the juvenile rôle in "The Cherry Pickers" at the Fourteenth Street Theatre. He made a hit as Harry Bronson at the Shaftesbury Theatre, in London, after Harry Davenport resigned the part to return home, and thinks seriously of going back to England to pursue his professional career there.

Besides Shakespeare's "Henry V.," in which he will impersonate the dashing hero of Agincourt, and Herman Merivale's version of "Don Juan," Richard Mansfield intends to produce the new play upon which Stephen Phillips, the young English poet, is now at work. This has no title as yet. Its subject is historical and the action passes in the Middle Ages. Likely this drama will be acted in New York before it is seen in London. George Alexander, however, has promised to produce Phillips's other play, "Paolo and Francesca," at his St. James's Theatre before he comes to this country in 1901.

It seeems strange to find in a new, up-to-date comic entertainment the employment of funmaking devices so ancient as those in the representation of the interior of a Pullman car in the spectacle at the New York Theatre. There the authors deliberately hark back to the year 1878 and "The Tourists in a Pullman Palace Car," in which large, plump W. A. Mestayer, lithe Theresa Vaughan, and a number of other comedians made appreciable fame and much money. The humors of the shouting train boy, the gruff conductor, the rapacious porter, and the imitation of the motion of the train by the swaying and bounding bodies of the passengers are all reproduced. Instead of an invasion of Indians there is a visit of Salvation lasses and cowboys, while the introduction of a Mormon elder and his large family may recall to a very few old staggers the "Deseret Deserted" of the fifties. This burlesque play was done at Wallack's at the time of a Mormon excitement. The present revival of the old fun, of course, is due to the notoriety of the Roberts case.

Next week there will be another rush of new plays. Monday night, Feb. 5, will be one of the busiest of the season for habitual and professional "first nighters." Mrs. Craigie's society play, which will introduce a profusion of elegant toilets worn by many charming women, will be acted at Daly's; Mr. Goodwin will produce at the Knickerbocker an entirely new piece, by Henry V. Esmond, called "When We Were Twenty-one," in which he, Maxine Elliott, and Harry Woodruff will have important parts, and a new farce from the French "Coralie et Cie," will be given at the Madison Square Theatre. "The Ambassador" deals only with the nicest kind of nice folks, so far as social station is concerned. The action passes in Paris and London among people who are always dining, wining, and giving fêtes to each other. Tuesday night, Feb. 6, a play said to have been taken from the French by Henry St. Maur, and called "Countess Chiffon," will be produced at the Fifth Avenue Theatre.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

MADISON SQUARE THEATRE.—"Wheels Within Wheels" is continued, and it will remain one week longer.

HERALD SQUARE THEATRE.—"Naughty Anthony" will begin its fourth week to-morrow evening. The houses are still good.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.—Manager Knowles announces the last week of "Three Little Lambs." Miss Adele Ritchie has entirely recovered and appears nightly.

HAMMERSTEIN'S VICTORIA.—Jerome Sykes and Mrs. Edna Wallace Hopper in "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp" are attracting large audiences and evidently pleasing them.

BIJOU THEATRE.—May Irwin is still defying the flight of time with her performances of "Sister Mary." The houses are still large and the end of the run is not yet in sight.

BROADWAY THEATRE.—"Ben-Hur" begins the tenth week of its career to-morrow evening. There is as yet not the slightest sign of diminishing interest in this production.

EMPIRE THEATRE.—The success the Empire company has met with in its new play, "Brother Officers," indicates that there will be no prospects of a change of bill for a long time.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—Ward and Vokes, the comedians, begin an engagement, when they will present for the first time in this city a new farce-comedy called "The Floor Walkers."

FOURTEENTH STREET THEATRE.—Chauncey Olcott, who comes to this city to-morrow night to begin his annual engagement, will again be seen in his Irish drama entitled "A Romance of Athlone."

CRITERION THEATRE.—It is evident from the business Miss Maude Adams is doing with "The Little Minister" that she could remain all season, but contracts made for her appearance in other cities prevent it.

MANHATTAN THEATRE.—After three months, Anna Held in "Papa's Wife" is crowding the house as during her first week. The new Hussar costumes of the chorus in the last act are very beautiful.

WEBER AND FIELDS'S MUSIC HALL.—"Whirl-i-Gig" and "Barbara Fidgety" are still playing to crowded houses. The burlesques are never twice alike in their entirety, as fresh matter is introduced at every performance.

DALY'S THEATRE.—One more week of "The Manoeuvres of Jane" remains. Mr. Frohman has decided to present "The Ambassador" on Monday, Feb. 5, in order that the entire force of his stock company may be seen in Daly's Theatre.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—"Way Down East" will celebrate the 100th performance of its present run on Feb. 5. This will also be the 300th representation of the play in New York. Manager Brady has determined to make the occasion memorable by the distribution of a souvenir.

PROCTOR'S THEATRE.—An uncommonly good vaudeville programme is offered the patrons of this house, the star feature being the Rossow midgets, Montgomery and Stone, three Merkel sisters, Charlie Rossow, Dempsey, Mitchell and company in a sketch, Diana McPhee, and Hill, and W. J. Mills.

GARRICK THEATRE.—The official announcement comes that William Gillette is to continue to present "Sherlock Holmes" throughout the entire season at this house.

HARLEM OPERA HOUSE.—Charles Frohman's comedians will begin a week's engagement in "Make Way for the Ladies" at this house.

PROCTOR'S THEATRE.—A very strong programme for continuous vaudeville is announced for this week. The bill is headed by the four Cohans, Yorke and Adams, John E. Camp, Ethel Levey, Whitney brothers, Raymond, West, and Sunshine, Lenton brothers, Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Barrow, Grace Smythe, and others.

THEATRE COMIQUE.—To-morrow the Rose Hill English Folly Company will make their appearance for a week's engagement. The curtain raiser will be a sketch called "The Jolly Old Sports." This will be followed by vaud

With four weeks and two days only of the season proper remaining, it may be said to have reached its height this morning. There are still to come a few important and interesting events, notably Mrs. Astor's annual ball to-morrow night, Mrs. Gerry's annual ball on Feb. 5, the musicale at Mrs. George Gould on Feb. 10, and a dinner dance at Mrs. Crocker's on the same day. The annual Charity Ball, which in its new quarters at the Astoria is reviving its old time popularity and prestige, will take place there on Thursday night next. In addition to these more important events there are still to come several musical Tuesday nights at Miss Callender and Miss de Forest's, the subscription concerts of the Adamowski Quartet, the second of which will take place at Mrs. Prescott Hall Butler's, 22 Park Avenue, on Feb. 5, a number of luncheons and dinners, several musicales, and, of course, the meetings of the various dancing classes, of which the more important are Mrs. Church's, Mrs. Sands's, the Fortnightlies, the De Coverely's, the Cinderellas, and the Junior Cotillion. The third De Coverley dance will take place at Sherry's on Feb. 3, and the last Junior Cotillion at Sherry's on Feb. 6, while the Fortnightlies will be danced at the Astoria on Feb. 6 and 20.

There will be several weddings during February of interest to society. Mr. James M. Brown and Miss Rebecca Patterson Cooper will be married at Shrewsbury, N. J., on Monday, Feb. 5, and the wedding of Mr. Murray W. Dodge and Miss Elsie Barker, daughter of the late Dr. Forcyce C. Barker, will take place on Feb. 6. Mr. Ellery O. Anderson and Miss Millicent Duryea will be married at the residence of the bride's parents, 80 Madison Avenue, on Thursday Feb. 15. Mr. Engene Lentilhon and Miss Florence Bergh Brown will be married in the Church of the Heavenly Rest on Tuesday, Feb. 27. The bridal parties at the weddings of Mr. Dodge and Miss Barker, and Mr. Lentilhon and Miss Bergh Brown were published in this column first on Thursday morning last, but may be repeated this morning. Miss Lilian F. Barker, a sister of Miss Barker, will be her maid of honor, and her bridesmaids will be Miss Alice Babcock and Miss Potter. Mr. Marshall Dodge, a brother of the bridegroom, will be his best man, and his ushers will be Messrs. Harry Hollister, William Dixon, Lawrence Stoddard, John Adams Dodge, Frederic Kernochan, Jr., Charles Brayton and Samuel Hawley. Miss Mary Holden of Boston will be Miss Bergh Brown's maid of honor on the occasion of the latter's marriage to Mr. Eugene Lentilhon, and Messrs. Richard King, Andrew Cochran, A. W. Whitney, and A. Maclay Rentz will be Mr. Lentilhon's ushers.

There was a quiet little wedding at Far Rockaway, L. I., on Tuesday last, which greatly interested the old Long Island family of Lawrences, and also many other old Long Island families, with which the Lawrences are connected by ties of blood and marriage. The story of this wedding was told exclusively in this column on Thursday morning last. It was that of Mr. Charles E. Sherman and Miss Hannah Newbold Lawrence, a daughter of the late Alfred Lawrence, and a sister of Mr. John Lawrence who married Miss Alice Work. Mrs. Sherman, who was an heiress to a large fortune, has for some years been devoted to charitable work. It was not thought that she would marry, and her wedding, therefore, was a great surprise, even to her relatives.

The week which opens to-day has a programme which, while it bears many pleasant incidents, is not a full one for this period of the season. Indeed, Tuesday is the only day which has much of promise. The event of the week will come to-morrow night, and will be Mrs. Astor's annual ball. This ball will follow certain lines, as always, and has become a fixed feature of the recurring Winter seasons in New York. For it Mrs. Astor has issued some 400 invitations, and there will be about 300 guests present. While it is Mrs. Astor's custom to speak of this annual entertainment as a small dance, the entertainment in lavishness of appointment and decoration and in the prominence of the guests who will attend it must be considered, in the general acceptance of that term, a ball. A number of the guests will go to the ball directly from the opera, where "The Marriage of Figaro" is to be sung, so that the opera audience will have an opportunity to see many of the handsome gowns which will be worn at the ball and which will previously be displayed in the Opera House. Mrs. Astor will probably receive alone in the great drawing room in the north house, which is her own, but is so called to distinguish it from Col. John Jacob Astor's house adjoining, when the two houses are thrown together, as they will be to-morrow night. The cotillion will be a large one, and will be led from both ends. Mr. Harry Lehr will lead one from end with Mrs. Odgen Mills, and the leader from the other end will probably dance with Mrs. Orme Wilson, Mrs. Astor's second daughter.

The last of the second series of the Bagby musical mornings will take place at the Astoria to-morrow. A number of the seats and boxes have been sold for the benefit of the Neighborhood Clubs Association. There will be a large and fashionable attendance, as the patronesses of this organization have exerted themselves to get as large a profit as possible for the charity, while Mr. Bagby's old patrons will be present in force. Among the selections will be a quartette written by the late Clarence Barker, a grandson of Commodore Vanderbilt.

On Tuesday there will be a second of Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry and the Misses Gerry's reception and a meeting of the Lying-In Sewing class at Mrs. George Crocker's, and at least twenty large dinners, among others, those to be given by Mrs. George L. Rives, Mrs. William Schermerhorn, Mrs. Francis Burrall Hoffman, and Mrs. Buchanan Winthrop. The Junior Badmington Club will hold its first meeting also on Tuesday evening at the Berkeley School building. On the afternoon of Tuesday Miss Grace Coppell, youngest daughter of Mr. Charles Coppell, will be introduced at a reception at her father's residence, 40 Fifth Avenue. Miss Marian Gallaudet of Washington, Miss Martha Bowers, Miss Ruth Austin, Miss Louise Gulliver, and Miss Margaret Kean of Philadelphia, and Miss Helen Hotchkiss of New Haven will assist Miss Coppell in receiving.

Wednesday will bring the wedding in Boston of the Hon. Archibald Lionel Lindsay, son of the Scottish Earl of Lindsay, and Miss Ethel Tucker, daughter of Mr. William A. Tucker of Boston. The ninth meeting of Mrs. Pratt's evening class will be held at Sherry's, and Mrs. Henry H. Cook and her daughter, Mme. de Heredia, will give the first of two "at homes" at their residence, 1 East Seventy-eighth Street.

Thursday will bring the annual Charity Ball at the Astoria, the fourth dance of the Bachelors' and Sprinters' at Delmonico's, the opening ride of the Knickerbocker Riding Club at Durland's, and a luncheon to be given by Mrs. Walter Watson, Jr., of 52 West Fifty-second Street.

The events scheduled Friday and Saturday are not as many in number. The third and last of the dances for young men and girls organized by Mrs. Dallas B. Pratt will take place at the Metropolitan Club Annex on Friday evening, to which the girls will go dressed as French Marquises of the eighteenth century. Mrs. Quackenbush's class will also hold its third meeting on Friday evening. Saturday will bring a number of "at homes," the fifth meeting of Mrs. Sands's class at Delmonico's, and the fourth De Coverley dance at Sherry's.

The past week brought several dancing events. It began with Mrs. Ogden Mills's annual dinner dance on Monday, and then came in succession Mrs. R. Fulton Cutting's dance for her niece, Miss Justine Cutting, on Tuesday evening, the fourth Fortnightly dance at the Astoria, and the fourth Subscription dance at Delmonico's on the same evening, the third of the Wednesday cotillions at Delmonico's on Wednesday evening, the second and last Assembly Ball at the Astoria, and the second Knickerbocker dance at Delmonico's on Thursday evening, the fourth meeting of Mrs. Benjamin S. Church's class in the large ballroom at Sherry's, and the third meeting of Mrs. Snedeker's class in the small ballroom at Sherry's on Friday evening, and the cotillion given by Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish at her residence last evening. All these dances, with the exception of Mrs. Fish's, have been fully described in these columns on the morning after their occurrence, and the story of Mrs. Fish's will be found in another column this morning.

These balls and dances of the week past were for the most part successful, and although many of the young women, and especially the débutantes, are beginning to show signs of fatigue, the events were lively and enjoyable. The second and last Assembly Ball had about the same number of guests as the first, but there was a difference in its atmosphere. A number of older men and women of position who were at the first Assembly have now left town, and, as is always the case at Assembly balls, the subscribers divide their invitations among their friends, so that the guests of last Thursday night were not the same, with some exceptions, as those at the first ball. The Reception Committee was entirely changed, and the women who received on Thursday night were Mrs. Cadwalader Jones, Mrs. John C. Wilmerding, Mrs. Charles H. Marshall, and Mrs. Lloyd Bryce. The women who received at the first ball, it will be remembered, were Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry. Some very handsome gowns were worn at this last Assembly, remarkably handsome for this late period of the season. Of the débutantes, Miss Katherine Hall, who wore pink satin veiled with tulle and trimmed with rosebuds; Miss Clare Bryce, who was in simple white, and Miss Anna Dodge, who was also in white, were greatly admired. Mrs. Lloyd Bryce wore one of the most beautiful gowns at the ball. It was a pale pink brocaded silk, embroidered with flowers, with black shoulder knots. Mrs. Cadwalader Jones wore a handsome gown of white satin, covered with black lace and pearls and diamonds. Mrs. Louis Q. Jones wore a handsome gown of white satin trimmed with point lace, which was extremely becoming, as was also Mrs. Sydney Smith's gown of white satin trimmed with roses. Mrs. George J. Gould, who was at the ball with her sister-in-law, the Countess Castellane, looked unusually well in a gown of a delicate shade of pink crêpe de chine, spangled with silver, and with an overdress of white lace. The Countess Castellane also wore a pink. Mr. Alexander Hadden led a spirited cotillion, and very wisely danced alone.

One of the most enjoyable entertainments of the week was the musicale given by Mrs. Addison Cammack on Thursday afternoon. At this musicale there appeared a new soprano, Mlle. de Rohan; David Mannes, the violinist, and Emelio Gorgorza, the baritone. Mrs. Cammack's guests were mostly members of the Tuxedo colony, and included among others Mrs. James Brown Lord, Mrs. Abram S. Hewitt, the Misses Hewitt, Mrs. T. Suffern Tailer, Mrs. James M. Varnum, Mrs. William Kent, Mrs. Alfred Seton, Jr., Mrs. Arthur Mason Jones, Mrs. Newbold Edgar, Mrs. George Griswold, Mrs. Walker Breese Smith, Mrs. Richard Delafield, Mrs. Frederic R. Coudert, Jr., Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. George Hoffman, Mrs. Charles Grenville Peters, Mrs. Frederic H. Benedict, Mrs. Richard Irvin, Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Herbert C. Pell, Mrs. George Crocker, Mrs. George B. De Forest, and Mrs. John R. Drexel. Mrs. Cammack, who received alone, looked remarkably handsome in a superb gown of white lace.

Mrs. Crocker's luncheon on Tuesday, the large musicale given by Mrs. Henry H. Cook and Mme. de Heredia, her daughter, on Thursday afternoon in their beautiful house on upper Fifth Avenue, where M. Plançon, Miss Susan Metcalfe, and Maurice Farkoa sang and Mr. Victor Biegel played; a meeting of the Thursday Evening Club at Mrs. E. H. Harriman's, where the members and guests were entertained by a graphic story of the Harriman exploring expedition's Alaskan experiences last Summer by Mr. F. S. B. Dellenbaugh, the artist, and which was illustrated by stereopticon views, and the meeting of Mrs. Church's dancing class on Friday evening at Sherry's, were other important and interesting incidents of the week.

The Valentine dance, which Mrs. Frederic J. de Peyster is to give on Feb. 14 for her daughters at her residence, 7 East Forty-seventh Street, excites pleasant anticipations among the younger members of society. Mr. Alexander Hadden will lead the cotillion.

Prominent among the gayeties of this week will be the Charity Ball, given for the benefit of the Nursery and Child's Hospital, on Thursday evening. Nothing has been spared to insure this being the most brilliant of any preceding Charity Ball. A large delegation of army and navy men is expected, and gold lace and bright uniforms will add lustre to the scene. Many private dinners are to be given, from which the guests will afterward go to the ball. The Floor Committee, headed by Mr. Alexander Hadden, its Chairman, will provide every detail of comfort for the guests. Music will be furnished by Lander and A. A. Clappé, conductor of the Astoria Band. The demand for boxes has been so great that the committee has been obliged to build two additional, which may be had at 2 East Thirty-fifth Street. Entrance for those holding box tickets will be on Thirty-fourth Street. Those holding simply entrance tickets will enter on Thirty-third Street. The doors will open at 9 o'clock. The grand march will open the ball at 10 o'clock punctually. The box holders will be: 1, Mrs. Fred Baker; 2, Mrs. J. B. Hurd; 3, Mrs. William P. Eno; 4, Mrs. G. J. Schermerhorn; 5, Mrs. Postley; 6, Mrs. George Arents; 7, Mrs. C. M. Hyde; 8, Mrs. Boldt; 9, Samuel Valentine and James Bergen; 10, Mrs. W. B. Dickerman; 11, Mrs. George D. Young; 12, Mrs. William H. Bliss; 13, Mrs. D. S. Lamont; 14, Mrs. William Moir; 15, Mrs. H. F. Dimock; 16, Robert Olyphant; 17, Mrs. C. B. Wood; 18, Mrs. J. C. Everet; 19, Mrs. J. Hood Wright; 20, Dr. Everet M. Culver; 21, Mrs. J. L. Adams; 22, Mrs. George Leary; 23, J. J. Ayer, and 24, Mrs. A. D. Juilliard. Floor—A, Mrs. B. Knower; B, Mrs. William M. Kingsland; E, Mrs. Henry Parish; F, Mrs. Stickney; G, Mrs. G. De Almagro; K, Col. William H. Rowe, Jr.; L, Mrs. E. J. Berwind, and M, Mrs. A. T. Van Nest. Second Tier—28, John H. Bache; 38, Mrs. A. J. Adams; 39, Mrs. George R. Howell; 40, J. B. Baker; 42, Mrs. A. E. Outerbridge, and 43, Mrs. Charles D. Freeman.

Senator Kean and Miss Kean gave a dinner in Washington on Tuesday night in honor of Admiral and Mrs. Dewey. Mrs. Dewey being still quite ill with tonsolitus, the Admiral has to attend these numerous entertainments alone, as he did the large musicale given for him by his sister-in-law, Mrs. John R. McLean, on the 19th. Gen. Bates and Mrs. Bates gave a dinner in Washington on Tuesday night in honor of the Secretary of War and Mrs. Root. Mrs. Fairbanks gave a beautifully appointed luncheon in honor of Miss Grace McKinley, Miss Duncan, and Miss Osborne, who are staying at the White House during the season. The guests were the young girls of the Cabinet circle.

The second dinner-dance took place in Washington on Tuesday evening. The dance was given at the German Embassy, the spacious rooms of which were loaned by the Ambassador for the occasion, he himself being absent from town for some days. Mrs. Hay welcomed the guests, and among the dinner givers were Mrs. Hay, Mrs. John Davis, Mrs. Hugh Legaré, Mrs. Alexander Legaré, Mrs. Henry May, and Mrs. Lodge. It was found expedient to invite a list of extra men; no more girls were, however, bidden.

The Belgian Minister and Countess Lichtervelde gave a dinner last night in Washington in honor of Prince Henri de Croy of Belgium, who was in Newport last Summer, and Wednesday night the Russian Ambassador entertains in his honor. Many entertainments have taken place complimentary to the Prince, who will leave on Friday, and expects to travel extensively through the United States.

Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould, it is reported at Newport, are to pass the coming Summer there, and will take a large villa. Among the others who are expected for a part of the season at Newport are the Duchess of Marlborough, while Mr. James J. Van Alen, whose villa, Wakehurst, was closed last season, intends to bring over from England for the season a house party, who will be present at the coming-out ball which Mr. Van Alen intends giving in honor of his second daughter, Miss Sarah Van Alen. Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt, when he returns to America, will bring over on his yacht, the Valiant, Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and during the season Newport will be his headquarters.

The Gooseberry Island Club is to build a fine stone clubhouse on the island, and in this building will be a bowling alley, a banquet hall, billiard room, and other departments, while squash court and several lawn tennis courts will be built on the island.

The sale of the Coles estate, as well as the adjoining property on Bellevue Avenue, Newport, known as Rhua House, the property of Mr. John H. Davis, to Mr. E. Rollins Morse of Boston, means the removal of an eyesore on that part of the avenue. With the purchase of these two estates Mr. Morse will soon begin elaborate improvements.

A bal poudre is to be given by Mr. and Mrs. De La Vergne in New Orleans this week. Notice has been sent to the men invited to appear in fancy lace neck ties. Mrs. Lucian Lynns entertained at luncheon on Friday. The flower decorations were beautiful. The widow of Bishop Gallegee, formerly of Louisiana, is visiting her son-in-law, Bishop Sessums.

Mrs. William A. Thompson of New Orleans, formerly Miss Kitty Cheatham, will leave in a few weeks to live permanently in England. She will be much missed. Mrs. Dr. May of Washington and Mrs. Nesbit entertains on Friday. They have visited several plantations.

Although the present season has been made the subject of much comment, as far as New York is concerned, the prospects abroad just now are far from reassuring. Indeed, the gayest spot in the other hemisphere is South Africa, and there has been such an influx of English society, with a sprinkling of Americans, that one sees in the mail more evidences of entertaining at Cape Town than on the Riviera. The Maine had a delightful reception, and Lady Randolph Churchill and the attachés have been dined and lunched to their heart's content in Cape Town. It is almost useless to speak of London just now, which is absolutely out of season. The death of the mother of the Empress of Germany has thrown that Court in mourning. There seems some shadow hovering over Russia and Italy, and Austria and the home of the little Queen of Holland seem the only places on the other side where there is even a semblance of gayety.

There has usually been a Winter season in Paris. This year it has proved the exception. The English who take in Paris on the way down to the Riviera for a few days are passing through without stopping, and the Americans are following their example. The entertaining in the Paris colony, which has received a blow in the death of Mrs. Walden Pell, is confined to receptions and musicales at Miss Fanny Reed's, at Mrs. Ingraham's, and at Mme. de Coetlogens, who was Miss Blake of Boston. The Porters have their regular days, but they have not been doing very much entertaining. At the Ritz there are still a few familiar faces. Mrs. Ogden Goelet, Miss Smith Clift, and Mrs. Griswold Gray are among those who have been recently seen there at the tea hour. The weather has been extremely cold and disagreeable. The Duchess of Marlborough is expected this week, and Col. Astor and Mrs. Astor passed through Paris recently.

Influenza is so prevalent in both London and Paris that every one who can leave for the South is rushing away, and this is possibly another cause of the general dullness. In Ireland there is much gloom caused by the death of the Marquis of Ava in South Africa. It has been erroneously stated that Lord Terence Blackwood would succeed to the courtesy title of Marquis of Ava, and that his wife, the daughter of Mr. John Davis of this city, would be a Countess. The second son seldom, if ever, takes the courtesy title which his elder brother has borne. Lord Terence Blackwood will be now known as Lord Clandeboye. At the death of his father, the Earl of Dufferin, he will succeed to the Earldom.

The bachelor apartment of the Duke of Marlborough, about which so much has been written recently, has been maintained by him, in case either he or the Duchess wanted to run down to London for a few days, and as the Duchess has stopped there often, and was there with her husband until his sailing for South Africa, last Saturday. Before he left for the Cape, he and the Duchess equipped twenty beds in the Yeomanry Hospital. Many people even in London, now, as well as on the Riviera, are placing their houses at the service of the Government for hospital purposes. The Misses Kayser have been among these and they have offered their beautiful town home for this purpose. These young women are well known at Hambourg, and they entertain the Prince and Princess of Wales frequently, as well as other royalties. They are the heiresses of a mineral water spring, which the Prince not only indorsed, but allowed a photograph of himself to be taken in the act of drinking the water, which is used as an advertisement all over England.

The funeral of Lady Alice Montagu took place in England at Kimbelton, where her twin sister is buried. Many messages of sympathy have been sent to the Duchess of Manchester from the royal family and others. The Duchess, who is still quite a sick woman, will remain on the continent for some time longer. Mr. Fernando Yznaga was to join Mr. William K. Vanderbilt at Nice.

William Waldorf Astor started last week on a four months' cruise in the yacht Catania, which he had hired of the Duke of Sutherland. Miss Astor and a party go with him. They will stop at various ports on the Riviera. The Varuna has also left Southampton for Nice, where she will be boarded by her owner, Mr. Eugene Higgins, who has arrangements made for a long cruise.

At St. Moritz and along the Engadine the weather has again been very good, and there are bandy and hockey matches being arranged. The tobogganing race for the Astor Cup takes place this last week of January. Col. John Jacob and Mrs. Astor and suite are expected daily at the Palace Hotel, St. Moritz. Several entertainments at Davos were abandoned because of the sad news of the death of Lady Alice Montagu. Lady Montagu was seen at breakfast and around the hotel to within a very few days of her death.

The Marquise de Choiseul (Miss Clare Coudert) is passing the Winter at Mentone. Her health is very much improved. The first dance at the International Club there was a great success. Mr. and Mrs. Phelps Allis and Miss Allis were among the Americans present.

The following item comes from Constantinople: The sale of work at the rooms in the Scotch Mission, on the Grande Rue, was liberally patronized by the English and Americans. Miss Mason of the American Legation took charge of the principal stall, and with her charming manners soon succeeded in disposing of all of the beautiful articles. Miss Dr. Hornik, an American, who is the only lady dentist in Constantinople, was one of the handsomest-dressed women at the fête. She wore a Parisian tight-fitting cloth costume and a large black velvet picture hat with magnificent ostrich feathers.

The Wadsworth Ritchies are among the Americans who have joined the hunting colony near Melton Mowbray. Mr. and Mrs. De Lancey Kane are near Market Harborough. Mr. and Mrs. Richard McCreery, who sailed this week will try some hunting with the pack at Pau, where a very gay carnival is promised with races and golf matches. There is very little that is new from Cannes. The Count and Countess Pourtales (Miss Barbey) have been entertaining a great deal at their villa, and their small racing yacht has arrived at the club, and will take part in the regattas in March.

It is very pleasant in this arctic weather to dream of the land of orange blossoms, mocking birds, and roses, but with the exception of the very far South, there does not seem to be a warm place in the land. Aiken has been cold and rainy this week and very dull. The hunts have begun, and there is much dining around at the houses of a few in one small coterie. Mr. and Mrs. Cassatt are on their bridal trip at St. Augustine. In New Orleans there is much preparation for the Carnival, and society seems otherwise divided in its attention between subscription cotillions, the opera, and whist and euchre. The George Vanderbilts are entertaining as usual at Biltmore, and the Harry Payne Whitneys have gone across the Tennessee Mountains to Hickory Gap.

Letters from Rome speak of the gayety there, and the American Colony is well represented at many smart functions. Mrs. David Stewart, who has apartments there, and recently was a guest at a dinner of the Drapers—Mrs. Draper uses her famous gold service, which is so much admired, at her dinners; her jewels are superb; in fact, society in Rome is ablaze always with magnificent jewels, pearls being the favorite. Some of the women have such strings of pearls that their necks are entirely covered even down to the edge of the low gowns.

Mrs. Everett Culver and Miss Katheryn Clark seem to have solved the problem of living in two places at once. On Wednesday evening they gave a large dinner of fifty covers at their apartment and on Friday Senator Clark, with his daughters as hostesses, gave another dinner in Washington.

The tea given by Mr. Stacy Clarke and Mr. "Jack" Walker was a great success. There were over 100 guests present. The Osman Banjo and Piano trio played. Among those who were there were Miss Maisie Remsen, Mrs. George Crocker, the Misses Rutherford, Miss De Forest, Miss Susan Day, Mrs. Henry L. Burnet, Mrs. Frederic Pierson, the Misses de Peyster, Mrs. Charles Childs, Mrs. Stickney, Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Hillhouse, Mr. Harry Batcheller, Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, Mrs. Edward Lyman Short, Mrs. N. E. Baylies, and Mrs. William Frazer.

There are some wild but unconfirmed rumors to the effect that Mrs. George Gould will give an amateur circus this coming month at Georgean Court. According to the story, it will be under the management of Sidney Smith, who is an excellent performer of athletic feats. Miss Hoffman, however, denies the story that she under any circumstances is to take the part of a whirling dervish, but if there shall be an entertainment she may give a dance in the manner of her recent efforts at various other affairs. Harry Lehr is also scheduled to take part. On Friday evening Mrs. George Gould had the Countess de Castellane and Mrs. Kingdon as guests at the opera. The Count and Countess de Castellane will go this morning by special train to Lakewood. Mr. and Mrs. George Gould will accompany them. At Lakewood the Count and Countess de Castellane will be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Harris.

A.fred Vanderbilt sailed yesterday for Europe. It is said that his trip will be short. Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Sr., remains at her residence, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street. She will sail later in the Spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lanier and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur B. Claflin are at Jekyl Island. H. M. Flagler has a party at Palm Beach.

Mr. and Mrs. Royal Phelps Carroll, who have settled at Aiken, have been giving a number of small dinners. Mr. and Mrs. Valentine Mott have also been entertaining. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sackett are at Jacksonville en route to St. Augustine.

Beneath a canopy of roses, in the presence of a large assemblage of relatives and friends, Miss Jeanette Richman and Mr. David M. Rockmore were married last Sunday (Jan. 21) at Vienna Hall, Fifty-eighth Street and Lexington Avenue. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Zensler. The bride, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis M. Richman, was attired in white satin, trimmed with orange blossoms and duchesse lace. There were no bridesmaids or best man. Mr. and Mrs. Rockmore will spend a few weeks at Old Point Comfort, and on their return will reside in New York.

The College Women's Club will give a benefit concert and subscription dance for the scholarship fund, Tuesday evening, Jan. 30, at Sherry's, Fifth Avenue and Forty-fourth Street. On Tuesday last Mrs. Lounsbery gave a dinner of twelve covers.

The Columbia University Musical Society will produce the comic opera entitled "The Governor's Vrouw," by John Erskine, 1900; Melville H. Crane, 1900, and Henry S. The home of Mrs. William Crittenden Adams, at 323 West Seventy-fourth Street, was opened Thursday afternoon for the annual reception of the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance. Mrs. Adams received assisted by her mother, Mrs. Darwin R. James, President of the Alliance, and by the ladies of the Board of Directors, among whom were Mrs. D. J. Burrell, Mrs. John T. Stanley, Mrs. James Talcott, Mrs. A. Alexander, Mrs. James Yereance, Mrs. J. H. Knowles, and others. A goodly number of women and men were present despite the inclemency of the weather, and among them friends of the alliance from White Plains, Bridgeport, Mount Vernon, and other places. Refreshments were served in the dining room, and there was music. This delightful social affair forms a very pleasant feature of the Winter's record of the alliance.

The students of Berkeley School give their second annual minstrel show last evening at Carnegie Lyceum. The proceeds will be devoted to the Berkeley School Athletic Association, and it is expected that the success of last year's performance will be doubled. The company has been much enlarged. There were thirty-five in the "first part." Van Baar's orchestra of fourteen pieces furnished the music, and all were in black face. The "first part" was a combination of old-time and modern minstrelsy. The endmen were E. T. Granbery, P. G., '99, bones, and G. A. Mohlman, 1900, tambourine, both of whom made successes. Douglas McKee, 1900, acted as interlocutor. All the choruses were sung by the Berkeley Minstrels Double Quartet, composed of C. O. Young, 1900; L. B. Hughes, '02; R. H. Darnell, 1900; C. L. Huston, 1900; E. C. Carpentier, 1900; D. McKee, 1900; H. G. Underwood, '01, and J. E. Miller, 1900. The second part of the entertainment included a Dutch comedy act by Whitely, '97, and Groesbeck, '97; an Irish act by Moen and Phelan, '99; a musical sketch by Robinson and Harding, '98; ragtime banjo solos by W. S. Daniell, '95, and a monologue by E. T. Granbery, P. G., '99. The performance was managed by E. T. Granbery, P. G., '99, and coached by Mr. Charles D. Simerson, to whom the success of last year's entertainment was largely due. There were sixty patronesses, prominent among whom were Miss Helen Gould, Mrs. Edward V. Thébaud, Mrs. E. R. Ladew, Mrs. E. L. Marston, La Marquise de San Marzano, Mrs. Franklin Farrel, Mrs. G. F. Vietor, Mrs. James Whitely, Mrs. Horace C. Du Val, Mrs. Eastman, Mrs. Lawton, Mrs. McKenney, and Mrs. Sheffield.

The dinner was given for the Senator's daughter-in-law, Mrs. Charles Clark of Montana. The dinner was served at eight small tables. At the hosts' table twelve were seated and the decorations were American Beauty roses. Mrs. Culver's table was decorated with purple orchids, Miss Clark's with white roses and white lilacs, and Dr. Culver's with red roses. Mrs. Richard P. Lounsbery presided at one table; this was decorated with green orchids

In the Musical World

The discussion of the art of singing which has been in progress in these columns may be said now to have reached the acute stage. In other words, the writer has now come to ground on which he must tread with the greatest caution, for in it are many pitfalls for the unwary. The musical editor of THE TIMES has on several occasions called attention to the fact that he is not a singing teacher. If he were, he would have certain theories about the mechanical processes of producing tone and he would defend these theories with much violence in the public prints and would even issue challenges to other singing teachers to debate the points at issue with him. Being, however, but a simple commentator on music, a person who occupies merely the position of a particularly interested listener and who reports to others the results of his listening, he will venture only to put forward what seem to him to be some general truths.

It has been said here that there is only one way to sing all kinds of music, and that this way is right for Bellini or for Wagner. Of course, that means the method of using the voice, not the style of the singing. It has also been said in these columns that the aim of all technic is tone. This is a law that the musical editor of THE TIMES has learned from experience and observation. Musicians do not all subscribe to it. Certainly it is true in singing. Say what you will about spoiling such music as Wagner's by singing it too prettily, the fault does not lie in the beauty of the quality of tone, but in the application of an incorrect style of delivery. To sing "Nothung, nothung, neidliches schwert," in a sugary legato, as I have no doubt it was lately sung in Rome, is an outrage on the art of Wagner. But it is none the less right to sing that splendid forge song with all the power and beauty of a grand tone. To do so is to imbue it with a value which no amount of shouting or barking in the fashion of some vicious German singers can ever give to it.

Now how is this grand, flowing, sonorous tone to be attained? Reader, that question cannot be answered here. That is the question which the singing teachers do not answer, because each one of them is morally certain that he alone possesses the secret. As the secret chances to be different in each case there is no satisfaction for the searcher after truth. But in the course of a long and earnest study of the art of singing and after an equally long course of listening to singers of every possible degree of merit or demerit, from Adelina Patti to base howlers of indescribable turpitude, the musical editor of THE TIMES has arrived at some conclusions. These may be set forth. They are, perhaps, not very important, nor are they new, but they may serve to show how these matters strike the thoughtful listener.

While I am quite ready to concede that the teachers are right in placing respiration at the top of the list of essentials of good singing, I am not prepared to express any opinions as to the comparative value of chest and diaphragmatic breathing. Naturally, I have my own opinion, but it is of no importance, and I cannot support it by exhaustive argument. To me as a listener nothing seems more important than a good attack, behind which the respiration lies. I hear the results of bad attack at once, and therefore its evils are brought home to me more forcibly than those of ill-managed breathing. To my mind the most pernicious feature of attack ever invented is the stroke of the glottis. Some medical authorities are of the belief that it is injurious to the voice, and their teachings seem to be rational. Dr. Holbrook Curtis, who has had a long experience in the treatment of the throats of singers, says in his "Voice Building and Tone Placing" that the coup de glotte is responsible for the formation of nodules on the vocal cords; and every singer knows that these mean the destruction of the voice. Dr. Curtis lays the greatest possible stress on the methods of practicing singing for the purpose of counteracting the effect of this pernicious habit, and believes that its evil effects can be removed by a radical change in the method of attack. Naturally, I am not prepared to offer an opinion on such a question as this. I am quite sure that Dr. Curtis knows vastly more about it than I do.

But the present writer has no hesitation in saying that the stroke of the glottis is productive of decided ugliness in singing. It is ugly in itself, and it is the cause of a good deal of poor and unsteady tone. The audible cluck which so many exponents of this method make in beginning a tone has no place in music. It is ignoble. It is not a component part of a musical tone. It is an extraneous sound rudely injected into a melody, where it has no business to be. That in my mind is a sufficient argument for its abolition from vocal art. It is a kind of technic which does not produce a beautiful tone, and indeed produces something which is not tone at all.

But after careful observation I am convinced that the stroke of the glottis is one of the causes of bad quality in the tone after it is started, and that it also gives rise to unsteadiness. I shall gladly accept correction on this point if it is shown that I am wrong. But the action of the coup de glotte is one of violence, and all violence is opposed to a clear, sonorous, and steady tone. In the stroke of the glottis the vocal cords are, as the sailors say, "set taut," and then the column of air is projected against them. As it strikes them they are forced apart with a rude suddenness, that causes the cluck in the throat. The column of air is pitched forward and upward into the resonance chambers, much as a man might be thrown from a hallway through a pair of closed folding doors into a room.

Now how is it possible for the singer to poise perfectly the vocal mechanism in the emission of tone by this process? How can he direct the column of air steadily at the roof of the mouth as he should in order properly to place the tone? The beginning of the tone must be shaken by the shock imparted by the stroke of the glottis, and this must result in unsteady tone, and eventually, if not at first, in uncertain intonation.

Dr. Curtis may or may not be right as to the injury done to the cords by the stroke of the glottis, but there can be no doubt, it seems to me, as to the injury done to the tone. Privately it is my belief that any violation of the laws of good tone production will in the long run prove to be injurious to the voice. The art of singing is founded in natural law. If we are right as to the laws, we may be sure that any violation of them must be paid for in ill health of the affected parts. The stroke of the glottis is not natural. It is an invention of singing teachers of a certain school. If you think it natural, try to talk with it. And to repeat what seems to me to be an equally strong argument against it—nay, the strongest—it is ugly. When Mme. Melba opens her mouth and the tone begins to flow like water through the gates of a lock, so that you can hardly tell when it begins, she produces a tone which for perfect purity, truth of intonation and steadiness has no superior. There is no cluck at the beginning of her tones.

The tone and the emission of breath should begin at the same instant. Of that I am convinced. The singing teachers seem to agree on this point, but in the stroke of the glottis this is not strictly the case. The breath, the column of air, is used as a sort of battering ram, to break open the closed vocal cords in order that the tone may begin. Of course, there is always the danger of running to the opposite extreme and singing in a breathy fashion. This, too, is a pernicious habit, though it is hardly likely that it causes such harm to the voice as the coup de glotte. But it produces weak, thin, and unsteady tone and leads to flatness, and for these reasons it is to be avoided. The ideal attack is of course that in which the vocal cords meet in the formation of the tone at the same instant as the column of air reaches them. There is neither a preliminary puff of breath, producing a sound like that indicated by the letter "h," nor an introductory cluck.

Another deplorable cause of poor and unsteady tone is the vicious tremolo. Oh, that it were abolished from the stage! My protest against it is, first, because it is musically not beautiful. It is absurd to hear a melody always being shaken out as if it came from the hopper of some sort of a vocal mill. If it is right for a singer to do that, why is it not a good thing for a clarinet or a flute player? The violinists do it, I know, but no amount of agitation of the left wrist will produce such a shaky tone as the singers get from the paroxysms in their throats. Ugliness, pure ugliness, results from this thing, which some singers think is so desirable. There are times when it may be employed with fine dramatic effect, but when it is used all the time it becomes a piece of cheap and stupid artificiality. When I hear the singers trembling on the sunny slopes of their upper tones and gurgling stertorously in their lower ones, I wonder what they can find so alluring in this practice.

Now it has been forced upon my attention that to the employment of the tremolo is due a great deal of the unsteadiness of tone and uncertainty of intonation now to be heard on the concert platform and the operatic stage. The tremolo is not far away from the shake, and the shake is a rapid passing from one tone to another and back again. The tremolo, in its approach to this, must necessarily unsteady the tone, because the tone is always on the verge of changing its pitch. In the case of a singer in whom the tremolo has reached its worst state this change of pitch actually takes place, and such a singer cannot sing any one tone, but is always trying to sing two tones at once. Consequently he never sings a tune, but whenever he attempts to do so he simply has a vocal chill.

The tremolo was at its worst, it is said, in the early fifties. Signor Ferri, a baritone who sang at La Scala in 1853, is said to have had such a tremolo that his whole singing was no better than a distressing wabble. Critics of the day declared that this tremolo was the result of straining the voice in the attempt to sing against the heavy instrumentation which had come into fashion in operas. But, as one writer on the topic has justly observed, "this is clearly not the case, since many who use it are as fresh at the end of an opera as at the beginning. It is probably sometimes used with the view of making the voice carry, but if it does it is at the expense of intonation." The writer might have added that the tremolo actually prevents the voice from carrying. The best carrying power in singing is a clear, fluent sustained tone without any shakiness. Has any one ever found any failure in the carrying power of the voices of Mme. Melba or Mme. Eames? One would have to listen closely, I fancy, to find any evidence of the tremolo in their song. The truth is that this is a cheap affectation, practiced with the silly idea that it adds to the sympathetic quality of the song. There are times when it may do so. One's voice would naturally tremble with emotion occasionally, but not all the time. As a witty tenor said to me of a man who had a great tremolo, "He sings always as if he were being shaken up in a bag." Campanini said to me once, "I detest the tremolo. It is so foolish." And that was one of the wisest remarks that the great Don José ever made.

For the conclusion of these somewhat desultory remarks may I be permitted to make my vehement protest against all forms of forcing the voice? It is saddening to me to observe how frequently singers who should know better fall before the subtle temptation of the big sound. The populace loves a great noise, and it is so easy to get glory out of volume of tone. And then the auditorium looks from the stage to be a huge, yawning chasm into which sound mysteriously disappears and is forgotten. So let us rush down to the footlights and lift up our voices. Let us take the upper dominant at every opportunity, no matter how it distorts the melody set down for us by the composer. We must make our effect with the unthinking. We must have our round of applause. And let us not forget that our lower tones are not as full and vibrant as our upper ones, and therefore let us push them, lest they be unheard.

Now what are the musical results of this forcing process? One I have indicated. It is the distortion of the melody for the sake of a high note. Accursed be the memory of Rubini, who is said to have invented the tremolo and who was the chief among sinners in the use of high tones. Read the score of "Il Trovatore" and see how many of the familiar high notes are missing from the composer's own notation. But beyond the distortion of the melody comes the wear and tear on voices caused by this bad habit. The voice, as every teacher will admit, is at its best in its medium. There it will stand the greatest wear, and most teachers discourage the habitual practice of the high tones. Mme. Melba, for example, never tries her high tones when preparing to go on the stage. She warms up her voice by the use of her medium notes and can tell by the state of her throat whether she can sing the high ones. I state this on the authority of Dr. Curtis, never having asked Mme. Melba about it. But I do know that M. Jean de Reszke's practice is similar.

To sing a high tone occasionally and with the natural strength of the voice is not forcing. But to sing high tones frequently is likely to compel forcing, and the average singer is prone to try to make his high tone sound bigger than it normally is. And that is where the forcing process begins.

Worse still is the forcing of the lower tones, for the strain is more unnatural. Nothing will take the velvet off a voice more quickly than the forcing of the lower tones. And it does not make them carry a bit better. Tone, as I have already said, carries best when it is firmly attacked and sustained with purity and steadiness. The singer who does not practice the coup de glotte and who has no tremolo, but who can open his mouth and let the tone flow out of it like water from a faucet, need have no fear that his singing will not be heard. The tiniest pianissimo that Marcella Sembrich sings is heard all over the Metropolitan Opera House, the most voracious of sound swallowers. Forced tone is not beautiful; its results are not beautiful. It has no musical reason for existence.

And in this lies the gist of my text. The aim of all technic is tone. And in singing that which militates against the production of a beautiful tone is almost invariably unmusical, and therefore is doubly condemned. The foundation of all good singing is the same as the foundation of all good music, namely, a perfect legato. Smoothness and breadth of style are entirely dependent on the mastery of the legato, and so are flexibility and agility. The perfection of intonation depends upon it. But the singer who falls into any of the habits of which I have been speaking either endangers or wholly destroys his command of legato, and when he does that he ceases to be a fine singer.

"What difference does it make," I hear some one saying, "since so many singers have tremendous success with the public in spite of their doing all the things that you say they should not do?" The answer to that is to be found in the famous remark of Abraham Lincoln on a very different matter: "You can fool all of the people some of the time, and some of the people all of the time; but you can't fool all of the people all of the time." Rest assured that in singing, as in life, your sins will find you out. Some day the public will discover that the velvety quality of your voice is gone and that you are only a shouter. About the same time it will discover that you do not sing in tune, that you are unmusical, that you have no artistic instincts, and that you are generally unfit for publication. When the public turns against an artist it is brutal.

Meanwhile may the thoughtful readers of this department of THE NEW YORK TIMES set their faces against the habits of which I have written. Do not believe a singer when he sings Wagner badly and tells you it is because it is Wagner. Tell him it is because he does not know how to sing. Do not applaud a singer who attacks his tones with a stroke like the blow of a piano hammer. Do not applaud a singer who makes every tone shiver as if it had the ague. Do not applaud a singer who rushes down to the footlights and bawls high tones at you till he looks as if he would burst. Do not applaud a singer who growls out his lower tones in a rough noise. And do not applaud a singer who slides through all the infinite gradations of pitch which lie between two tones, using perpetually that vicious portamento which almost invariably accompanies the shouting processes of all kinds. You are not hearing music when you hear that sort of singing. We have no system by which such singing can be set down in notation. It is vile. It should be hooted out of existence. Glorify a beautiful legato, but have no pity for a "scooper."

Let us try to encourage real art in singing. The teachers will all thank us, for they will perhaps be able to induce their pupils properly to prepare themselves before rushing into the presence of a critical public. The composers will thank us, for they will have hopes of hearing their music really sung. And in the end all good singers will thank us, for they will know that their study has not produced results beyond our appreciation. And Music will be our debtor, for her dignity and her beauty will be preserved.

THE AMERICAN THEATRE.

"The Chimes of Normandy" will ring out merrily again at the American Theatre next week. Planquette's charming, tuneful work has not lost its savor in the years that have elapsed since it was first brought to the attention of the New York music loving public. The melodic charms which the composer embodied in the score are perennial in their fascination, and the book has more originality, wit, and humor than those of the more modern efforts at musical fun. Last season it proved to be one of the Castle Square Opera Company's most popular and enjoyable light opera presentations. Next week's production promises to be of an even greater degree of excellence, as the cast comprises singers more suited to the various assignments. Miss Morgan will sing Germaine; Miss Quinlan, Serpolette; Mr. Roberts, Grenicheux; Mr. Pruette, Henri; Mr. Moulan, Gaspard; Mr. Casavant, The Bailli, and Mr. Meyers, the Notary. The light opera chorus will appear to advantage in the swinging ensembles of the opera. New scenery has been provided for the occasion, the fair at Corneville being an especially elaborate stage picture.

THE DEWEY ARCH CONCERT.

The sale of seats for the Dewey Arch concert to be held at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, Feb. 6, opened last Monday and is already very large. It is expected that every seat will have been sold by the end of the coming week. The list of artists taking part in the concert is a very strong one, but no doubt the promised presence of Admiral Dewey and Gov. Roosevelt has had a great deal to do with the public's interest in the concert. The programme has been arranged as follows:

Part 1. Walter Damrosch's Manila Te Deum and an address by Gov. Roosevelt. Part 2. The Inflammatus from Rossini's Stabat Mater, sung by Mme. Nordica; aria from "L'Etoile du Nord," Meyerbeer, and Plunkett's air from "Martha," sung by M. Edouard de Reszke; air, "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," from Weber's "Oberon," sung by Mme. Gadski; air from Goring Thomas's "The Swan and the Skylark," sung by Mr. Evan Williams, and "My Country 'Tis of Thee," to be sung standing by all those present on the stage and the auditorium. Mr. Paur, who was to have conducted in the second part of the programme, is prevented, owing to his duties as conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, which gives "Rheingold" in Philadelphia on Feb. 6.

MR. HAMBOURG'S SECOND RECITAL.

Mark Hambourg will give his second piano recital Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 31, at 3 o'clock, at Mendelssohn Hall. The programme, which is especially interesting, will be:

Sonata, op. 31, No. 3, E flat ..... Beethoven
Fantasia, C major, op. 15, (The Wanderer) ..... Schubert

MUSIC FOR THE YOUNG.

The third symphony concert for young people, with explanations by Mr. Frank Damrosch, will be given in Carnegie Hall next Saturday afternoon. The audience at these concerts is interesting; it is large, the upper boxes and galleries being quite full, but the young and older children are attentive and interested listeners. On Saturday next Miss Marguerite Hall will be the soloist. The following programme will be given:

Overture, "Rienzi" ..... Wagner
Songs, Miss Marguerite Hall.
Largo, (solo violin, strings, harp, and organ) ..... Handel
The Water Babies: "Clear and Cool."

NOTES OF MUSIC.

The dates of the Kaltenborn Quartet concerts have finally been arranged. They are as follows: Feb. 7, March 7, and March 28, at 8:15 P. M., in Mendelssohn Hall. At the first concert the quartet will be assisted by Katherine Pelton, contralto, and Ward Stephens, pianist.

Alexandre Petschnikoff, the famous Russian violinist, will give his first New York recital at Mendelssohn Hall on the afternoon of Feb. 8. Aime Lachaume, the distinguished French pianist, will be at the piano.

The first of Victor Thrane's series of high noon recitals will be given at Sherry's Tuesday, Feb. 6. Alexandre Petschnikoff, the famous Russian violinist; Elsa Ruegger, the distinguished young Swiss 'cellist, and Aime Lachaume, the eminent French pianist, will contribute to a programme, both choice and exclusive in makeup, and which will include a sonata for violin and piano, another for 'cello and piano, and the great Tschikowski trio for violin, 'cello, and piano, in which all three artists will be heard. The full programme will be given next week.

Dr. Gerrit Smith will give four free organ recitals at the South Church, Madison Avenue, corner of Thirty-eighth Street, on Mondays, beginning Jan. 29, at 3:30 o'clock. At the first recital he will be assisted by Mrs. Mary C. Fisher, organist, and Mr. Herbert Witherspoon, basso.

The operatic performances in the Germania Theatre have proved to be an immense success. Hundreds of people are thronging daily the theatre, which is much too small for the multitude. On Tuesday night, Jan. 30, Julius Perotti will sing for the first time "Max" in "Freischütz," and also the first appearance of the Hungarian prima donna, Mathilde Barthocky, will take place. Wednesday, Jan. 31, for the last time, "Der Troubadour"; Thursday, Feb. 1, and Saturday, Feb. 3, "Martha," with Julius Perotti and Mme. Moran Olden in the principal parts, will be given.

The Georgetown Glee, Banjo, and Mandolin Clubs will give their annual New York concert at the Waldorf-Astoria on the evening of Feb. 7. This famous college organization from Lisle is sure of a very enthusiastic welcome in New York from its many friends. Already most of the Southern society contingent in town have secured boxes and seats for the concert. The association will play under the patronage of many of the best-known society women in town. Among those are Mrs. W. Gould Jennings, Mrs. John G. Agar, Mrs. Charles Oelrichs, Mrs. F. R. Coudert, Mrs. F. Burrall Hoffman, Miss Leary, Mrs. Thomas Barrett, and many others.

OREGON'S NEW CONCERT MASTER.

A Wagner Disciple Settles in the City of Portland.

Gustavus Muller, the new concertmaster of the Portland Symphony Orchestra, has had a remarkable musical experience, having played under all the famous conductors of Europe, and many of the great composers besides, during the first production of their works—Wagner, Liszt, Brahms, von Bülow, Humperdinck, Strauss, Tschaikowsky, Dvorak, Anton Seidl, Theodore Thomas, and a host of others.

For a considerable time he lived in the same house with Wagner at Baireuth, and he has many interesting stories to tell of the great master, who was very eccentric in his habits. He used to walk in the garden clothed in theatrical costume; one day it would be velvet he preferred, for he maintained that the touch of velvet brought him certain musical ideas; another day it was silk that he needed to influence his inspiration. He was very sensitive to matters of this sort, and very excitable in temperament. Whenever a musical idea came to him, no matter where he happened to be, or in what company, he would burst out singing lustily.

On the approach of a thunderstorm he opened all the windows to his apartments, and, sitting down at the piano, improvised a fantasia to the accompaniment of the storm, whistling as he did so, for he was an exceptionally fine whistler. In this way was produced much of his storm music—that, for example, in "The Flying Dutchman."

The following story is told for the consolation of violin players who have experienced difficulty in Wagnerian music: Once Wagner was present at a rehearsal, and was busy giving directions to the stage manager, when he happened to overhear some violin players making frantic efforts to get in every note of certain exceedingly hard passages in the opera. He came forward to the footlights and said to the disheartened violin players: "Why do you break your fingers trying to get every note of that passage. Wilhelmj himself cannot play it as it is written. That ought to end the matter. I did not write that passage with a view to having every note in it played. All that is necessary is to produce a vague, undefined noise as of the wind rustling the leaves of the forest."

Wilhelmj, by the way, was Mr. Muller's godfather, and helped to decide him upon his career of music. That was when he was seventeen years old. During four years previous to that, as a young boy, he had been a member of the Heidelberg Orchestra, for Heidelberg was his early home, his father being a professor in the Heidelberg University, a position he still fills. In a recent visit to Heidelberg he was again a member of the same orchestra, which had meantime become increased to 104 players. It now enjoys the distinction of being selected to play the new compositions of all the great composers of the day under their personal leadership.

After studying with Reno Walter in Munich a year, Mr. Muller pursued his studies in Berlin under the great Joachim, and from there went to Weimar as a pupil of Concertmaster August Koempel, a disciple of Spohr, soon joining the Wagner Theatre, under Anton Seidl. After being concertmaster for three years at Freiburg, in the "Black Forest," he came to America, as second concertmaster in Thomas's Orchestra, and with him came to the Pacific Coast. In San Francisco he joined the Pike opera company, traveling with them three years. In 1883 he settled in Portland, entered the army in Vancouver, went to Germany for a few years, and upon his return to Oregon joined the Second Oregon troops in the Spanish-American war. For the future he expects to make his home in Portland, which is fortunate in having so experienced and capable a musician for the concertmaster of its symphony orchestra.

MUSICAL MATTERS AT HOME

Mme. Johanna Gadski, the distinguished soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House, gave an impromptu musicale at the New York College of Music on Thursday afternoon. The college hall was crowded with the pupils and friends of the institution and the singing of the noted artist was much enjoyed. It was a graceful act on the part of Mme. Gadski to sing for the students of her art, and no doubt some of them learned not a little from hearing her.

Mr. Paderewski, the pianist, left this city at 8 o'clock last Wednesday morning on his Western tour. He played in Buffalo on Wednesday evening and will not be heard again in this city unless he elects to give a farewell recital here when he returns from the West. He will visit the South while away and will be heard even in Texas. He works very hard during his seasons in this country, but the pecuniary returns make the labor well worth while. It is estimated that he will earn over $200,000 in the present season.

The Pittsburg Orchestra, which was heard here on Tuesday evening with pleasure, will come back next month and give a concert on the 27th. The local musicians do not look with favor on the visits of the out-of-town orchestras, but the general public enjoys the novelty of the affairs. The Pittsburg Orchestra gives a series of weekly concerts in the Pennsylvania city and acts as the centre of the musical life of the place. Its activity has made the Pittsburgers acquainted with a good deal of excellent music.

The Connecticut Music Teachers' Association will hold its annual convention in New Haven in the second week in May. Preparations are making to have entertainments of much interest, and the musical programmes are expected to be of uncommon merit.

The New Orleans French opera company has given a series of performances in Atlanta, where the members of the company received plenty of warm praise for their singing and acting. The tone of the criticisms in the local papers was favorable, but the writers showed that there was not a little knowledge of the essentials of good operatic art in Atlanta. M. Bonnard, for example, was censured for making exhibitions of his high notes at the expense of the dramatic and musical situation. Criticism of this sort shows the existence of a healthy musical feeling.

Some of the Boston papers appear still to be suffering from the sting of the recent remarks of the New York journals on singing out of tune. Objections to this pernicious habit are spoken of as a new development here. Well, there was a time when a good deal of false intonation had to be endured, but it was never popular.

Frederick Stearns of Detroit, who presented the University of Michigan a year ago with one of the finest collections of musical instruments in existence, has added another gift, which comes rather as a supplement. The new donation is a collection of musical scores and compositions of the old and modern masters. It includes nearly complete sets from the old masters, and in many cases they are the original manuscripts. The total number is 1,501, and the collection is valued by Prof. Stanley at over $3,000.

An attempt is being made to organize in America a branch of the English Plainsong and Mediaeval Music Society. The American members have not hitherto been numerous enough to have their own organization and place of meeting. But as the aims of the society become better known it is not impossible that the American division may assume a considerable importance. When it is borne in mind that the membership in England included such well-known names as those of Sir Arthur Sullivan, Sir John Stainer, Sir George Martin, Sir J. F. Bridge, Mr. F. J. Crowest, and others, it would not be surprising if some of our own best-known musicians gave the society their support. The society was organized a little over ten years ago, with the objects: (1) To be a centre of information in England for students of plainsong and mediaeval music, and a means of communication between them and those of other countries; (2) to publish fac similes of important manuscripts, translations of foreign works on the subject, adaptations to the Anglican service, &c. The membership comprises a number of distinguished churchmen, the Bishop of Salisbury being President, and also a large number of prominent professional musicians and amateurs. From the first its numbers have steadily increased. At the same time, the society would be much larger if it were better known to the public.

A gentleman who had heard most of the eminent living pianists, but who had never before heard Paderewski, attended his last recital at Carnegie Hall. After listening to him for an hour, he said to a friend: "Why, there's only one pianist in the world. All the rest of them are just hired help."

MUSICAL MATTERS ABROAD

If reports do not wrong him, Rossini's ideas as to what a singer needs were, first, voice, secondly, voice, and thirdly, voice. Verdi's ideas are widely different. As a writer in The Pall Mall Gazette, who visited him, writes: Singing with most people, or, rather, in the opinion of the majority, teachers included, means "voice production" and little else. So that if you get a nice tone, a pleasing quality, and a sufficient volume of sound, if your intonation is correct, and the voice generally steady, you are put down as a singer. With Verdi all these qualities, undoubted as they are, go for nothing as qualifications. His opinion is that "non s'impara a cantare," you cannot learn how to sing; no, you must have it in you, and by singing he means accentuation, articulation, and enthusiasm. The most beautiful voice on earth meant nothing to him without these, and he would not accept any arguments in proof of possibilities of teaching to accentuate. "No," he positively shouted, "you must feel the accents," and then he told us how once he was coaching a celebrated singer in a part that just suited his splendid voice. The man would have been the success of the opera but for his inability to understand what Verdi wanted. "I was asking him to give me more accent, and he was giving me more voice; then I sang to him, and he repeated phrase after phrase correctly; but the care in accentuating was so patent that the whole became worse and worse, and I had to give the man up. You must be born with accents."

Rome has been applauding a new "genius." His name is Randegger. He was born at Trieste, and is only twenty years old. This last fact may explain the subject of his opera, which is called "L'Ombra di Werther." It is in one act, and its characters are Charlotte and the ghost of Werther. Not a comic ghost, but a weird, ghostly ghost. Just a year after the suicide of Werther, Charlotte is sitting in her room reading his last letters. Suddenly there is a rap on the door, and Werther's ghost appears. She recognizes him by his passionate, amorous ululation. The grave had been obliged to give him up because his repose was marred by the thought that he had died without knowing whether his love was reciprocated. His laments continue till twilight appears, when he departs, his last strains being merged in a joyous Christmas carol sung in the street below.

A well-founded rumor is now going abroad that the well known and old-established house of Erard, the piano manufacturers of Paris, is contemplating retiring from business in the near future. Sebastien Erard, the founder of the house, was born in Strasburg in 1752, and died in 1831. He proceeded to Paris at the age of sixteen and started business as a pianoforte manufacturer about 1776. His life was spent partly in Paris and partly in London. He was the inventor of the harp with double pedals, and he also improved the sound-body of the instrument. But his fame chiefly rests upon his invention of the grand piano action, modifications of which are in use at the present day. His daughter married Spontini.

The death of M. Joseph Dupont, the famous conductor, who was for many years at the head of the orchestra of the Monnaie, Brussels, is announced. He labored for the Wagner cause, being the first to revive (1873) "Tannhäuser" in French after the Paris fiasco of 1861, and also the first to give "Die Walküre" and "Die Meistersinger" in French. M. Dupont, born in 1838, was conductor of the popular concerts at Brussels for over a quarter of century.

The intelligence has been received that S. E. Hartman of this city, who has been studying in Italy for the last four years, entered on an engagement at Ivera (near Turin) on Dec. 24, during the carnival season. The engagement will last until Feb. 10, during which time he will sing in "Traviata," "Trovatore," and "La Boheme." Mr. Hartman also has filled an engagement at Saluzza.

The discussion respecting the grave in which Mozart's remains were deposited has been increased by a letter from Karl Kruby of the Carl Theatre, Vienna. He writes: "King Ludwig of Bavaria having asked the widow of Mozart why she had not erected a monument on the tomb of her illustrious husband, she replied: 'I believe that the priest who officiated undertook to furnish the cross.' This is incorrect. In reality, neither the widow nor any of the relatives went to the cemetery because the weather was atrocious, and the composer was conveyed to his last resting place without the usual ceremonies, and buried in the common pit. Three days after the interment the exact place where Mozart reposed could not have been discovered. Moreover, since that time there have been four interments at the spot where he was supposed to be buried, the last occasions being in 1861 and 1869. It would be strange if his remains were not dispersed."

The Society of German Composers has published the following curious statistics, showing the growth of music in that country: Among virtuosi it places 580 singers, 240 pianists, 130 violinists, 110 various; 650 organists, 13,000 musicians of orchestras, of whom 8,000 belong to municipal theatres or orchestras; 1,300 capellmeisters, 8,000 military musicians, with 410 bandmasters; 2,350 directors of singing societies, 3,700 teachers of instrumental music, 1,350 teachers of singing, and 435

An ex-naval officer gives a hint for cooking fish and oysters which is perhaps more necessary for people on board ship in all sorts of waters than for people living on land with sea food supposed to come from places where the sanitary conditions are what they should be. The ex-officer says that while he was in service all fish and oysters cooked on board ship were cooked with a silver coin. If the coin turned black the fish and oysters were promptly returned to their native element and if it remained bright they were eaten.

The silver test has been proved to be an absolute fallacy with mushrooms, with which it was for a long time supposed to be a safe guide in detecting the poisonous ones. Now it is known that it is the same substance in the mushroom which makes the silver spoon become discolored that discolors them in the egg, and it is very likely the same with the fish.

There is an old couple in Brooklyn, said to be near relations of Admiral Dewey, who are dependant upon the charity of one of the churches. The man says that his mother was the sister of Admiral Dewey's father. He is between sixty and seventy, and his chief trait is vanity concerning his personal appearance. He always keeps his hair dyed a vivid black. The church pays the rent for the old couple, and sends them a certain amount of food each week, one of the church visitors having them in charge. They are somewhat particular about these contributions to their support; like their tea and butter of the best, and if cranberry or celery are missing from the holiday dinners provided for them, the visitor is sure to hear of it. They would never think, however, the wife says, of notifying the Admiral of their condition or asking him for assistance.

"The most attractive looking group I have seen for a long time," says a traveler, "was a mother with three children. They were people who belonged to the upper classes, evidently, and when I saw them they had just come into the city, and a porter was with them carrying their hand luggage. The children looked to be the same age, somewhere about five, six, or seven, and they were rosy, well-dressed little creatures, and the mother was equally attractive. She looked like a woman in perfect physical condition, pretty and plump, a woman who would never be troubled with nerves, and I can imagine no greater happiness for a woman than to be such a mother of such children. They all boarded a street car to go up town. The children sat quietly beside their mother, and she apparently gave them no special thought. They did not seem to be anxious to be amused, to look out of the window or do anything but sit there quietly. They, too, were without nerves.

"People are saying that the children of the present generation are being better cared for, but I think that is somewhat of a mistake. They are too well cared for. I call to mind one little boy, the child of wealthy parents, who cannot sit still one moment; he must do something always or go somewhere. He has too much notice taken of him; he is too much entertained. His restlessness amounts almost to a disease. If you see a French mother out with her children she tells them to sit down for a moment, and they remain quietly where she leaves them. One of the best things that can be done for a child is to leave it alone. Children are too much studied. I know a young woman who has everything to live for, and yet she has a nervous affection, due undoubtedly to undue care and attention. She has been entertained constantly from the time she was a baby in her cradle, and her nerves are overstrained."

There is one comfortable thing about getting into a new century, we shall probably not hear so much of the fin de siècle girl. She has been cavorting around in conversation and cold type in all sorts of possible and impossible ways for the last few years, until the words have come to be meaningless, not to say deadly dull. Probably not half the people who use the expression knew what it means, so it may last over for a time until the really bright person who says things not half bad in the first saying starts something about the beginning-of-the-century girl.

There is no use talking, the motorman does have a hard time. He needs sympathy, even if he has a bad habit of whisking cars by waiting passengers without so much as a sign of having seen them. Brooklyn has had a bad reputation for trolley accidents, and this little story will give an idea of how some of them occur. It was down on Flushing Avenue, not far from the navy yard, and the car was coming along rapidly. On the sidewalk stood two children, and in the street, not far from the track, a small boy of perhaps five or six, in an attitude as if ready to run at an instant's notice. That was exactly what he was about to do, for he was evidently "doing a stunt." Perhaps the motorman did not notice him, or seeing him standing there quietly in the street, he did not think anything about it. He came on at the regular rate of speed, when, just a second before he reached the child the latter darted across in front of the car. Poor motorman! He threw on his brake with all force, but not in time to reduce the speed of the car immediately. But the child's guardian angels were surely looking out for him that time or it would have been his last "stunt."

With the brake being put on so quickly and the boy being ready to give a quick jump, he got over, only the fender of the car striking him and throwing down, but at a safe distance. Poor motorman! The car had stopped and he did not look as if he had an atom of strength left in his body. It is not a pleasant thing to run over a child, though in case of accidents people seem to have a different opinion. The passengers in the car who had seen the narrow escape of the child were in almost as nerveless a condition as the motorman. The boy was on his feet in the meantime, running away as fast as he could go. When the motorman came to himself he started for him, but the child was too far away, and luckily, perhaps, for after that awful suspense, in the rage and anger of the reaction, it might have been better for the small boy to have met the car itself at full tilt than its ill-treated engineer.

She was a nice [illegible] woman and clever enough in many ways, but she was not a linguist and this sometimes made her a trifle unhappy. She could not even rattle off the few badly pronounced phrases in French that every one knows and that every one but a Frenchman would probably understand. So the other day at the literary meeting when the President suggested that the party use as many different languages as it could command in saying good night, this one little lady felt aggrieved. Why, when there were so many things which she might have done, did they happen to strike upon this stupid way of showing their literary ability? Then a bright thought occurred to her, and one smile after another chased itself over her face. She was one of the last to leave and good night had been said in French, German, Italian, Spanish, Turkish, and even Armenian, when, beaming with smiles, the little lady made her parting salute, saying as she did so, "Min bow, that's Chinese." She was not a teacher in a Chinese Sunday school for nothing and she had really made quite the hit of the evening.

"Say," she said confidentially to another teacher in the school whom she met the next day, "what does 'min bow' mean?"

"Why 'bread,'" replied the other woman, astonished that any teacher in the school should be ignorant of that common word.

"Oh, yes, of course, so it does, doesn't it?" murmured the little woman as she departed with a thoughtful expression on her face.

The family sold a dining-room table last week. It was a black walnut table that had been in use in the family for a good many years, but it was a perfectly good table and had six extra leaves. But when a bona-fide mahogany table, an heirloom of worth, had come to take its place, it seemed well to make a little capital out of the old standby, and it was finally decided to sell it. There was some consultation before this was done. One member of the family thought that as black walnut was scarce and high at the present time it ought to be kept.

"How nice," she said, "if we want a few bookshelves some time. You can go to work and make them up yourself," she said to the head of the house, "and we shall have good wood in them and it will not cost anything."

The head of the family demurred. He had made things before of things in the house and he knew that with a tool box containing only a gimlet, chisel, screwdriver, and hammer it was something of a task to make up these simple pieces of household furniture, to say nothing of the expense of having made to order the pieces that demanded certain tools he did not possess. Besides, there was the danger to life and limb in the process of construction. Then a practical member of the family proposed that the table be chopped up for kindling wood.

"Who do you think would buy such a table any way?" he queried. Can you imagine a dining table with six leaves in it in an ordinary flat or apartment house? It is too big for a house dining room, and any one who had money enough to live in a large house would not buy an old table like that, and you couldn't even get a boarding house keeper to take it, for while they want long tables, they must have them narrow."

But this good advice, as well as the other, was overruled, and it was decided to send the family treasure to the auction room. Paterfamilias went down to the cellar where the table had been stored to get it ready.

"There is nothing like having things you are going to sell in good condition," he said as he came up stairs, looking very warm but well satisfied. "I have brushed that table with the greatest care and tied it up so that it will not break in transportation," and he went into his room to change his underclothing, for he had worked hard and it would not do to go out on a cold day without a rubbing down and dry clothes.

An expressman came to take the table away and left the family in a blissful state of excitement. Even those members who had objected in the first place to the auction room felt deeply interested in the result. No one could have the slightest idea what that table would bring. It was like investing in stocks, only the returns would come in more quickly. The family discussed the matter of going down to the auction room on the day of the sale to bid the table up a little, but there were objections to that scheme. For one thing, it would be a good deal of trouble, you might have to wait half a day before the table would be brought out, and the woman of the family said that it would be dishonest. But it was really very interesting, and every one made a guess as to how much the table would bring. The next day there came a letter with a check. It was a business-looking letter and a check always seems to represent a good deal of money.

"Fifty!" exclaimed paterfamilias with glee as he glanced at the check; "can it be possible?" Then he looked over the bill. It read thus:

"For sale of wal. ex. table, $1.25; commissions, expenses, labor, and guarantee, .25; cartage, .50; balance, .50."

"There, I told you," said the woman, almost in tears; "we ought to have saved it for book shelves."

"It would have made fine fire wood," said the younger man of the family, also with an I-told-you-so air.

"And think of all my work," said paterfamilias, gloomily.

"That's the way they go," said the grocery man, sympathetically, as he cashed the 50-cent check. "When that grocery store up here sold out at auction they sold any number of boxes of soap at 25 cents which all the stores are selling for 24."

"Yes," said the girl at the hosiery counter to the woman clerk in confidential tones, "I want 'em good and large at the top, for you see when I go shopping I carry all my small packages in 'em."

"Goodness gracious!" exclaimed the clerk; "whoever heard of such a thing! I've known people to carry money that way, but nothing else."

"Oh my, yes," returned the girl with an air of modest pride; "I just hate to carry parcels, you know. Why one time I took home a little bottle of ink in that way. Yes, true as you live; but I wished afterward I hadn't, for after I got in the car it got twisted some way, and of course I couldn't fix it, and there was that ink trickling down into my shoe. I tell you it made a mess. I had to take off my shoes before I could go into the house."

If there had been more people at the station it would never have happened. If there had been a crowd, those three charming women would have been impelled by the feeling that always works in a crowd, and nustled in as fast as they could in their anxiety to get a seat. It was at one of the up town elevated stations and the three women, who were friends, were almost the only people there. They had the entrance by which they expected to get into the car all to themselves, and so it enabled them to be as leisurely as they liked about it. Probably they did not even stop to think that, but the room around them, and the absence of people, gave them the idea that there was plenty of time; there really was for once in New York's rapid transit system time to be polite, so each of those three nice women insisted that the other nice women should enter the car ahead of her. In the meantime the few other people at the station, less polite, had entered the car and the other gates were shut.

"Well," said the oldest of the three women, giving in gracefully at last. She made a little movement forward as if to enter the car, but just at that moment the gate was slammed and—it was too bad in these hurrying days when there is so little time for politeness—those three nice women were left behind.

The look of utter bewilderment and blank amazement on their faces was something astonishing to see. Not a thought of trains running on time had entered their heads while they were engaged in their little courtesies. It is too bad there cannot be a "concluded" to this story, but no one knows which woman went into the car first when the next train came along.

SOME GOWNS.

"The Surprises of Love" is an exceedingly well-gowned play. The wedding frock worn by the young woman who, in the absence of the real bride, poses in her gown for the amusement of the wedding guests; the pretty bouquet of hyacinths with the flying streamers of narrow white ribbons; the pretty hats, the pretty girls who wear them, are all attractive and up to date.

That wedding gown is supposed to be the gown of Mme. Marcelle Duval, the heroine of the play, Miss Elsie De Wolfe. Naturally, it was not made for her, but one does not have to know that to see the difference between that and Miss De Wolfe's other gowns. The wedding frock is very charming, but it is not Miss De Wolfe's style, which is quite individual, on as well as off the stage. Of the gowns she wears in this play the one which occupies the most prominent place in the last two acts is most distinctly characteristic. That charming blue house coat, as Doucet calls it, is worth consideration. It is really charming. It does not reach the edge of the gown by a foot. It hangs open at the sides from the shoulders, edged with dark fur, which contrasts charmingly with the soft, dull blue of the velvet, and held in place by straps of embroidery which cross from front to back. It fits to the figure only at the waist line at the back, where a bodicelike piece of the white satin belt lying in soft folds shows with a bit of blue embroidery upon it. The belt passes around to the front inside and fastens with a beautiful diamond buckle. That it is part and parcel of the simple little frock of white chiffon beneath it is shown by the bit of blue embroidery, like that which straps the coat holding the loose chiffon lace-edged sleeves at the elbow, and the fur bands at the wrist match the fur which bands the fronts and sides of the coat. Then, to go with this is the big black hood of tulle and velvet, which the handsome widow wears from her house to the pavilion in the garden, when she visits her extraordinary lottery prize. It is all unique and attractive.

The pink gown in which Mme. Marvelle makes her first appearance on the stage is a charming gown, also made up in simple lines and effects of soft chiffon, with a soft velvet belt around the waist. It is a warm deep pink, which contrasts prettily with the paler pink, blue, and heliotrope of the other gowns that are on the stage at the same time. The chiffon is made up with white panne velvet, delicately painted with pale pink flowers and duchesse lace. The skirt is made entirely of half-inch tucks, running lengthwise around the entire skirt. Or, they do not really run lengthwise in the front, for there they seem to have made an independent step and run diagonally, taking with them up one side the trimming of the skirt, pieces of the panne velvet in a cream duchesse lace setting, carrying it up to the waist at one side, while at the other it falls off into the demi-train at the back. Just how the tucks do this, and without an effort become perfectly straight in the back, it is impossible to tell, for it is a sartorial mystery, and the panne velvet mingles with and loosens itself from the lace ruffle of duchesse which edges the skirt in an equally mysterious fashion.

The bodice also loses itself in intricacies of lace and velvet. There might be an Eton jacket effect, there might be a collar, but whether there is or not it would take the modiste who made it to decide. There are the velvet and the lace over pink, all mingling harmoniously, and finished at the waist with the wide soft belt of pink panne velvet, with a big chou at one side. The bodice is cut pointed at the neck, but filled in with white tulle, which forms the collar and finishes the neck in the back with a big soft bow. The sleeves are all of the pink-flowered white velvet, the whole length of the sleeve on the inside of the lace and outside of the velvet, while the flare over the hand is of the lace. There is a pretty finish to the bodice of this gown, just at one side of the open-pointed neck—a poppy of black lace, with sparkling pistils and stamens of diamonds.

The second gown Miss De Wolfe wears in the first act is of cream silk net over yellow satin. The skirt of the net, which has a handsome appliqued pattern of lace around the lower edge, falls simple and straight over the accordion-plaited chiffon of yellow, which fluffs out a little at the lower edge. The pattern of lace comes up on the skirt in a pattern of deep points. The bodice is a simple little round waist of the net, and over this a little jacket of the lace applique with a slight point in the back and rounding up a little in the front. The sleeves and the collar are of the net.

There is a little hat that is worn with the pink gown that is very effective on but the simplest kind of a little hat off the head. It is one of those thin black straws, a Tuscany braid of black, and around the crown is twisted a fold of pink satin finished with a big chou or bow at the side, while under the edge of the brim are a few little blush roses.

For jewels with her yellow house gown Miss De Wolfe wears a long chain of diamonds set in platinum, with a small diamond heart with a ruby in the centre pendant. Two little diamond wings she wears, in her hair strings of pearls, a short string close around the throat, and sometimes a longer string, for pearls, while the most costly of jewels, are the least pretentious, and can be worn at all times and seasons. She wears only a few rings in the last act—three, and one of them is unique and attractive. One ring has three large diamonds, one two diamonds and an emerald, and the other ring is double of rich Roman gold, a ring for the little finger and one for the middle together. There is a diamond in the rings for each of the fingers, and joining the two stones a quaint emerald oblong square with an Egyptian inscription upon it, signifying good luck, an amulet perhaps or mascot which may assist Miss De Wolfe to do the good acting she does in that last act.

To speak of other stage gowns, there are those elaborate frocks of Mrs. Langtry's which have attracted so much attention. The principal feature of these in written descriptions that have been given both here and in England has been the low cut of the décolleté bodice. People have repeated with glee that old joke of the woman who is undressed for the evening. As a matter of fact, Mrs. Langtry's gowns, while they are cut low, are as eminently modest and respectable as a low-cut gown can be. There is hardly a chorus girl in town who wears so modest a gown, so there is one less reason for people going to see that very dull play "The Degenerates."

Velvet is being worn a great deal this Winter. One sees it more and more. Possibly it is, as one woman suggests, that people have been keeping their velvet frocks hoping for cold weather, and now giving up hope of that they are putting them on regardless. Velvet skirts are worn with separate waists with agreeable effect. One well-gowned woman wore at a lecture in a large hotel the other morning a black velvet skirt and a waist of velvet, with a delicate Persian stripe on a background of delicate pink, and a small, fancy yoke of pale blue velvet, with a high collar of the same, with appliques of white lace upon both. With this she wore a hat of light velvet, one of those millnery affairs which are apparently composed of high folds of velvet laid carelessly around the head.

A pretty hat that a pretty girl has given good service this Winter was made entirely of bright red silk, the crown and rolling rim all tucked, the hat set a little off the face, and in the front a big chou of black velvet standing up from the face and being carried over to the crown in the back.

IN FOREIGN LANDS.

OFFICIAL GREEK SYMPATHY FOR THE BRITISH.—In spite of the fact that the rules of the Greek Church prevented the holding of a memorial service in Athens for the English soldiers who had fallen on the battlefields of South Africa, the recent sittings of the Greek Chamber have been the occasion for some remarkable and eloquent avowals of moral support for Great Britain. The speeches made in Athens have far exceeded in fervor those made in Budapest, or even the Anglophile utterances of certain Italian Deputies. In the course of a debate the other day, M. Theotokis, the Prime Minister of Greece, said:

"It is the right of the Greek Government to declare that in the innermost soul of every Greek there is a deep sorrow for the reverses of England, toward whom remote as well as very recent history imposes upon us feelings of the deepest gratitude. England has not only contributed efficaciously to the creation of a free Greek State, but only lately has she again tendered us, among the first, a helpful hand in our misfortunes. There is no Greek who can forget England's kindness, and these feelings will always remain in the hearts of the Greeks as long as Greece exists."

M. Delyanni, ex-Premier, and now the leader of the Opposition, made a long and impassioned reply to the speech of M. Theotokis, from which the following passage is taken:

"The words of the honorable President of the Council certainly do interpret the feeling not only of the Government but of the entire Opposition as well, and not only of us who have seats in this Assembly, but of the whole Helenic race within and without the boundaries of the kingdom. The debt of gratitude of the Greek people toward the English Nation arises not only out of the prominent services rendered to the cause of Greek independence, but also out of the untiring endeavors which in common with those of other powers succeeded in extracting the great Greek island of Crete from her direful condition. Besides, Greece is bound to cherish and honor England if only by reason of her being the protector of liberty."

The Greek press of Candia, Crete, follows with keen interest the events of the war, and whenever the papers discover among the victims the names of any of the officers or soldiers whom they had known during the British occupation of Crete, they are eager to express in every possible way their sorrow and grateful affection.

THE FRENCH PRESS AND AN ENGLISH EXECUTION.—The execution of the confessed murderess, Louise Masset, in England, has afforded the Paris Anglophobic press the opportunity to renew the attacks upon the British Government, British laws, and British sentiment. Some of the papers even pretend to see in the hanging of the French woman the evidence of British revenge for the way in which the news of British defeats in South Africa has been generally received in the French capital. The following is a passage from an article by M. Millevoye, which appeared in La Patrie:

"The ignoble crowd saluted the black flag with enthusiastic cheers. England is the only country in the world where the executioner is popular. Whereas elsewhere the heads of States regard the prerogative of mercy as the highest attribute of their power, the reigning house of England is proud of showing itself merciless. The people approve this royal ferocity; they applaud this insensibility. It is the token of their loyalty. This Queen has certainly been created after the image of this nation, and each is worthy of the other. Moreover, at the present moment both one and the other are thirsting for reprisals. This corpse of a French woman consoles them somewhat for the thousands of English corpses—food for the African vultures. Will the Queen send to her General-in-Chief an end of the hangman's rope?"

M. Edouard Drumont, the anti-Semitic leader, write as follows in his paper, La Libre Parole: "Yes, we can affirm it: the execution of Louise Masset is the revenge of England for the joy with which France has received the news of her defeats; it is the revenge of Chamberlain, this hatefully vulgar fellow, who has a woman hanged, not being able to have the French hanged en bloc. * * * The persons who thundered against the French General Staff and courts-martial, and who called for the punishment of Jehovah to fall on the French people, did not find their hearts beat—if they have any—the slightest in the world at the thought that this Papist could be innocent, and at least was worthy of compassion."

IMPORTANT DECISIONS BY THE FRENCH MINISTER OF WAR.—Gen. de Galliffet has just solved a vexing question, which at one time threatened to assume an important political aspect—could the Minister of War punish citizens, who, being no longer under military discipline, had availed themselves of the right of petition? Several months ago fifty-six reservists of Auxerre, who had finished their period of military training, sent in a petition to the Minister of War complaining of one of their officers who was accused of having used insulting language toward them. According to precedent, those who signed the petition were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. The officer himself was punished by eight days' confinement.

The Reservists concerned referred their case to the League of the Rights of Man, founded by the Dreyfusites two years ago, and sent an appeal to the Council of State against the Ministerial decision. Senator Delpech used his friendly offices with the Minister of War, who thereupon frankly acknowledged that he had been overhasty in conforming to the precedent which demanded the punishment of the Reservists. He moreover added that the maintenance of such a precedent was inimical to the right of petition under a republican form of government.

Gen. de Galliffet therefore annulled the punishment inflicted on the petitioners and addressed a letter to the General commanding the Fifth Army Corps, pointing out that the disciplinary punishment inflicted on the Reservists, who had signed the petition after they had returned home, could not be maintained.

The Minister of War has just issued a decree prohibiting in the military clubs the following journals: Le Petit Journal, Le Gaulois, L'Echo de Paris, La Patrie, Le Journal, L'Intransigeant, La Croix, La Libre Parole, L'Autorité, L'Eclair, Le Petit Caporal, La Presse, and Le Soir. The committee of the syndicate of the military press passed a resolution protesting against this decree as contrary to the principle of the liberty of the press.

THE FIRST OFFENDER'S ACT AND THE CONVICTED FRENCH CONSPIRATORS.—Some of the Paris papers, in discussing the conviction by the Senatorial High Court of M. André Buffet, director of the political bureau of the Duc d'Orléans; the Comte de Saluces, and MM. Guérin and Déroulède, on various charges included in the general accusation of conspiracy against the republic, have raised the question as to whether the cases just tried actually come within the scope of the Bérenger law, which practically corresponds to what is generally understood as a First Offender's act.

Le Temps recently sent a communication of M. Bérenger, the father of the law, requesting his opinion on the matter. M. Bérenger replied as follows: "The answer to the question you put to me is to be found in the text of the law of March 29, 1891.

"In case of a defendant being sentenced to imprisonment or fine, if he has not already been convicted of crime or offense against the common law, the court may suspend judgment. So long as the defendant has not already undergone a term of imprisonment as mentioned above the suspension of judgment may be accorded, whatever might be the offense charged."

The text of the law is taken to mean that the High Court has it within its power to suspend the various sentences inflicted upon the defendants before it. The court, however, did not attempt to give the convicted men the advantage of the Bérenger law. Both MM. Guérin and Déroulède made it clear in their last utterances before the court that if freedom were given them they would not hesitate to join in any demonstration against the Government that might arise. It is now the consensus of opinion that the Bérenger law cannot be made to apply to the four convicted conspirators unless the Senatorial High Court of Justice is particularly reconvened for the purpose. This is considered as a most unlikely procedure.

FRENCH RESIDENTS IN LONDON APPEAL TO THE FRENCH MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS.—Le Siècle publishes a letter to M. Delcassé, signed by 125 French residents in London. The letter says in part: "We vigorously protest against the campaign of insults which has of late been directed by a portion of the Paris press against Queen Victoria, insults as unworthy of Frenchmen as they are unjustifiable. We protest quite as strongly against the evidently set purpose of certain English newspapers to receive and publish daily anything insulting or unfavorable to France, an intention which was shown particularly on the occasion of the recent events. These abuses of the press are creating an intolerable situation for us, their effect being to tarnish our good reputation in the eyes of a part of the British public, to diminish our prestige, to make our relations difficult instead of cordial, and in a certain degree to lead to the boycotting of everything French."

HOUSEKEEPING IN HAVANA.

American Tradesmen Charge Extortionate Prices—More Servants Necessary Than Here.

Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HAVANA, Jan. 22.—Keeping house in Cuba is far from being an easy matter. In the United States, where near or in a large city one may buy anything one wishes in the central market or in small neighboring ones. Not long ago we dined here with some friends, and our hostess remarked that she came very near telegraphing us not to come, as it was absolutely impossible to find anything in the market, meats or vegetables.

It is expensive at best living here, but for those who are privileged to buy provisions from the Commissary the expense is lightened. That privilege is granted to the army and to civilian employes of the Government. Everything is sealed tightly, so that there is no trouble in keeping it in this climate. Many things can only be bought in large quantities—cheese, for instance, which comes in nine-pound cakes, and soda and graham crackers, in ten-pound cans.

Americans complain of being cheated by Cuban dealers, and it is true that in many stores Americans are asked a much higher price than natives for the same article. However, persons who have been here for some time say that American dealers who have come here are far more exorbitant than the Cubans, and I observed this for myself a short time ago. I bought some Holland cheese at an American grocery, paying 40 cents a pound for it. The next day I bought the same kind of cheese of a Cuban on the next corner for 10 cents less on the pound, and I also found most other articles less expeusive there.

It is necessary to have several servants to do the work that one would do in the United States. The tiled floors need scrubbing very often in many houses it is done every day. This is offset in a measure by the absence of windows to be washed, although in the better houses there are a few panes of glass in every window. Besides the tiled floors of the rooms, there is the floor of the porch, without which no house in Cuba is incomplete, even the rudest houses having porches of some description, and they often extend half way around the house.

One feels very safe from fire in these houses, for, with the exception of the doors, doorsills, &c., there is no inflammable material about them. However, there are fire alarm stations at every turn, and an organized fire department. I am told that it is a volunteer organization, and that when there is an alarm the firemen, all of whom are society men, hurry home from party, dinner, business, or wherever they may be, and after doffing their civilian clothing and donning that of the fire department, drive to the scene of action. Last week there was a big fire in a lumber yard, when this plan was carried out, and before the ashes were cold the firemen were enjoying an "after-the-fire" supper in a neighboring café.

An American seamstress has just arrived here. According to her own statement she is going to work for the same pay as the Cubans. If so, then she is one of the few who have not come to make money, for the poor Cuban seamstresses receive very little. She works from 7 o'clock in the morning until 7 o'clock in the evening for 75 cents Spanish, equivalent in our money to about 58 cents. Besides this she receives a cantina for her meals. This amounts to between $2 and $3 a week.

FIREMEN AND ELECTRICITY.

Little Danger of Fatal Accidents from Contact with Currents, Says an Electrical Engineer.

"Yes," said the chief engineer of one of the large general electric companies, "the growing use of electricity, with the multiplicity of commercial currents, does offer new problems to the Fire Departments of large cities." The remark was made in connection with a discussion of the experience of the Brooklyn firemen with the current rail of the Fifth Avenue elevated road, when they attempted Tuesday night to play a stream on a burning motor car at the Flatbush Avenue station.

"Nine times out of ten, however," he continued, "the results will be more ludicrous than serious, as in the Brooklyn case, where the six men directing the stream were shocked by a current communicated from the exposed third rail through the steady stream of water. There no harm was done beyond startling the men into dropping the hose, which, when released, writhed about like a giant snake, drenched every one within range, and smashed a few windows. That was, of course, not pleasant for the dripping people nor the owners of the windows, but there was absolutely no danger to the lives of the firemen. The current in the third rail was only one of 550 volts, which, dissipated as it was by being so conducted, could give only a severe tingle.

"Oh, yes, it is perfectly true that a stream of water will act as a conductor in such cases. But it is a very imperfect one. In the first place pure water is in itself a poor conductor. Its efficiency as a conductor varies directly with the solid impurities in it. Then, though the stream forms an unbroken circuit from the rail to the metal nozzle held by the men, and through them to the earth, the spraying and large surface area of the stream dissipates the current greatly. In the third place, a short circuit is almost sure to be formed by the stream from the third rail to the track rails as the water spreads. This in itself would divert the current so that very little would be felt by the human beings who form a link in the longer circuit.

"The experience of the Brooklyn firemen might be duplicated wherever the stream falls upon a non-insulated wire conveying a current of any considerable voltage. It is possible in the case of trolley wires, and, I believe, also in the case of the main cables which carry the current for lighting purposes in a large office building. But, as I said before, there is no danger to life. It is only a disagreeable thing which the firemen may have to contend with. There may be a case, but this is scarcely more than hypothetical, where there is a real danger to life in a current conducted by a stream of water. It is only about two weeks ago that we had an example of such a case here in Manhattan. That was the fire in the testing department of the Edison Electric Illuminating Company's building in West Twenty-sixth Street. If the firemen had not been warned to withhold the stream until the current had been turned off from the large motors, it might have been a tragedy instead of a comedy, like the Brooklyn fire. Perhaps I ought to moderate my remark as to danger being merely hypothetical. But, after all, it could only be through ignorance, on which we need not reckon, that there would be real danger. When the presence of such great electric currents is known, it is a simple matter to turn them off before playing streams on the fire. In all buildings containing large motors or dynamos, the current, by means of switchboards, can be turned off at various distant parts of the building. It would surely be a hypothetical case where one of these switchboards could not be got at in case of fire.

"Moreover, if you stop to think about it, if the fireman would add rubber gloves to his present gutta percha outfit he would be practically insulated, with rubber coat, hip boots, and gloves. An electric current might pass along the dampness of his garments, reach the ground, and thus complete a circuit, but it would not be felt by the man himself unless he got soaked through. Even then the current transmitted by permeating moisture would be too slight to take seriously. If the intelligence used by the firefighters in meeting other difficulties is also exercised in this matter they need not fear electricity."

DEEP SPOTS IN THE HUDSON.

In One Place a Fifty Fathom Line Failed to Touch Bottom.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, Jan. 27.—There are a number of deep places in the Hudson, as every one is aware, but few know that spots ranging from a depth of twenty to twenty-four fathoms are frequently met with south of the Highlands. The deepest spot in the river is just north of West Point, where a fifty-fathom line failed to touch bottom. It is in the narrowest part of the river, where, during the Revolution, a chain was placed as an obstruction to British men-of-war. Recently it was suggested by Gen. John M. Wilson, Chief of Engineers, that the enormous quantity of stone taken from Dyckman's Cut could be dumped into one of those big holes.

A few years ago, when one of the Hudson River steamers was wrecked south of Cornwall and afterward drifted to the north dock, which is a little east of this bottomless hole, a diver was sent down to examine the boat. He barely escaped with his life. The boat rested on what appeared to be a ledge of rock. The diver stepped off this ledge and began to sink rapidly. The men on the surface felt the tugging at the ropes, and, knowing that something was wrong, pulled him to the surface. When he told them of the bottomless pit that nearly swallowed him the men all laughed, but the diver got out of his apparatus and refused to go down again.

From Haverstraw to Sing Sing the depth of the river is not more than seven fathoms, but off Fort Montgomery, where another chain was stretched during the Revolution, it is thirteen fathoms. There is a hole off Fort Washington Point which shows a depth of twenty-four fathoms. At the base of Cro' Nest is a stretch of water thirty fathoms deep. Here many soldiers have been drowned while bathing. Just south of this is a spot the bottom of which no man knoweth. It is called the World's End. How it got the name is a mystery. The oldest inhabitants knew of the dangerous spot and called it by this name.

At Blue Point, a few miles above Newburg, "there is another deep spot, where scores of skaters have lost their lives. It is a curious fact that over these deep holes only the thinnest ice forms, and most of those who go under could have avoided the localities had they only been acquainted with their dangerous character.

There are many legends connected with these deep spots in the Hudson, and stories of the most improbable nature are frequently told by the old boatmen who ferry passengers across from West Point to Cold Spring.

Mason & Hamlin Pianos

I believe your pianos to be of the very first rank. Their tone is broad and big, and possessed of purely musical quality; resonant, vigorous, and manly, yet full of sympathy, and capable of a nicety of expression which is remarkable for its delicate light and shade.

I congratulate you on manufacturing so fine a piano—it is unsurpassed so far as I know, its tone being sympathetic and remarkably full, while its action responds to any demand made upon it.

ST. PETERSBURG POLITICS

The International Situation Attracts Much Attention.

HONOR FOR A JEWISH SURGEON

Prosecution of the Finns Continues—Accidents in the Russian Navy—The Future of Servia.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 31.—Many sensational rumors have been current in St. Petersburg during the past fortnight concerning the international political situation. The one most worthy of comment is that Great Britain and the United States are on the point of joining forces with the Triple Alliance. This is the announcement gravely made by two or three leading newspapers of the Russian capital. This new alliance must, it is said, necessarily be directed against Russia and France. The Sviet, in an editorial on this supposed alliance, expresses the opinion that the object of this new combination of powers is to regulate the partition of China, between Germany, Great Britain, and the United States. The Sviet, however, stands alone in this view of the matter, the remaining papers being convinced that the new alliance is directed against the Muscovite.

Much has also been heard in St. Petersburg during the past few days concerning a mysterious scheme for the partition of Austria. All the world is, of course, aware of the serious crisis the dual monarchy is is at present passing through. In St. Petersburg, more particularly, it has been persistently rumored, of late, that the final break-up of the old empire is near at hand. The purpose of German politicians, and of Kaiser Wilhelm himself is, it is said, very evident. That purpose is the annexation of the 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 Austrians of Teutonic ancestry. As for Hungary, it would be left independent by Germany, to form a kind of buffer State (under the protection of Emperor William) between the Slavs and the Teutons.

In Russia, it is well to remark, the proposed dismemberment of Austria would be opposed by force. Should the Prussians attempt to invade Moravia and Bohemia the Russians would at once be up in arms. A Russian statesman with whom I was recently speaking on this subject said that nothing could stop the outburst of indignation among the masses of the Czar's subjects were Prussia to attempt the annexation of the Bohemian and Moravian Slavs. I have been assured on good authority that the eventuality of aggressive action by Germany in Austria was discussed at length recently by Count Mouravieff and M. Delcassé. It is even asserted that a new clause was added to the existing Franco-Russian treaty of alliance concerning Austria.

PROSECUTION OF THE FINNS.

The crisis in South Africa and other leading questions of international interest have put the subject of Finland in the background. Nevertheless, the process of Russifying the Grand Duchy is steadily pursued by the Czar's Government. In fact, the Governor General of the Grand Duchy loses no opportunity to make the existence of the Finnish people as intolerable as possible, notwithstanding that Nicholas II. recently renewed the declaration that "he sincerely wished to insure the happiness and prosperity of the Finns." The means taken by the Governor General, Gen. Bobrikoff, to carry out the wish of his sovereign are, to say the least, somewhat singular. It would seem rather as if Gen. Bobrikoff was doing his utmost to exasperate the naturally peaceable population of the Grand Duchy. A few examples of the measures taken by him will prove this. During the course of the year 1899 he suppressed, either absolutely or for a period of from three to six months, more than twenty Finnish newspapers; and this, notwithstanding the fact that these suppressions were in flagrant violation of the law and Constitution of Finland. The immediate results of the arbitrary and intolerant actions of the Governor General have been to deprive hundreds of people, employed in one way or another by the newspapers in question, of their means of livelihood, although their sole and only crime was to have been contributors or employes of newspapers which had displeased the Governor General.

The Finnish people, as is well known, are one of the best educated in Europe. Public instruction is carried to a high degree in the Grand Duchy, and many students devote their holidays to the education of the masses. This is displeasing to the Governor General. A fortnight ago he sent a letter to the Dean of the University of Helsingfors, relating to a report of the Russian police, in which complaint was made concerning "seditious courses of instruction" held by students. The Governor General, at the same time, let the Dean clearly understand that he would be put to the painful necessity of "taking vigorous measures" toward the university if such occurrences were reneated. The Dean at once investigated the matter, and soon made the discovery that the police report in question was a tissue of falsehoods from beginning to end, and informed the Governor General of the fact. A few days later the Dean called on Gen. Bobrikoff to give him a verbal explanation of the matter, and declared that the "university extension" movement of the students was worthy of the highest praise.

"Very well," replied the General, "but since this student propaganda seems to have resulted in some unfortunate misunderstandings, I think it will be wise for me to ask permission of the home Government at St. Petersburg to prohibit the university extension movement for two or three years."

It will be interesting to note what action the St. Petersburg Government takes in this matter. In the meantime, the Governor has taken another vexatious measure by prohibiting the Finnish soldiers from making the military salute whenever the National Hymn of Finland is played.

A NOVEL "JEWISH QUESTION."

A somewhat novel "Jewish question" has recently divided Russian society into two hostile camps. Following are the facts of the case: During the Russo-Turkish war, in 1877, a young military doctor, Mr. Grankrug, of Jewish ancestry, distinguished himself on several occasions by his bravery in caring for the wounded in battle. Every one agreed that he well deserved the Cross of Saint Vladimir destowed on him by the Czar. To fully understand the point of the story, it should be stated that this order confers on the recipient hereditary nobility with the many privileges attached. About a year ago Dr. Grunkrug requested the Assembly of Nobility of the Smolensk Province to have his name inscribed on the list of noblemen. The Assembly refused to grant the request. Dr. Grunkrug was, however, not to be browbeaten in that fashion, and appealed from the decision of the Assembly to the College of Heralds, which decided in the doctor's favor. In the verdict on the case it is stated "that the Smolensk Assembly has exceeded its powers; Dr. Grunkrug is a bona fide member of the Russian nobility, and consequently he has the right to have his name registered on the lists of nobles."

As was to have been expected, this decision, from which there can be no appeal, has enraged the anti-Semitic press in the empire. "A pretty sight," exclaims one of these sheets, "it is to see the Jewish name of Grunkrug figure on the lists of the nobility, side by side with such famous historical names as the Souvoroff, the Miklumoff, and others! The fact seems to have been forgotten that the law forbids Jews from becoming army officers, and yet the decision in the Grunkrug case recognizes their right to become officially enrolled in the ranks of the nobility, which furnishes by far the greater proportion of our officers."

On the other hand, however, it is a pleasing fact to note that the Russian Liberals heartily indorse the decision of the College of Heralds. The Vlëstnik Jëvropi, (Messenger of Europe,) which may be considered as the official organ of Russian Liberalism, expressed the following sentiments in a review of the Grunkrug case: "The College of Heralds must be congratulated for having put the Smolensk Assembly of Nobility in its place, and it is to be hoped that this rebuff will serve as a lesson for other provincial Assemblies. When the Czar bestows a title of nobility on one of his subjects, he, by that fact alone, deems the recipient worthy of the honor, and the nobles have but to bow their heads."

Russians are beginning to think that accidents in the navy are becoming too frequent. It is barely two years since the new battleship Hangoudd, which had been built at a cost of $5,000,000, was wrecked on the coast of Finland, and became a total loss. To-day, it is, likewise, a new man-of-war, the iron-clad cruiser Admiral Apraxine, which has been wrecked near the Hochland Islands. A salvage company is attempting to save the vessel, but it is feared that the efforts will be unavailing, and that the man-of-war will be a total wreck.

THE CONDITION OF SERVIA.

It is announced that Prince Nicholas of Montenegro will be the guest of the Czar at St. Petersburg in the early Spring. The purpose of the Prince's visit is, it is said, not unconnected with recent events in Servia. It is probable that the whole question of the present political condition of Servia will be discussed by the Czar and Prince Nicholas.

Much importance is attached to the coming interview, in view of the present disturbed condition of Servia, and the well-known sympathy of the Romanoffs for the Montenegrin Princely family. In fact, from what I hear, the chances are stronger than ever before that Prince Nicholas will, before long, be proclaimed sovereign of the "Greater Servia," which would include the Kingdom of Servia and the Black Mountain Principality. POLITICS OF SOUTH AFRICA.

British Colonists, Aroused to the Danger of Dutch Domination, Prepare for Sacrifices.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

NAAUPORT, Dec. 11.—The loyal Colonial has been awakened to a peril of British supremacy that he has hitherto underrated with the assumption peculiar to the Britisher, especially the British Colonial. The apathy of the Cape is now past, and all loyal classes are rousing themselves for even heroic sacrifices to implant firmly and forever Crown control from the Cape to the Zambesi. "Africa for Afrikanders," the rallying cry of the Afrikander Bond, would be more correctly rendered, "Africa for African-Dutch." I had expected to find at least English Radicals enrolled in its ranks. So far I have discovered none but Dutch—the Hofmeyrs, Sauers, and such. The British Afrikander, even of the third and fourth generation, has an inherent love of the country of his progenitors—Onsland to him is England.

If the Cape Dutch Bond has no desire to see Boer supremacy in South Africa, he has conspired in no very intelligent fashion to further the imbroglio between Boer and Briton, hoping to profit thereby. Positive proofs of Bond intrigue in the Transvaal have come to light. The revelations of Mr. Heyer, confidential clerk to the General Manager of the Transvaal National Bank, have caused some trepidation in Afrikander circles, and in countries less tolerant than England men now of authority in Cape politics would be languishing in prison for high treason.

If the Bond has had a definite policy, its retrogressive members have shown no great foresight in its pursuance. The Bond appears to have dabbled with Germany, the Transvaal, and the Free State. If they strove to attain independence, they showed but little disposition themselves to strike the blow.

Oom Jan Hofmeyr, the head of this caucus, is charged by some, on supposed positive proof, to have received in 1894 £2,000 from the Berliner Handslogessellschaft for electioneering purposes. Yet the Emperor's congratulatory cablegram after the raid was indignantly condemned by the Bond, and in an open letter Mr. Hofmeyr stated that German interference in South Africa would meet the bitter opposition of all Afrikanders and the seizure of Damaraland would be a first result. I believe that the hundreds of instances of past disloyalty now flooding the British press are grossly misrepresented. Bond intrigues were not aimed at immediate imperial control, but undertaken rather to combat at all hazards and submerge the Rhodes party. The future, I fear, will prove that the Bond actions have played directly into the hands of their opponents.

At the last Cape general election, while more actual votes were polled for English candidates, the numerical inequality of the polling districts gave a Dutch majority. The Bond undoubtedly led the Free State to count Cape disloyalty as an important factor for their success. The Bond was the power behind the Ministry—the inspiration of the Parliamentary majority. The Bond decreed neutrality of the Colony during the crisis, and neutrality was in part effected. Forgetting in their political hatred that the Rhodes party was, professedly at least, the imperialist party, that by aiming injudiciously at their opponents it would appear that they were aiming at the Crown, the Afrikanders have followed a reactive course. The present Cape Ministry now stands charged with responsibility for the early Boer success—even Mr. Schreiner has not escaped the brand of traitor. With the preponderance of home opinion behind them the imperialist party will not only urge extreme terms of annexation against the republics, but they will attempt the political humiliation of the Cape Dutch and an alteration of the liberal Constitution, so that an Afrikander majority will be impossible when the war closes.

British South Africa to-day is divided into hostile camps, arrayed against race. The endeavor of British and Dutch has unfortunately been sustained too strongly for a common stock to arise as true Afrikander. It is hard for the loyal British colonist to re nain quietly under what he terms a "traitorous allen administration of a crown colony." He is now ready to resent the liberal autonomy that allows an administration in an allen tongue to Britishers numerically their superiors.

The South African problem can never be solved until the fusion of the races has produced the true Afrikander. If the attitude of the Cape Dutch causes restriction of the liberal Constitution of Cape Colony and Natal, the Afrikander Bond will be alone to blame. Racial instinct may be strong, but, sentimental issues aside, the advantage that the Dutch party has taken of the liberal colonial policy that has given them practical control and their intrigues, which have menaced the peace of the colonies, do not demand sympathy.

In an old Dutch mansion in Cape Town the Afrikanders meet. The members of the Bond may be easily detected—they are polished editions of the Boer—short, ample waisted, bewhiskered men, in tall hats, frock coats, and the omnipresent rucked up trousers reaching to the tops of elastic side boots. This salon has made much of the history of South Africa—it is the home of the opposition of imperialism, and its existence is a tribute to England's political tolerance. The Bond leaders in the eleventh hour are protesting their loyalty to the Crown, but it is only because the success of Krüger and the inpouring of a new army corps have shown them that the friend of the war does not verge toward their ideal. But Imperialism and the Afrikander Bond are in antithesis, and thoughtful Dutch at the Cape are realizing that ir justice to her own people in her own colony, England may now severely curtail the Dutch privileges. Realizing this, they are making strenuous effort to substantiate their doubted loyalty and prove themselves true subjects of the Queen.

In the above I have spoken of the Cape Dutch generally. In this district, and, indeed, along the entire Free State border, genuine disaffection does exist, and riding away from the lines of communication one finds bitter hostility to the British among the more ignorant Dutch, and a widespread "hen on the fence" attitude inspired by the exegesis of the Boers, verified by recent defeats. "The Lord, indeed, is delivering the English Philistine into the hands of his people" they argue. These farmers are Boers living in British territory—they loudly denounce the apathy of Afrikanders in general, and boastfully jeer at the loyalists "so soon to be driven to the sea." But these malcontents are not typical Cape Dutch.

I have asked a dozen prominent Afrikanders, all exponents of Dutch South Africa, what policy the predominant party in the colony will support when the war ends. "Now this deplorable war is here, it will be the best for all concerned if the republics are brought into the empire," they replied. "And do you think this federation may ultimately become a great republic of South Africa?"

Arbitration Mass Meeting.

A mass meeting in favor of arbitration and peace is to be held at Carnegie Hall Thursday. Over 100 clergymen of this city have written letters accepting the position of Vice President of this meeting. The Chairman will also be a clergyman. Among the Vice Presidents are the Rev. Drs. David J. Burrell, Samuel H. Virgin, W. H. P. Faunce, President of Brown University; Henry E. Cobb, George C. Houghton, G. F. Krotel, J. B. Remensnyder, Charles E. Jefferson, Charles H. Parkhurst, Henry van Dyke, R. Heber Newton, Maltbie D. Babcock, and Charles H. Eaton. The merits of both sides of the South African war will not be discussed at this meeting. Its object is peace by arbitration, and the President of the United States will be urged to act, under the Peace Convention of The Hague. The addresses and resolutions will be solely in the interest of peace and the cessation of the slaughter of men on both sides.

AT THE TEATRO ITALIANO

A Primitive Temple of Tragedy on the East Side.

"AIDA" WITHOUT THE MUSIC

Boxes for Twenty-five and Orchestra Stalls for Twenty Cents—Good Acting in Queer Surroundings.

The fact that "all the world's a stage, and all the men and women merely players," may be the reason why love of the mimic stage, the portrayal of character, the visible expression of the emotions reduced to the fine art of the Thespian, is inherent in the human breast. For it is inherent in the breast of all mankind without distinction of class or nationality or race. The mimic stage, indeed, is, often enough, the camera obscura—the only medium—by means of which one class of society sees how another class on the higher or lower plane to which it may not ascend or will not descend lives and moves in the milieu in which fate has placed it.

Thus the Bowery has its serious histrionic attractions no less than the Tenderloin. The great difference between these attractions lies mainly in the poverty and wealth of the mise en scène rather than in the art with which sentiments and emotions are rendered by the actors. King Lear brought up to date as a venerable and highly respectable Jewish inhabitant of Vilna, will suffer no slow music at the People's Theatre the indignities heaped upon him by an ungrateful daughter dressed in latest New York fashion, and by heartless students in the low-crowned castors peculiar to the inhabitants of modern Russian provincial cities, with a realism that will bring floods of sympathetic tears to the eyes of his audience of Russian and Polish Jewish origin, and cause them to clinch their fists with virtuous indignation.

A block and a half west of the Bowery, on Spring Street, is another theatre, the Teatro Italiano, that is famed among the vast army of poor Italian denizens of the city below Fourteenth Street. This theatre caters to the needs of those to whom English is yet an unknown, or imperfectly known, tongue, sounding hard and unmusical to the ear, who seek solace and recreation in listening to high-souled sentiments uttered in their own soft vernacular, and in witnessing noble deeds performed by men and women of their own country.

EXTERIOR OF THE THEATRE.

Unlike the People's Theatre and similar institutions on the Bowery, there is nothing about the Teatro Italiano externally that is even remotely suggestive of a temple of the drama. In the basement is a restaurant. Above this is a projecting store front a few feet above the street level, the woodwork of which is painted brown. Over the store are the windows of two floors, the only other stories in the small brick house, which above the store is of a whity-brown hue, if it can be said to have any hue at all. Across the space between the two rows of windows appears in black paint the legend Pantagruel's Hall. Pantagruel! What, pray, is the joyous Pantagruel doing in this galley? It is a theatre, true; but Momus has no place here, and if he were to seek to install himself, or were he even to present himself at the door, Melpomene would meet him with sombre frown and send him about his business with scant ceremony.

For the Teatro Italiano has been consecrated to the tragic muse. The shade of Shakespeare is welcomed here, as are also the ghosts of other immortals of his ilk, and they give freely of their inspiration to an unknown genius, who adapts their language, ideas, and situations to the understanding of the theatre's clientèle.

Pasted on the store window is a small yellow playbill of the conventional ambulant circus order. Beneath this, stretching the whole width of the window, is a narrow strip of tarpaulin on which is painted the title of the piece holding the boards, with the announcement, in Italian, of course, that it is being performed by "insistent general request"—"ad insistente richiesta generale." Every attraction presented is in response to general request. This week it is the tragedy of "Aida." Next week it will be "Romeo and Juliet," or "Amleto, principe di Danimarca," or perchance "Cavalleria Rusticana," shorn, like "Aida," of its musical garlands.

Accommodation is to be had at truly popular prices. These range from 10 cents for a back seat to 25 cents for a seat in a box, and the habitué who indulges in the luxury of a box seat can economize by paying a dollar down, which will give him his entrée for five performances.

Come one, come all. Accorre tutti—all are welcome. Enter, enter. Why not? The American passer-by, with leisure and a penchant for the curious, fumbles in his pocket for 20 cents, the price of an orchestra stall, ascends half a dozen worn wooden steps, is headed off from a staircase, that leads up to the managerial sanctum and home, to a side door, and finds himself in the store—pardon, the foyer.

A CURIOUS INTERIOR.

The foyer is very small. It contains nothing but a most unaesthetic, unpolished coal stove, with its rusty pipe, in the middle of the floor, and a miniature cupboard-like box office against the east wall. Under foot is a cheap, patterned oilcloth considerably the worse for wear. Singing cheerily on top of the stove is a kettle belonging to the wife of the managerial bosom.

On presentation of the check, a door against which the doorkeeper leans, as he engages in conversation with the imprisoned ticket-seller, is opened, and a vista of a long narrow hall is disclosed. The ceiling is little higher than the top of the door, but from the entrance the floor slopes down to the fall in front of the stage, where the orchestra is installed, forming a gallery, as it were, from each seat of which a good view of the play is obtainable. The hall is about seven yards wide. Wooden benches, six to a row, on each side of a narrow aisle carpeted with occoanut matting, constitute the orchestra stalls. In the rear of these are a few rows of cane-bottomed chairs—the 15 cent places; and behind these, rough wooden benches, with backs, for the 10-cent patrons.

On each side, above the orchestra stalls and posti distinti, is a balcony—the boxes. These balconies are very near the ceiling, so near that their occupants run the risk of bumping their heads on rising, unless they are careful. In all there is accommodation for about 250 persons.

The walls and balcony fronts are adorned with wall paper of a gorgeous flower design, and Cupids sport in festoons of flowers on the ceiling around a star of electric lights that shines only on state occasions. Otherwise the place is lighted by electric bulbs and gas jets grouped at intervals on the balconies.

The stage is naturally on the same miniature scale, being, with the space usually available, about the size of the hall bedroom of a Harlem flat.

THE ORCHESTRA.

The visitor, after taking in his surroundings, ensconces himself in his fauteuil and awaits developments. In a few minutes half a dozen men make their way down the aisle, unceremoniously climb over the rail in front of the stage, and install themselves in a narrow pit. They constitute the orchestra of the celebrated Maestro Pasquale Priola, who seats himself at a piano below the prompter's hood. He gives the key to the violin, and then, using his forefinger as a baton, leads his musicians through the maze of a medley of operatic airs that takes in grand opera and opera bouffe, "Aida" and "The Serenade," "Le Prophète" and "Les Cloches de Corneville"—il y en a pour tous les goûts.

At last the little curtain, which has a view of New York Bay, with the Statue of Liberty, rises upon the hall in the Palace of the King at Memphis. The hall is not particularly grandiose. In fact, Ramphis and Radames appear ludicrously out of proportion to it, for their heads nearly reach the flies, and the throne, which is suggestive of a Punch and Judy show, affords ample furniture for the hall. The colonnade, with statues and flowering shrubs, however, is cheerfully dispensed with by the audience, and the picture of a mediaeval castle bathed in moonlight hanging on the wall on one side of the throne, with the daylight scene of an Italian valley forming its pendant on the other side, doubtless constitutes a sufficient substitute for the vista of the Pyramids and of the temples and palaces of Memphis.

The drama follows the plot of the opera pretty closely. Its main action passes in the hall of the palace, and a smaller room, which contains an exceedingly small and exceedingly modern kitchen table and a dining room chair that bears the same familiar stamp of the Bowery furniture store. It is in this room that the lovely, though dusky Aïda, la Schiava, her father Amon-Assar, Re di Etiopia, and the gallant Radames, Capitano Egizio, are overheard by the unspeakable Ramfis, capo dei Sacerdoti, plotting to fly "from where these burning skies are all beneath them blighting." The chair and table, it must be confessed, scarcely harmonize with the gorgeous costumes of Aïda and Radames and the other dramatis personae.

COSTUMES OF MANY HUES.

Aïda is attired in a black bolero edged with silver braid, which opens over a white bodice. Around her waist is a gorgeous pink scarf, whose ends dangle on a short black skirt with red embroidery over a longer skirt of pink and gold that descends nearly to her knees, displaying her crimson trousers, which end at the calf of the leg in white figured brown stockings. She wears black gloves and her hair down her back. Radames is resplendent in a green silk tunic with sleeves of faded blue and a crimson cloak. His legs are encased in glittering scale armor. He also wears his hair down his back; likewise a cap of greenish hue and of indescribable shape.

The revengeful Amneris is attired in a bright-yellow, low-necked costume of distinctly up-to-date cut. A red cloak hangs from her shoulder. Her hair is caught up in a knot on her neck, and she wears a little blue toque edged with fur. She and her father, Faraone, Re d'Egitto, who is enwrapped in a blue robe figured with white flowers and wears a turban with a conical crown, are very cramped on their narrow throne, and the King has to sit sideways in order not to mask Amneris's costume from the admiring gaze of the audience.

At one time, when the sacordoti, sacerdotesse, dame di corte, soldati Egiziani, and soldati Etiopi are supposed to crowd the hall there are as many as eleven persons on the stage. The hall certainly is crowded. So much so that if the high-spirited Radames were to emphasize his emotions with passionate gesture, which one sees he is hardly able to restrain himself from doing, he would be apt to knock somebody down. If that somebody chanced to be the white-robed, white-bearded fanatic Ramfis, however, the audience, it is easy to see, would manifest their satisfaction by enthusiastic plaudits. It would literally be the "hit" of the evening.

THE AUDIENCE.

And, by the bye, the spectators themselves are by no means an uninteresting part of the show. The occupants of the "boxes" and orchestra stalls are obviously tradesmen—opulent pushcart and coal and ice men. Some have brought their wives. Some have tired children on their knees. One man has a child on each knee—a boy and a girl. Secure in his clasp, the little ones lay their heads against his breast and fall into a deep slumber that even the music of the orchestra during the entr'actes does not disturb. No woman is with the man. This, one cannot help but conjecture, may be why the devotion of Aïda, whose love is stronger than the terrors of the tomb, moves him so that now and then he releases his protecting clasp of the little girl to brush away a furtive tear with his big, toil-grimed right hand.

A boardless youth squeezes the hand of his best girl, who giggles, as Radames and Aïda exchange a kiss with a passion in it that would make the famed Olga Nethersole kiss seem platonic.

Some of the women are hatless and a few wear shawls, but the younger women and the girls are for the most part attired in showy finery. The spectators on the rear seats—the gods—are of another set. Several of the men have no collars, and the linen of all is dirty. But from the front row to the last and up in the balconies everybody is intensely interested and appreciative, and follows the woes of the hapless lovers with sympathetic emotion.

They cannot help it, for the acting of Aïda and Radames is of a character to offset all the shortcomings in the matter of scenery and want of space, and even the distracting duet kept up with the performers by the prompter, whose hoarse stage whisper is distinctly audible even in the rear of the theatre, and in the death scene in the vault—where Aïda succumbs to the exhaustion of hunger and Radames slays himself with a dagger à la Juliet—is louder than Aïda's expiring accents.

THE CAST.

The stars who play the leading rôles so well, and whose names are familiar to all the Italian colony down town, are Antonio Majori, manager of the theatre, and Concetta Arcamone. The other members of the company with the parts allotted to them in "Aïda" are:

Faraone, Re d'Egitto, G. Orlandi; Amneris, sua figlia, Renata Brunorini; Amonassar, Re di Etiopia, Salvatore Lampiase; Ramfis, capo dei Sacerdoti, Giuseppe Zacconi; Una Spia, Eduardo Cinnirella; Franck, carceriere, Francesco Minciotti.

SNAKES FED BY TRICKERY.

Queer and thrilling are the methods employed at the reptile house in Bronx Zoological Park in satisfying the eccentric appetites of the snakes, as recounted by Keeper Charles Snyder, who has charge of the north cases in the reptile house. These cages contain most of the big snakes, and the poisonous species. Snyder has only been in the Zoological Park since August, but he has acquired plenty of experience.

A few days ago he emerged from the cobra's cage, where he had been nonchalantly seated upon the edge of the bathing tank, feeding the formidable inmates with fishes, which he presented to them upon a pair of forceps. He was asked how he felt during the performance.

"Oh, those fellows are easy," he replied. "They wouldn't bite. It's the diamond rattlers and the cottonmouths that keep a bead on you all the time, and wait for a chance to do business. When I go into the cage with those fellows to clean up, or to repair the damage when a ten-pound snake has tried to roost on one of the Chief Forester's pet rubber plants, I cover the beasts over with soap boxes.

"We have some pretty lively times in the cages once in a while. Day before yesterday I had orders to go into the boas' cage to rub some vaseline on The Ghost's nose. 'The Ghost' is our white boa constrictor. She had been trying to bore her way out of the ventilator, and had skinned the front of her face. I threw a blanket over her mate, and caught her by the neck. She put up a pretty stiff fight, but I was getting along all right when I felt something on my shoulder. I was kneeling down at the time, and when I looked around I saw that the male, the tan-colored boa, had lit out and was going to crawl over me. He's a regular fiend when he gets mad, and I didn't dare move. I stuck in that position for about ten minutes, holding 'The Ghost' by the neck, while the big fellow crawled over my shoulder and over into the corner, where he coiled up. He stopped a couple of times, and it was hardly a pleasant thing to think of what he might do. I was pretty stiff when I got up, but that's the only thing you can do in such a case.

"We've been having lots of fun lately in feeding our yellow tree snake. She's about the most stubborn beast in the collection. She came in last October from Trinidad and refused to take any food, so we stuffed her—that is, we forced some fish down her throat. Then we tried some other tactics. She is an awful biter, and she has such long teeth that when she grabs hold of anything she can't let go for a minute. A few days ago we stirred her up a bit, and then let her snap at a fish on a stick. It caught in her teeth and she held on. Then, finding all of sudden that she had something to eat in her mouth, she swallowed it. We followed this with about a dozen more. It worked like a charm. All we have to do when we want to feed her now is to pinch her tail, and at the same time poke a fish at her. The fish go every time when we do this, but if she isn't in a temper she won't even look at the fish."

"Do you have any trouble in procuring food for your snakes?" Snyder was asked.

"Yes, for some of the new ones, but after they've been in our care for a time we don't have any trouble. Some of the rat-eating snakes want live rats, but they don't get them except at pretty long intervals. We keep a few rats on hand, and when we want to feed a ratter we take a long strip of beef, clip a little hair from a live rat, and sprinkle it over the meat. The snake smells the rat's fur and dives in without loss of time. As for the rat, he doesn't mind being sheared at all, but seems to like it after a while. We often work the same racket on bird-eating snakes. In this case we have some of the smaller feathers from a chicken on hand, which we sprinkle over the meat."

Mr. Ditmars, who has charge of the reptile house, is anxiously watching the process of raising a colony of little water snakes which were born in the park last September. These youngsters at birth were eight inches long, and barely able to swallow a tiny minnow. They are now fifteen inches in length and feed voraciously on small fish. It is believed that the specimens will be much brighter in color, when adult, than specimens of the same species taken from their native wilds. This, Mr. Ditmars explains, is through the little fellows having been brought up in a uniform temperature, and protected from atmospheric changes of the outside air.

The little snakes are being cared for by Keeper "Fred" Dahl, who feeds them dead fish on the end of a pair of forceps, but so voracious are these youthful ophidians that he stands ready with a pair of sharp scissors, ready to cut the fish apart in case two, or sometimes three, of the reptiles start to swallow the fish at the same time, and, during this operation, endeavor to swallow each other.

THE STARS IN FEBRUARY

Positions of Saturn and Orion Favorable for Observation.

"THE LADY IN HER CHAIR"

Constellations That Will Be Especially Brilliant — Six Conjunctions Between the Moon and Planets.

Aside from the knowledge that we are gradually being brought nearer the time of bright blue skies and warmer weather, the month of February has no very particular interest to us from an astronomical standpoint, for, with the exception of the zodiacal light that about this time makes its appearance in the western horizon, there are few features of special interest to attract us. A remarkable appendage to the sun which extends to an immense distance from it produces the phenomenon of the zodiacal light. A pearly glow is sometimes seen to spread over a part of the sky in the vicinity of the point where the sun has disappeared after sunset. The same spectacle may also be witnessed before sunrise, and it would seem as if the material producing the zodiacal light, whatever it may be, has a lenslike form with the sun in the centre. The nature of this object is still a matter of great uncertainty.

It is probably now quite apparent to even the most casual of observers that the sun's influence is more powerful now than it was at the opening of the year. A lengthened daylight is also perceptible, as we have both an earlier sunrise and a later sunset, which unite in giving us almost an additional hour of precious daylight. The speed of the sun as it moves on its way toward the equator is also increased in February over what it was in January, southerly declination decreasing nine degrees between now and when March comes in.

We can begin to realize at this time, however, that as the sun pours forth in all directions with most prodigal liberality its torrents of light and heat, that our earth is intercepting but a small fraction of the whole. It seems as though the greater part of it must be wasted in the depths of space. Our fellow-planets and the moon also have but a trifle bestowed upon them. The portion allotted to us is, however, very precious, for if the radiation of the sun were intercepted, all life on this earth would cease. An immovable atmosphere would brood over an ocean which, if not actually frozen, could be only disturbed by the sullen undulations of the tides, and the deathly silence pervading the surface of the earth would only be broken by volcanic disturbance. Such, at least, is the reasoning of scientists who delight in speculating upon the theories of the improbabilities.

The moon is at first quarter on the 6th, reaches the full on the 14th, is at last quarter on the 22d, while the new moon does not make its appearance before the arrival of March. Viewed from the way we consider our time, the astronomers, however, say that it comes on the 28th at 23 hours and 25.2 minutes Greenwich mean time. This matter of different times, mean, civil, astronomical, and so forth, is always a perplexing matter, and although like numerous other things simple enough when understood, it is somewhat intricate to explain; so that it will be a very convenient matter to many if the proposition to have but one kind of time be agreed upon. February furnishes but six conjunctions in which moon and planets are interested, and, while three of the planets are occulted, there are no very picturesque events scheduled for the evening skies. Early risers may be repaid on the 24th by watching the near approach of the moon to Saturn and the hiding of the latter from view for a short while. At about 9 o'clock in the evening the glorious constellation of Orion stands in midheaven almost due south, while overhead is the constellation Auriga, the principal star of which, Capella, ranks in splendor second only to the Dog Star, as Sirius is familiarly known. In the north the two most striking of the circumpolar constellations—the Dipper, (or the Plow, as our friends in England call it,) and the W-shaped figure of Cassiopeia, "The Lady in Her Chair"—may be seen at about equal altitudes above the horizon, the one to the right and the other to the left of the pole stars. In the east is the constellation Leo, containing as a first-class attraction the bright star Regulus. This sickle-shaped group of stars, forming the head of the constellation, being about one-third of the distance from the horizon to the zenith. At about the same altitude in the west is noticeable a pair of second magnitude stars in the head of Aries.

These first magnitude stars can easily be identified by noting their relations to one another on any clear night as given here. Capella will be found almost directly overhead, Betelgeuse is the upper and Rigel the lower of the two bright stars in Orion. Sirius is situated below and a little to the left—the left of the observer is meant—of the constellation, its surpassing brilliancy rendering its identity unmistakable. Procyon, still further to the left and at a greater altitude, is at about the same distance from both Sirius and Betelgeuse, forming with these two stars nearly an equilateral triangle. Aldebaran is to the right of Orion, the three stars in the Giant's Belt lying about midway between this star and Sirius.

Regulus, although usually reckoned as a star of the first magnitude, hardly equals any of the others under that heading in brilliancy. Midway between Regulus and Capella, a little below a straight line drawn from one to the other, are the Twins—Castor and Pollux, the Gemini of the almanac. Pollux, the more southerly of the two, is somewhat the brighter.

Venus, brilliant and charming, is about two and a half hours behind the sun, and in the constellation of the Water Bearer. On the 1st she and the moon will be some 7 degrees from each other, which is their closest approach for the month. It is pleasant to know that this most beautiful of the planets is getting gradually larger and lovelier as she gets further and further away from the sun, and that this process of becoming more enticing will continue until the year is half gone.

Neptune is one of the planets occulted by the moon; and the event takes place on the 9th. To those who have access to glasses of sufficient power the planet it will be interesting to see the two bodies gradually approach until they seem to touch, when one apparently disappears, only to reappear on the other side when the separation begins. Mercury is now too close to the sun for us to see him, and is in conjunction with the latter on the 9th. When he passes to the other side he will be an evening star, and early in March we shall probably be able to find him just after sunset. Jupiter is up now away ahead of the sun, and on the 28th will be at the position known as quadrature, which is six hours in advance of the sun and half way on toward opposition. He is still the most conspicuous object of the morning hours, and his size is increasing as he draws on to the half-way post. Uranus is ranged under Jupiter's banner as one of the morning stars, and he, too, is occulted by the moon on the 23d of the month, Uranus and Jupiter keep fairly close to one another in some of the events on the monthly programme for less than three days after Jupiter is in quadrature. Uranus experiences a similar phenomenon.

Saturn is another of Jupiter's intimates in the early morn and is also one of the occulted. He also will reach quadrature the coming month, but is a bit outclassed by Jupiter in the race toward opposition.

Mars is the last of the planets for February to be in conjunction with Luna. This meeting is not of particular interest, as there is too much distance separating the two celestial actors. Mars is now in the constellation of the Goat, and is no doubt well known to the residents of the upper portion of Gotham.

Annual Report of Norwegian Home.

The seventeenth annual report of the Norwegian Lutheran Deaconesses' Home and Hospital, at Forty-sixth Street and Fourth Avenue, Brooklyn, has been issued. During 1899 the hospital was constantly filled with patients, the total number being 1,621. Medical attendance was furnished to 71 cases outside the hospital, 258 were assisted with medicine, 54 with coal and wood, and 85 with lodging and house rent.

Consumers' League Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Consumers' League of this city will be held in Assembly Hall, 156 Fifth Avenue, to-morrow afternoon. Mrs. Frederick Nathan will preside, and short addresses will be delivered by Dr. Felix Adler and Mrs. Florence Kelley, Secretary of the National Consumers' League. Edwin Markham will make a few remarks on "Labor vs. Drudgery" before reciting his poem, "The Man with the Hoe."

Endorsed by Musicians.

THE PIANOLA

Is an instrument by means of which any one can play the piano.

The Pianola is bringing into use thousands of pianos that have been silent for many years.

It is making players of people who, lacking musical training, had never expected to experience the pleasure of producing music for themselves.

It is increasing the repertoire of amateur and professional pianists by making the entire literature of the piano instantly available without study and without practice.

The Pianola looks like a small cabinet. It has small felt-covered fingers that rest on the keys of the piano and, operated by pneumatic power, strike the keys with a pliant, yielding and remarkably sympathetic touch that is almost identical with that of the human fingers.

When not in use the Pianola may be easily rolled away from the piano and moved to another part of the room.

The Pianola can be used in connection with any Grand or Upright piano and does not in any way mar or disfigure the instrument. It can be easily and quickly adjusted by any one.

The action of the Pianola is so simple that even a child can readily learn to play it; at the same time it is capable of so much expression that its greatest admirers are those who best understand and appreciate good music.

PRICE $250.

Can be bought by instalments if desired.

It is a significant fact that the Pianola is the only piano player which has received the endorsement of musicians.

EMIL SAUER orders two more Pianolas in a letter just received from him in Germany, and says:

"The instrument works in every respect absolutely perfect, and I am by this sensational and epoch-making invention more delighted than ever."

THE BABIES' MICROBE CLUB.

"We call ourselves the 'Children of the Microbes.' Pete Murphy doesn't like the name. He says there 'ain't no microbes in his family,' but Pete doesn't understand, and when you explain he isn't very polite. He says just what he thinks instead of agreeing, and then saying he doesn't like a thing after he gets home. It is very hard to form a club with people like Pete in it. But then Pete doesn't belong in club circles. He is the little boy of Mrs. Murphy, the washwoman. His mother doesn't belong to any clubs. My mother does, and that is the way I came to organize this. I know all about it. My mother has just joined a new club. They call it the 'Bay Ridge Association for the Introduction of the Hygienic Element into the Home.'

"Isn't that a lovely name? They don't say it all at once, usually. They call it for short the 'B. R. A. I. H. E. H.' You can't say that until you have practiced a good while, but it needs to be a good long name, for they talk a great deal about microbes, and no one who has not had

Features of Some Seasonable Sports.

Show the average man a new bicycle, and the first thing which he does is to spin the pedals. Hand him an unloaded gun, and he immediately snaps the hammer. The first operation does him no particular amount of good, but it doesn't hurt the wheel, while the latter bit of playfulness raises the very mischief with firearms. The shoulder of the firing pin of a centre-fire gun or rifle was never intended to come down hard in contact with the casing in which it slides, and it does not improve it to have it snapped down without the soft metal of a cartridge to act as a cushion. The effect is still worse when the arm so treated is a rim-fire weapon.

The rim-fire cartridges are exploded by the hammer or firing pin squeezing the rim of the cartridge—in which the fulminate rests—against the unyielding surface of the end of the barrel. When no cartridge is in the chamber, the firing pin, or hammer, strikes the end of the barrel, making a tiny dent, which is deepened at each repetition of the operation until there is soon a hole in front of the rim, and the hammer must be snapped several times until the cartridge is jammed down into the cavity sufficiently tight to be fired. Hundreds of rim-fire rifles, pocket rifles, and target pistols are annually ruined through this practice on the part of people whose common sense should teach them better. It is, therefore, a good plan when handing a man an arm for examination, to either tell him that it is loaded, or else to first place an exploded shell in the chamber. In the first instance he will refrain from his usual pleasantry, or in the second, the soft metal of the shell, or primer, will intervene between his folly and probable damage.

Speaking of pocket rifles reminds me that if the fisherman, cyclist, pedestrian, and canoeist were more intimately acquainted with the merits of this convenient little arm, it would occupy an honored position in the equipment of each. They are a single-shot pistol with barrels of from ten to eighteen inches in length, and furnished with a detachable stock, which makes them practically rifles of light weight and great compactness. Slung over the shoulder, strapped to the cycle frame, hung to the side of the canoe, or even carried in the overcoat pocket, they are always with one, affording many an opportunity to carry home unexpected game and take advantage of chance shots that may be offered.

There are several makes on the market, but it is odd that most of them have a rather inconvenient method of fastening the detachable stock by means of a set screw, which is sometimes a slower operation than the shooter would wish. The best model for quick work is one in which the stock remains permanently affixed to the arm, but is easily pushed up forward, out of the way for pistol practice, but quickly drawn out and automatically locked in place for use when needed.

There is a point that most pocket rifles and target pistols share that causes a great deal of unnecessary expense. I allude to the fact that they are chambered to take the long rifle cartridge. Now a barrel of from six to twelve inches in length is not sufficiently long to burn the amount of powder contained in the long rifle cartridge, and there is no earthly advantage gained by using a heavy instead of a light charge of powder, unless the difference in the loads be burned in the barrel where it will give additional velocity to the bullet, and the man who shoots a long rifle cartridge in a short barrel simply pays the difference in price between this ammunition and the short, for the privilege of scattering sparks and unburned powder from the muzzle of his arm.

By many well-meaning and tender-hearted people the sport of live-bird shooting from traps is regarded as a cruel practice, and many efforts have been made in some localities to have such matches prevented by law. If those who believe the practice to be a cruel one would attend a few pigeon shoots, they would, if open to conviction, become speedily converted to the opinion that there is no more cruelty practiced at the shooting grounds than in the average chicken yard, where fowls are killed for the table—less, in fact, for the doomed chicken is very often chased all over the place and frightened half to death before a badly nicked hatchet completes the operation.

The quality of the sport derived from pigeon shoots depends upon the condition of the birds, and, in order that they may fly strongly and promptly, every care is taken that they be in the best shape when put into the traps. Compared with the treatment received by poultry shipped to market, that of the bird intended for a gun-club tournament is simply regal, and it is probably a matter of supreme indifference to the pigeon itself, whether the end comes through being cut down in mid air by a charge of shot or having its neck wrung. Possibly the former, being quicker, is preferable. Still, some people who enjoy pâte-de-foie-gras do a great of talking in regard to the cruelty of live-bird shoots.

The despised blue print, which many amateur photographers regard only in the light of a proof paper, is nevertheless capable of very pretty results if a reasonable amount of care is taken in working with it. This applies particularly to marine views, in which it gives beautiful water effects. To those who are tired of paying 10 cents per dozen for blue print paper the following formula is given, by the aid of which they may become their own manufacturers and try the effects obtained with papers of different grades of surface finish:

Take 1¾ ounces red prussiate potash, 1½ ounces citric iron, and 16 ounces distilled water. Fasten the paper securely at the corners to a piece of planed board with pins or thumb tacks, and apply the above solution with a camel's hair brush. Lay the board, with paper attached, in a dark drawer to dry. It is best to use large sheets of paper, cutting them to the size desired after drying. Considerable time and trouble is involved but the amount of solution given above will be found sufficient to treat more than a thousand 4x5 printing papers. Letter sheets, 16x21, will be found to cut up most economically for the above size of prints.

Crow hunting does not sound very sportsmanlike, and certainly the game if bagged would scarcely appeal to the palate of an epicure, yet considerable sport may be had in the pursuit of the sable thief and much good work done by the lessening of his numbers. While generally hated by the farmer as a robber of his cornfields, this is really the least of his offenses, and if the sportsman were aware of the number of birds' nests annually pillaged by the sharp-eyed bandit, he would be shot upon every opportunity.

The crow has all the omnivorous characteristics of the barnyard fowl, with greater intelligence and strength, added to considerably better facilities for getting over large tracts of country. Indeed, the amount of successful hard work which he does annually in keeping down the census of birds smaller than himself entitles him to a special crusade at the hands of riflemen. I say riflemen advisedly, for any one who has ever tried to bag him with a shotgun knows that the task is pretty close to being a hopeless one. Many shooters of fastidious tastes will probably be inclined to laugh at the idea of seriously trying their hand at crow hunting, but, really, there seems to be much better reason for it than for banging away at a poor little woodchuck, peacefully sunning himself in fancied security on his doorstep, and the rifleman who can approach within range of a crow and bring him down has earned the pair of wings that falls to him as trophy. At this season of the year the crow may be found along the salt meadows, mud flats, and beaches of the small tidal waterways of the country above the Harlem and along the Sound.

A wheelman, equipped with a take-down rifle, who will ride along the Prospect Hill Road, which connects Pelhamville with Bartow-on-the-Sound, and leave his wheel at the roadside, may, by pushing down hill to East Chester Creek, find the object of his quest along the shores or in the dead trees on its banks. It is not precisely easy work, as the crows always have a lookout in some high tree in the vicinity of their feeding grounds. Although they seldom allow one to approach within effective shotgun range, a rifleman will often be able to get a shot at them before they take alarm. A rifle taking the twenty-five or thirty-two Ideal cartridge, loaded with smokeless powder, will be about right for this kind of work, and a short telescope sight, the same as used for woodchuck shooting, will be found a great help and is easily carried.

Next to the crow the red squirrel is probably the most ruthless destroyer of bird life. Eggs or nestlings are all the same to his taste, and when his appetite is appeased he will continue to kill just for the pure love of killing. The pretty little fellow is a small fiend incarnate, and is so dreaded by his larger gray cousin that the latter never attempts to make a stand when attacked, but takes to immediate and undignified flight, pursued by the little gladiator.

The present tendency toward the substitution of blue steel for Damascus barrels in shotguns makes things much more comfortable for the shooter owning a moderate-priced weapon, for, although there are several grades of the former variety, it would take an expert to distinguish them at a casual observation, while the fineness of the figure in the Damascus barrel gives a pretty approximate idea of its value at sight.

Years ago when the high-grade steel barrel was something new on the other side and many cheap grades of American guns were fitted with "decarbonized" steel barrels, a shooter sent his brother an expensive English hammerless. "Seems to me," he observed, looking askance at the arm, "that Bob might have bought a decent pair of barrels while he was about it." A little closer examination showed "Whitworth Compressed Fluid Steel" stamped on the breech, and an inquiry at a gun store disclosed the fact that those plain blue tubes had cost about £8 more than the price of a handsome pair of Damascus barrels.

Nowadays it's different, and the man with a low-grade gun and cheap steel barrels feels sweller than one equipped with the more expensive figured variety.

I wonder, of the multitude who attended the cycle show, how many were riders in the early eighties. Those who were realized that great as have been the changes in models since that time, they were as nothing compared to the different status of the wheelman then and now. Then we were barred from the Park and the Riverside Drive, now we ride everywhere and have cycle paths for our exclusive use. Then we were looked upon with disapproval and sternly dealt with if a horse shied at us. Now, if run down or crowded by a vehicle, we have the driver promptly arrested and subsequently collect damages for any injury that he has done us or our mount. Then we were regarded as a lot of hare-brained riders of freaks and our "knickers" called forth unflattering comments from the irreverent small boy. Now "knickers" are the fashionable dress for all out-door sports and may be worn to business without exciting interest. And still, in spite of all that has come to us, first in the way of privileges, then of rights, I doubt if the rider of to-day's safety feels half the thrill of exhilaration that we old riders on the high wheel experienced as we rolled through the country, perched high in the air.

The wheelman of to-day, warned by road maps and carefully placed League of American Wheelmen signposts, either dismounts at the brow of dangerous hills and leads his wheel, or back pedals all the way. We of the old days, with no idea of what was coming threw our legs over the handle bars and trusted that Providence would help us out, and Providence generally did, for very few of us were killed or seriously injured. In spite of this fact no bicycle riders could for years take out an accident policy covering injuries received while awheel. The man of the present day either has an effective brake or utilizes his foot; the old-timer's spoon brake, on the large wheel, generally made matters worse by hastening a spill, and its proper use was only acquired after many headers over the handle bars.

The cyclist of to-day can get a good ridable mount for $30, while we paid $150. We also paid $8 for a lantern and $10 for a cyclometer that lied like a gas meter; but we were happy, and I rather incline to the opinion that we had a better time. You see we were, like all men, terribly vain, and those who did not despise us admired our apparent rashness in tempting such awful falls, which, by the way, we rarely took. It looked so terribly hard to ride a wheel and there were so few, that we received credit for an amount of skill which we never possessed, and the girls generally thought us little short of heroes. The advent of the low woman's wheel taught them how very easy it really was, and we have fallen from our pinnacle, never to be reinstated.

On Thursday night of next week there will be a meeting of a number of revolver shooters at the gallery of Capt. John S. Conlin, 315 Sixth Avenue, for the purpose of definitely deciding upon the date and the details of a revolver tournament, to be held some time this Winter. Among the gentlemen who are interested in the proposed shoot are Dr. Sayre, Theodore Beck, J. B. Collins, George Bird, A. A. Weber, F. E. Haynes, Benjamin F. Wilder, "Aleck" Stein, A. C. Cohen, Dr. C. T. Adams, Major Crocker, and Col. N. B. Thurston.

In order to make the tournament interesting to many who have not had very much experience in this branch of sport and who object to being placed on the same level with the expert amateurs or even professional shooters, as has been done in many affairs of this kind, it is proposed to divide the shooters into five classes. Class No. 1 will consist of beginners who have not practiced for over six months. The second class will contain amateurs who have been shooting for one year or more, but who have won no prizes in any event in which they have participated. Class No. 3 will consist of amateurs who have won prizes other than the first. Class No. 4 will contain those who are amateur shooters and have won one or more first prizes. The fifth class is open for entry to any one either amateur or professional, and with no limitations as to previous records in shooting.

It is proposed to allow the use of any revolver with a barrel of seven inches or under in this contest, and in the matter of ammunition every shooter may use such as appeals to his own particular fancy, either factory made or reloaded with full or reduced charges. It is altogether probable that this tournament, in which the prizes will be simply badges of small intrinsic value, and in which the object will simply be to encourage shooting among those who have heretofore been barred from taking part in similar events, will prove extremely popular, and one which will interest most of the shooters in this city. Special pains will be taken to give every one, from the beginner to the expert, as even a chance as is possible.

A cordial invitation is extended to all who are interested in the matter to meet at the gallery next Thursday night and offer such suggestions as they may think advisable toward making the tournament a success.

AUTOMOBILES ON VIEW.

Features of Some Horseless Carriages Exhibited at the Bicycle Show.

The exhibition that has attracted thousands to Madison Square Garden during the past week did not bring them to the vast amphitheatre for the purpose of examining the bicycles exclusively. As a matter of fact, the show of automobile vehicles of every description was the strongest feature of the week, and hundreds examined the mechanism of the horseless carriages with great care and minuteness, while but a casual glance was given to the bicycle, with all of its up-to-date improvements.

There were all kinds of motors as well as shapes of vehicles, and the difference between the gasoline, naphtha, electric, and other motors was the subject of anxious inquiry on the part of interested spectators. Each of the various salesmen in turn glibly attempted to convince every prospective purchaser that his particular motor was the only reliable one.

"Useless carriage" was the humorous term applied to an automobile by one of the spectators who strolled past the stand of one of the exhibitors. Upon being asked to qualify his remarks, he replied that he meant "horseless," and then further explained by saying that they were doubtless "useless" when the electricity did not work.

A feature of one of the gasoline automobiles on exhibition is an arrangement by which no water is used in its operation, gasoline only being employed, there being no carburettor present. There is a compensating rear axle for turning corners and an equalizing front axle for uneven roads. The motor can be attached to any carriage body, for the reason that no machinery is used in the body of the vehicle. There is no steering lever in front to interfere with the knees. There are two steer centres hung on ball bearings, and all of the ball bearings have two rows of balls. A compound hand brake is used on wood or steel rims. The truck is made of steel tubing. Pushing one button rings the bell, another operates the brake, and a third changes the speed. The engine is operated by a dry battery and is self-oiling.

Another motor that has attracted a goodly amount of attention is propelled by a storage battery. The storage battery is a number of lead plates placed in a rubber cell and submerged in acid. The current is led from the batteries to a controller, and from the controller to the motor. The controller is practically a number of small switches operated by a single lever. In going ahead the lever is pushed ahead, thus closing a certain number of switches which group the batteries, allowing a small amount of current to the motor. Pushing the controller ahead into the second notch groups the cells differently, allowing a greater amount of current to flow, and consequently increasing the speed. On the reverse, the direction of the current on the motors is simply changed, which causes it to run in an opposite direction, by the same handle on the controller. Steering is done by a handle that comes within reach of the hand, which is simply pushed backward and forward. The brake is operated by the foot, and is generally what is called a band brake. The carriages are generally perfectly noiseless, and there is absolutely no vibration, because the motor is of rubber.

An advantage claimed for the electric automobile is the absence of smoke or smell; but this is offset, in the opinion of many enthusiastic automobilists, by the fact that the fuel for a gasoline or naphtha carriage can be replenished at any place in the country at a low rate, while if the storage battery of an electric vehicle is exhausted, the operator is practically helpless.

AMATEUR ATHLETIC NOTES.

The New York Interscholastic Athletic Association and the Long Island Interscholastic Athletic League have arranged for a series of inter-city contests. The champion hockey team of each association will meet at the Clermont Avenue Rink in Brooklyn on March 7. A track athletic meeting has also been arranged to be held on May 19. This is to be after the two associations have held their annual games, so that the winners of the various events will compete for the inter-city championship.

New York University, through its track athletic manager, F. H. Cann, has sent in its entry for the college relay race to be held in conjunction with the games under the auspices of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club at Madison Square Garden Feb. 10. Columbia, Cornell, Princeton, and University of Pennsylvania have also entered teams in this event.

An international flavor will be given to the boxing and wrestling championships of the Amateur Athletic Union, which will be held in the Broadway Athletic Club on Feb. 14, 15, and 17, in the entry of John H. Scholes of Toronto, Ont. Scholes is one of the best 125-pound men in the amateur ranks, and was to have competed in the Amateur Athletic Union championships last season; but owing to illness he was unable to come on. Later on, however, he went abroad and competed successfully in his class in the English championships, returning with a handsome trophy.

FIELD AND TRAP SHOOTING.

A National shooting tournament will be held at Hot Springs, Ark., during the week beginning Feb. 12, under the auspices of the Arkansas Gun Club. It will consist of target and live bird events, and will be open to the world. The preliminaries will be held on Monday, Feb. 12, to be followed by three days of target shooting, ten events each day, with $25 added money to each event.

The live bird handicaps will begin on Feb. 16, and will be concluded on the day following, with $200 added money. "Jake" Parker of Detroit will have the management of the tournament, and from indications it will be a great success, as scores of shooters from all parts of the country have already expressed their intention to be present. The feature of the tournament will be 2-cent targets and 25-cent live birds, affording a great saving to shooters. The railroads have made a rate of one and one-third fare for the occasion in the territory between the Atlantic Ocean and the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. George S. McAlpin, the champion amateur wing shot of America, has announced his intention of withdrawing entirely from match shooting. In making this announcement Mr. McAlpin said that he had found the notoriety that he was receiving exceedingly objectionable, and that it is, from a business point, injurious to his interests. If Mr. McAlpin sticks to this determination he will, like Charles Macalester of Philadelphia, retire from match shooting at the traps, an unbeaten man.

The Possum Club of Staten Island will hold a target shoot at Castleton Corners on Washington's Birthday, to be followed by a dinner at Mulvaney's Capital, on the Turnpike Road.

The recently organized Medicus Gun Club of Brooklyn is composed of five active members, each of whom is a physician.

Louis H. Schootemeier has arranged to hold a live bird tournament under his own management at Dexter Park on Feb. 6 and 7.

Capt. A. W. Money of the Carteret Gun Club started on a Western trip a few days ago. While away he proposes to visit Omaha, reaching there in time to be present at the great intercity shooting contest between teams representing the highest order of skill to be found in Omaha and Kansas City. At the contest between the same teams shot some weeks ago the Omaha team won. The rivalry is friendly, the only thing at stake being that the losers shall pay for the birds shot at, fifty for each contestant.

Justus von Lengerke and Fred Dallett of Orange, N. J., and Charles S. Campbell of Glen Ridge have started South for a ten days' shoot in North Carolina, making Asheville as their objective point. From that place their plans will be arranged according to what they learn as to different places in regard to the supply of quail.

George A. Barker, a member of the Carteret Gun Club, and one of the most enthusiastic of sportsmen, has recently placed an order with a prominent firm of silversmiths in this city for a magnificent silver trophy, which will be presented as a prize at the club shoots.

Shooting at Sportsmen's Show.

The committee in charge of the trap shooting tournament that will form one of the features of the Sportsmen's Show at Madison Square Garden has completed its work. The hours of shooting will be from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M. on each day that the Sportsmen's Show is open to the public, with the exception of Wednesdays and Saturdays, on which days, owing to the matinées in the Garden Theatre, shooting will end at 1:30 P. M. On these days the Sportsmen's Association championship will be the only competition, commencing at 10 A. M. and closing at 1:30 P. M.

There will be two distinct competitions, the continuous match and the Sportsmen's Association championship, in each of which there will be four prizes. The rifle, revolver, and pistol matches include the individual rifle championship, continuous match, point or practice target match, bull's-eye target match, revolver championship, pistol championship, continuous revolver match, military revolver match, continuous pistol match, police revolver continuous match, point contests with any revolver. Valuable prizes will be awarded in the various competitions.

Annual Games of Squadron A.

Squadron A will hold its games this year on Friday, March 9. The events are twelve in number, as follows: Pony express, polo balls in water buckets; first half, football; double pursuit; two men, with one horse; jumping hurdles, back to back; second half, football, head cutting with hurdle, skirmish drill, rough riding, three horses ridden by two men, and the mêlée.

GOLF HAS ITS FUNNY SIDE

Queer Things Will Happen to All Players on the Links.

OVERCONFIDENCE NO HELP

Balls Sometimes Lodge in Houses and Trees—Thomas B. Reed Calls the Game Shinny.

Golf has its funny side, just like everything else in this world. The man or woman who has ever tried the game knows this from hard as well as ludicrous experience. It is not conducive to good nature when, still a novice, you attempt to drive a "screamer" from the first tee to feel a score or more of curious, prying, critical eyes riveted upon your back, ready to smile significantly when you do what they all fully expect—miss.

Yet every one has done it in his early days—swung his club with pendulum regularity a few times to get the swing of the thing, you know, then back over the right shoulder for the final stroke, down strong, and, swish, the club cuts the air, stopping over the left shoulder, but the ball is still there on its little pyramid of sand waiting to be hit. The miserable realization comes over you that all your heroic posing has been for naught, and with a vicious whack at the ball you send it bouncing along the grass for a few yards, and hasten to get out of sight.

"Oh, that game's easy; something like shinny we used to play when young, only they dress up more for it now," remarked a Florida visitor last year, as he saw a famous Northern professional send off a ball that was pronounced a "beauty" by his admirers. "Never had a club in my hand in my life, but I'll warrant I'll play as well as the best of them with a few days' practice."

"But you couldn't hit a ball the first time three times out of five," chimed in his friend, and the two at once sallied forth to the tee. By rare good luck, which will happen sometimes, even in golf, the boastful visitor struck the first ball cleanly, and it made what an expert would have called a tolerable drive.

"I told you so," he shouted, with glee. "Give us another."

But that ball failed to get away as had its predecessor, nor was the third or the fourth shot more successful. "Hang it, what's the matter with this club?" ejaculated the thoroughly irritated player as he swung wildly for the fifth time, and then, uttering a word that is occasionally heard elsewhere than on a golf course, he went into the clubhouse café to square matters with his friends.

The professional, who heard of the incident later, laughed with unfeigned glee, for if one thing warms the heart of a professional more than anything else, barring a Scotch and soda, of course, it is the discomfiture of a player who thinks the game is easy. Don't ever tell a professional, if you hope to keep on good terms with him, that you can become a first-class golfer in six months. You will be pestered to death with inquiries about your score, and the result may be that either you or that professional will have to leave the club.

These professionals hear and see many comical things during their career of instructing others how to play the game, but they maintain a properly sober face, until they have retired to their shop, when the stories are told amid peals of laughter. Willie Norton, who has charge of the Lakewood Club, related one of these tales of the links a year ago which was more than usually entertaining. One of the dapper young women of whom Lakewood gets so many during the Winter season came out to the club for her first lesson. Her costume was the latest that fashion papers recommended for golf, and her vocabulary contained a few words peculiar to the sport. Willie Norton patiently explained to her the different uses of the wooden and iron headed clubs.

"Yes, I see," exclaimed the golf débutante. "Swinging the clubs must be fine exercise, but, Mr. Norton, you have not told me about the caddies; do you swing the caddie the same way?"

The diminutive youth standing near hastily checked an explosion, while Norton explained that the rules of golf treated caddies more leniently.

It is curious what a peculiar direction the golf ball will sometimes take after it has been struck. Of course, the player is sure that he struck it all right, but, nevertheless the little white sphere will seem possessed of an evil spirit and will land where no one ever dreamed of a golf ball going before. At the Morris County links, during a tournament, William Shippen, one of the original golfers, drove his ball into an apple tree, and after a long hunt it was discovered, firmly caught between two twigs, over fifty feet above the ground. Under a fusillade of sticks and green apples, the ball was dislodged, and, counting an extra stroke for the descent of the ball from the tree counted one, Shippen continued the game.

A still more amusing thing occurred during the first open tournament held by the Norwood Field Club, near Long Branch. The links there run in and out among the cottages, and many a golf ball finds its way into the yards of the residents. One of the players, in driving by the cottage of John A. McCall, President of the New York Life Insurance Company, caught the wrong angle and the ball struck the house amidships.

"Horrors, there's a window gone!" said the luckless golfer to his partner; "guess I'll have to face the music, though," and he boldly marched toward the house. Fortunately, no windows were broken, but would he "like to go up stairs and find his ball?"

A humorous smile came over the golfer's features as he thought, "Good idea; why not play it from where it lies." Thanking the occupants for their courtesy, he dexterously climbed out of a second-story window, and with his cleek raised the ball from its position in the rain gutter, sending it onto the lawn below. Then the game went on in its usually orderly manner.

A similarity in names, which was followed by a similarity in play, caused considerable amusement in the open tournament of the Nassau Country Club at Glen Cove last Fall. For several days prior to the event, W. L. Thompson, a Stock Exchange member, and a popular golfer at the Morris County Club, had been asked by his friends how he managed to play in tournaments in different parts of the country, and yet appear in New York regularly.

"Wonder who that other W. L. Thompson is?" said the Stock Exchange Thompson. "I'd like to see him, just to see how my namesake looks."

This occurred unexpectedly at the Nassau Club event, and, curiously enough, the men were drawn as partners. At it they went nip and tuck, each one doing his best to show that he was the superior W. L. Thompson, but when the footings for the 36 holes were made they burst into roars of laughter, for the totals were exactly alike—192 strokes. The men challenged each other for another match before leaving the club.

When a group of the original members of the Baltusrol Golf Club, at Short Hills, N. J., get together in a reminiscent mood many interesting events are recalled of the days when the links were in a much rougher condition than they are at present. One of the best of these tales has to do with the Rev. Dr. W. S. Rainsford, who used to be a frequent competitor in golf events. He was playing in a Washington's Birthday tournament at Baltusrol, and running along in low figures, too, when in attempting a difficult approach to the green his ball struck a tree uncomfortably near, but which, with advancing golf wisdom, has since been eliminated. The ball flew back nearly fifty feet, in a worse position than it had before. Dr. Rainsford regarded the catastrophe in silence for a second, and then a more demonstrative spectator blurted out, "Damn that tree!" Quick as a wink the reverend golfer looked up, and with genuine feeling in his voice replied, "Thank you." On the next shot he reached the green easily.

A good story from Scotland that has recently been going the rounds is said to have occurred on the famous Musselburgh links, near Edinburgh. One of the members drove his ball into a sand bunker, and the first shot to dislodge it seemed to bury it deeper. The second and third strokes had no better result, when a peculiar piece of wire on the ball attracted the player's attention. He picked up the ball and discovered that in some mysterious way it had picked up a lady's hairpin, one prong of which had become imbedded in the gutta percha for about an inch. The remainder of the pin was twisted firmly around the ball. This freak of the links was accordingly added to the club's museum of oddities in golf.

From Chicago comes the story that a couple of ingenious professionals have formulated the following cleverly worded card, to enhance their business in the making and fixing of clubs: "Because we cure all the ailments of golf clubs from head to toe—broken bones, displaced joints, deformed necks, injured faces, bruised heels, smashed heads. We strengthen the bodies of clubs when they are played out or bent with age, and, no matter how broken down their condition, they can be successfully handled, put in good shape, and made to feel well. Any irregularities in connection with the grip speedily relieved, and we guarantee we can give in every case satisfaction of a particularly striking nature. In this respect we operate a golf hospital."

The story has also been told of two balls colliding in midair, and a member of the Dyker Meadow Club, Brooklyn, hit a bird at one time while playing a tournament. Rabbits have also been struck by golf balls, and what is gravely reported as a truthful incident at an English club was the unexpected finding of a sixpence by a player on top of his ball after a long drive from the tee.

It is well known that a man may belong to a club and yet do little golfing. An amusing example of this fact comes from a Chicago club into which a young man of social and financial ambitions was elected. He went to his club and engaged a room for a two-weeks' stay to learn the game. At the end of that period, it is stated, his bill looked something like this: Bar, $160; restaurant, $65; caddie service 40 cents. By way of contrast the same club has another member who stopps at the clubhouse each week for two days. His bill for maintenance during his visit is about $1.20, and the items are tea and toast, while his caddie bill for the same time amounts to from $5 to $7.

Most of the annual golf events are intensely serious affairs, where the contestants put forth every effort to do their prettiest. In the Stock Exchange tournament, however, this serious state of mind is relaxed and the golfing brokers go forth for an afternoon of genuine sport and festivity. There is fun enough for the expert golfer in the high scores turned in, for the majority are well over the century mark, and, as an encouragement to this kind of play, the Stock Exchange committee offers a booby prize, the award of which is always the occasion of great hilarity. The Stock Exchange, however, has a number of first-class golfers, including W. H. Sands, for three years champion of St. Andrew's; Daniel Chauncey, Henry P. Toler, Ransom H. Thomas, Louis H. Kerr, J. Borden Harriman, and A. L. Norris.

A good story is told of Thomas B. Reed, when he was Speaker of the House in Washington. One day he went out to the links of the Chevy Chase Club with the English Ambassador, Sir Julian Pauncefote. While watching some players the latter asked Mr. Reed if he had ever played, to which the man from Maine promptly replied: "Why, yes; only when I was a boy we called it shinny." Only a thorough golfer can realize the shock this must have been to Sir Julian, who learned the game on a famous English links. The moral is, if you are a novice, don't ever allude to golf in the presence of an expert as bearing the slightest comparison to shinny.

Keep your eye on the ball and don't get nervous are two excellent rules for every golfer to remember, but they are often exceedingly difficult. The members of the Morris County Golf Club had a good laugh on one of their members last year who was more than usually annoyed at players behind him. One day he was out alone, and immediately after he had struck his ball another one from a short distance in the rear came spinning by dangerously near his head. Determined on revenge he marched to the spot where he saw the ball fall, and, picking it up, hurled it with all his force into the woods.

"There!" he muttered. "That'll teach that fellow to keep his proper distance after this."

Soon the offending golfer appeared and said cheerily, "Hello, old man; guess my ball came here. Oh, yes, there it is!"

"I beg your pardon, that's my ball," replied the irate player.

"But I'm sure that's the Ocobo ball I was playing with," was the reply. "What was your ball?" "A Henley," the angry man said with a gasp at the sudden recollection that he had thrown away his own ball instead of the offending member's, and for the next five minutes his feelings can be better imagined than described.

These tales of the links crop out every year where the game is played, and the best of it is that the true ones are much more remarkable than any one would think of making up for effect. The case actually happened last year of a player giving up the hole because he could not find his ball after a long hunt, and when his partner putted out, the missing ball was discovered in the hole, the ball having gone in on one stroke, entirely unknown to the man who played it.

METROPOLITAN GOLF TOURNEY.

Committee on Date and Place to Meet —Views of John Du Fais.

Considerable discussion has arisen in local golf circles regarding the coming metropolitan championship tournament, which will be the second annual event of that character. The annual meeting, to decide upon date and place, will be held next Thursday night at the Metropolitan Club. The Executive Committee of the Metropolitan Golf Association recently met to talk over the subject, and instead of determining a date the members decided to leave final action for the delegates in the larger meeting. Secretary John Du Fais, in speaking yesterday of the subjects discussed by the committee, said:

"Last year the tournament was held at Garden City early in April, and it would appear that only two of the association courses are available for good play at so early a date—that is, the Garden City course and the Lakewood course. In view of the destruction by fire of the Garden City Hotel, and possibly for other reasons, that course is not as available this year as it was last. Should the tournament, however, be held at a later date—toward the middle or end of May—several courses in the immediate vicinity of New York would be in splendid playing condition, and, therefore, it was thought that the selection of the course should be made contingent on the date of the tournament. In other words, the date of the tournament having been first determined, the course should be settled on afterward.

"The consensus of opinion of the committee was that it would be desirable to hold the tournament as early in the year as possible, as the policy the association adopted last year was to open the golfing season in this neighborhood with the tournament of the Metropolitan Golf Association. The freest expression of opinion on the part of the clubs at the Annual meeting is looked for on this question."

The Tournament Committee appointed consists of R. H. Robertson, Shinnecock Hills Club; Oliver W. Bird, Meadow Brook, and C. L. Tappin, Westbrook.

NEWS FROM THE GOLF LINKS.

President W. B. Thomas of the United States Golf Association has appointed as the Nominating Committee to bring in a list of officers for the annual meeting, Feb. 28, Samuel L. Parrish, Shinnecock; A. L. Ripley, Boston, and William H. Sands, Country Club of Westchester.

The committees that have recently been appointed by the Executive Committee of the Metropolitan Golf Association are:

Tournament—R. H. Robertson, Shinnecock Hills, Chairman; O. W. Bird, Jr., Meadow Brook Hunt Club, and C. L. Tappin, Garden City Golf Club.

Handicap—Daniel Chauncey, Dyker Meadow Golf Club, Chairman; Arden M. Robbins, St. Andrew's Golf Club. The third member will be announced later.

Nominating—J. A. Wright, St. Andrew's Golf Club, Chairman; George E. Perkins, Garden City Golf Club, and W. Alliston Flagg, Morris County Golf Club.

David Chauncey, who is well known to all local golfers, has been elected President of the Dyker Meadow Club, Brooklyn. The retiring President, Norman S. Dike, has been chosen Captain. The other officers are W. A. Putnam, Vice President; Secretary, E. L. Kalbfleisch; Treasurer, Irving T. Bush.

The members of the Lawrence Harbor Country Club are preparing for an active season, and two of the most important committees have lately been formed. They are: Greens Committee, H. C. Villepique, Jr., John M. Ward, E. B. Alvord, Findlay S. Douglas, and E. T. Wilson. House Committee, M. M. Singer, J. Bradley Patterson, and Charles F. Wildey, Jr.

Interest in Great Britain's open champion, Harry Varden, has again been revived from the statements made by Charles S. Cox, who lately returned from abroad, to the effect that the English champion is surely coming to America. "If Varden carries out the plans which he agreed upon just before I left, he sails to-day for New York and will probably arrive next Saturday or Sunday," said Cox yesterday. No definite plans have been made by any local clubs for exhibition or match games, although numerous talks have been made and many members of different clubs have said they would be glad to entertain the foreign golfer. It is not likely that any games will be definitely arranged until after Varden's arrival. He will probably start for Florida soon after reaching this city, and most of the prospective matches in this locality will be held over until later in the season, when the links will be in better condition.

Charles B. Macdonald, the Chicago golfer and once amateur champion of the United States, was elected President of the Chicago Golf Club last week, and Allen L. Reid was chosen Captain. The Skokie Country Club, near Chicago, presents another example of the success of golf from a popular and financial standpoint in the West. The Skokie members decided last week to lease the property they now occupy, with twenty-five additional acres, for twenty years for $20,000, retaining an option to purchase the land within that time. The lease is made with the stipulation that no liquors can be sold on the grounds.

W. C. WHITNEY'S RACERS.

Some Two-Year-Olds in Training at His Westbury Stables — Good Colts Across the Sea.

Recent purchases of horseflesh by William C. Whitney, and the fact that he has given notice to the jockey clubs that his horses that have previously been entered under the nominal ownership of Sidney Paget will hereafter be raced under his own colors, have made Mr. Whitney the most prominent figure in turf circles during the past two weeks. At the Whitney stables, at Westbury, L. I., his vast string are jogging on the track every pleasant day and are looking in the pink of condition.

The barn where the racers are housed is a third of a mile long and has accommodations for 100 horses. In bad weather the animals are exercised under cover, while the mile track, which includes a straightaway course for the sprinters, on the ground adjoining the barn is kept in excellent shape, and every pleasant day is the scene of activity from early dawn until far into the afternoon. Trainer Hildreth has the following two-year-olds under his charge, every one of which is given some kind of work daily:

Sir Charles, roan colt, by Loyalist-Yorkville Belle; brown colt by Kingston-Ballyhoo, brown colt by Belmere-Elkhorn Lass, brown colt by Dixon-Meriden, bay filly by Meddler-Carzon, bay colt by Kingston-My Gyps, brown colt by Belvidere-Weway, bay colt by St. Julien-Flitaway, chestnut gelding by Lord Esterling-Not In It, bay filly by Meddler-Money Box, bay filly by Meddler-Frolic Grace, chestnut filly by Goldfinch-Firenzi, brown filly by Belvidere-Legacy, chestnut filly by Meddler-Leonora, bay gelding by Sir Dixon-Vassar, bay colt by Lissak-Unadilla, bay colt by The Bard-Water Lily, black colt by Lissak-La Gascogne, and chestnut colt by Lissak-Roysterer.

Mr. Whitney's racers in England are said to be a fine-looking lot, and reports from the other side have it that there are some smart ones in the lot. Of his two-year-olds, Faison d'Or, by Goldfinch-Flavina, is reported to be exceptionally fast. He also has a three-year-old by The Miguel-Aurora that has shown some good work. This animal was handled last season by John Porter, the trainer of Flying Fox, that was purchased by Mr. Gilpin, acting for Mr. Whitney, at Newmarket. The price was quoted at the time as $10,000. Experts on the other side expect that the "Eton blue and brown cap" will be seen well to the fore in many of the important events this season.

HARNESS RACING RECORDS.

Prospects for the Performances of Trotters and Pacers This Year.

"Whether the two-minute trotter will arrive before the end of 1900 is a much mooted question," remarked a well known horseman in the Hoffman House a few days ago. "It hardly seems possible," he continued, as he sent a ring of blue smoke from his perfecto curdling ceilingward, "yet there is reason to believe that the existing records for both pacing and trotting will be placed a notch lower during the year."

The same hope was voiced a year ago, but fate decreed it otherwise. A year ago it appeared that Star Pointer would be able to lower his wonderful pacing record of 1:59¼, and but for the severe campaign that he was compelled to go through many horsemen whose opinion is of value believe he would have done so. Star Pointer is now but little more than a possibility, and it is extremely doubtful whether he will ever be raced again. John R. Gentry and Joe Patchen will be in training, but to negotiate a mile inside of two minutes appears a trifle more than either of them can do.

Searchlight seems at present to be the coming king. Tom Keating and Ed Mills, who will manage Searchlight, are both confident that the brown stallion will lower Star Pointer's record. Klatowah, with a mark of 2:05½, is another comer that will make the best of them look well to their laurels. He was not sent along last year, but will be out for further honors during the coming Summer. McHenry has told a few friends that he has driven Klatowah a mile in 2:03, and the year is young yet.

While the pacers are working down close to the two-minute mark, the two-minute trotter is apparently some distance away in the dim future. Before the death of Nico, it appeared that there would be a new gelding record. The Abbot would have had a competitor nearer his equal than any he met had Nico lived.

For some reason C. J. & H. Hamlin are not anxious to see The Abbot step a mile against the watch, but if the great gelding is barred in the free-for-all they will probably permit Geers to get the unbeaten champion of ENGLAND AND EUROPE.

That is an interesting and a pregnant question which our London correspondent raises in his cable letter printed to-day. It is the question how far the Continental Governments really desire, or in their own interests ought to desire, to have Great Britain defeated or humiliated. We are prone to regard the Continent, which calls itself "Europe," as, for some purposes, a single political entity, having a common sentiment and a common interest. That way of regarding it has been strengthened in this country by the insults that were pretty impartially heaped upon us by the Continental press during our war with Spain. We knew that we had entered upon that war with good motives. The political condition in which Spain had put and was keeping Cuba was intolerable to us as the nearest neighbor. When the Spanish policy became almost avowedly a policy of extermination and we were called upon to use our good offices as a friendly nation, to enable and help her to starve the people of Cuba to death, we refused. That was the real, as the destruction of the Maine was the proximate, cause of the war which the French and the German press thought to please their readers by describing as a "robber raid."

The real ground of hatred to us was the same then as the real cause of hatred to Great Britain now. It was envy, envy of our peace, envy of our prosperity, envy, especially on the part of Governments monarchical in fact as well as in form, of our freedom, and of our exemption from the huge and crushing armaments which they were representing as necessary to a powerful State. To these causes of hatred are joined, in respect to England, envy of her immense success, as compared with their wasteful and ridiculous failures, as a colonizing power.

Here are reasons enough, of their kind, why Europe should rejoice in the defeats and the humiliations of Great Britain, and why the journalists of Paris and Berlin and St. Petersburg should mock at her calamity. But only up to a certain point. When that point is passed, and it appears that the position of Great Britain in the world is seriously endangered, then the "solidarity" of Continental Europe disappears. The nearer hatreds will prevail, and, as a rule, every nation hates its nearest neighbor most. The representatives of each of the great powers have to ask themselves wherein their Government and their country would be better off if the result of the pending war should be really to displace her from the pre-eminence she has so long enjoyed. We say the great powers advisedly, for it is noticeable that among the smaller powers the jealousy does not exist. Even Austria, which can no longer be called a first-class power, by no means shows the Anglophobia so freely displayed in France, Russia, and Germany. We have already adduced evidence to show the friendliness of Italian and of Hungarian feeling, and in another column we give some remarkable evidence of the friendliness of Greek feeling, shown without distinction of party. But among the citizens of France and the subjects of the Kaiser and the Czar the question of what would succeed British paramountcy would present itself as part of the question whether the downfall of Great Britain was desirable. In spite of the "alliance," reasonable Frenchmen would view with alarm the succession of Russia, which would be still more strongly resented at Berlin. From both Paris and St. Petersburg would proceed groans of anguish at the prospect of the meddlesome and uneasy Kaiser in the place of "paramountcy." That would be recognized on all hands as an exchange of King Stork for King Log.

But of one thing there can be no doubt, and that is that the very discussion of such a question must be humiliating and disgusting to Englishmen, and that it has been provoked by the conduct of their own rulers. To justify the war, in the phase which it has now assumed, it is necessary to believe not only that the grievances of the Uitlanders were substantial, as they undoubtedly were, and that the redress of them could not have been obtained without war, which is not so certain, but that they were so urgent and intolerable that to obtain a chance of redressing them, it was worth while not only to risk the lives of thousands upon thousands of Englishmen, but to risk the prestige of the empire and its proud place among the nations of the earth. If Englishmen come to believe that war could have been avoided, they will find some way of making their resentment felt by those who made war inevitable. Their resentment is not likely to take the form of turning out the present Government, for the reason, idiomatically stated by our London correspondent, that "nobody wants its job." But it will be likely to take some form unpleasant to its victims.

INSTEAD OF PAYN, HENDRICKS.

Much is accomplished by the assured appointment of Mr. FRANCIS HENDRICKS of Syracuse to the Insurance Department in place of PAYN. In the words of The Evening Post, which deplores his selection as a "triumph of the machine," he is "a man of unsullied personal character, high business standing, and ambition to make a good record in public office." In these regards he comes about as near to being an ideal appointee as the most sanguine optimist could reasonably expect or the most exacting reformer reasonably demand.

The appointment is made with the assent and co-operation of the Republican organization, and is, indeed, accepted by Mr. HENDRICKS at the earnest solicitation of Senator PLATT. It is the opinion of some very sincere advocates of reform that this is a misfortune, and that it is an evil thing that a man as good as he has not been appointed in defiance of the organization and after a conflict with it. That, of course, would have been a good thing, had it been practicable. We do not in the least see how it could have been done. The conflict which would have been made, and the only one that could have been made, would not have been over the choice of PAYN supported by the machine and the best possible man supported by the Governor. It would have been over the choice of such a man as Mr. HENDRICKS, supported by the machine, and a man of little if any superiority to Mr. HENDRICKS, insisted on by the Governor. This is not an issue that can be taken "to the people." It is not an issue on which the people, if it could be taken to them, would be at all sure to side with the Governor. And the sole possible result of provoking such a conflict would have been that PAYN would have remained in the Insurance Department.

That would have suited the machine much better than the selection of HENDRICKS. To have compelled the machine to support the best man proposed because it was powerless to aid any poorer candidate is a triumph for the Governor and for the cause of clean politics.

THE BRYANISM OF BOURKE COCKRAN.

When Harper's Weekly some years ago published a portrait of W. BOURKE COCKRAN as one of the Big Four of Tammany Hall—an affront to civilization for which it was rebuked in a severe and magisterial manner by The Evening Post—nobody could have foreseen that within the ensuing decade Mr. COCKRAN would be found twice acting with members of the Republican Party, with intervals of relapse into Democracy. Having become well known to the people of the city and country in the past by the fervor of his defense of JOHN KELLY, JACOB SHARP, and RICHARD CROKER, and for the eloquence of his denunciations of GROVER CLEVELAND, it was indeed a surprise to see him desert Tammany, and after an interval of retirement come out boldly in opposition to the Democratic Party and in support of WILLIAM MCKINLEY, an incipient Republican habit which later became confirmed by his advocacy of the election of Mr. PLATT'S candidate for Mayor in 1897.

Nobody could doubt the effectiveness and nobody impugned the sincerity of Mr. COCKRAN'S attacks upon Bryanism in 1896. Therefore, when he now publicly announces his intention to support Mr. BRYAN, Chicago platform and all, during the coming campaign, it is only by reference to his many tergiversations in the past that Mr. COCKRAN'S present position can be understood and justly appreciated.

Our readers have no doubt sufficiently attended to the remarkable statement printed by us yesterday, in which Mr. COCKRAN attempts to justify his promised support of BRYAN. He tells us that W. J. BRYAN was not objectionable to him in 1896; it was the platform, not the man, against which his gorge rose. He expects the Democratic Party to reaffirm the Chicago platform. He does not ask as a condition of his support that it abate its attachment to Populism and repudiation. He believes, however, that anti-imperialism will be the dominating issue of the campaign and that he may safely support Mr. BRYAN, standing upon a platform of free silver, Populism, and Socialism, confident that nothing can be done in the next four years to impair the safety of our currency, and feeling in his soul that the awful peril of imperialism must be now averted at all hazards. In effect, Mr. COCKRAN sets up the novel proposition that the issues of the campaign will be those which are presented, not in the person of the candidate and the declarations of the platform, but in the beliefs which the individual supporter of the candidate may find it convenient to profess. While we are aware that citations from the past utterances of Mr. COCKRAN can hardly impair whatever political influence he may have preserved through his changes of party and principle, it is impossible to refrain from presenting a few quotations which will make evident the immense space he has traversed in his sudden bound from Republicanism to Bryanism.

In September, 1897, previous to the nomination of Gen. TRACY for the Mayoralty, Mr. COCKRAN addressed a friend a letter, in which he severely arraigned SETH LOW, and made plain his intention to support the Platt candidate, whoever he might be. He then insisted that the issues raised by the Chicago platform were moral in their nature and continuing in respect to the evil they might do. From that letter we quote:

> But you and I believe that a declaration in favor of the repudiation of public and private contracts presented a moral as well as a political question, and we could not conceive that political conventions have any power to license violations of the moral law. Because we believe that the Chicago platform was a crusade against honesty, we felt ourselves bound in conscience to repudiate its utterances, to deny the authority of the convention to adopt it, and to oppose the candidates who stood upon it.
> Now, the moral law does not change with a lapse of time nor the passage of a season. What was immoral last year is immoral this year.

Mr. COCKRAN addressed a great Republican meeting in the Grand Central Palace on Saturday evening, Oct. 30, 1897, in support of the candidacy of Gen. TRACY. We take pleasure in quoting some of the orator's utterances upon that occasion:

> Then [last year] we battled against the forces of Bryanism for the defense of those material possessions which are only owned by a majority of our population. To-day we stand arrayed in defense of those same possessions, against the same forces, reinforced by deserters from the supporters of order.
> The contest bears directly upon the fortunes of Bryanism in this respect, that if the Bryanites succeed in electing a Mayor in this capital of Eastern civilization and progress, nothing will avert a repetition of the campaign of 1896 in 1900.
> Now, I hold it that the next gravest danger that could overhang this country to the absolute election of BRYAN, is a renewed candidacy of BRYAN. The prosperity and industry of this country cannot stand contests such as that we have passed through last year repeated every Presidential election.
> The Democratic ship is no longer Democratic. It has been seized by a Populist crew who have run up the black flag of piracy and Anarchy to the masthead.
> "What was immoral last year is immoral this year," said Mr. COCKRAN, but he avows his cheerful willingness to put up with all the monstrous immorality of the Chicago platform and to support BRYAN, shifty, unsteady, and unsafe, the living embodiment of all the mischief written into that platform by its Populist authors.
> "The Democratic ship has been seized by a Populist crew who have run up the black flag of piracy and Anarchy to the masthead," said Mr. COCKRAN two years ago. "What ho! my hearties!" now exclaims this same Mr. COCKRAN, as he steps upon the deck, salutes the commander, doffs his cap to the Jolly Roger, and enrolls himself among the pirates and Anarchists of the crew.
> "Populism," said Mr. COCKRAN, "is a sonorous declamation, based on a fundamental misconception of facts." So is anti-imperialism. It is a word, a silly and empty war cry of the infatuated, corresponding to no political condition or existing state of facts. Yet this myth and phantom of anti-imperialism is Mr. COCKRAN'S only pretext for going over to the pirates and Anarchists.
> No man can attain to any standing in our politics, no man can gain the ear or influence the minds of honest Americans who has within the space of four years expressed his devotion to the utterly incompatible and mutually destructive principles which Mr. COCKRAN has professed.

MISS ANTHONY'S MILLION.

During the past week Miss SUSAN B. ANTHONY has resigned her place at the head of the organization for the promotion of woman suffrage in order to devote her time and energies to raising a fund of $1,000,000—a sort of endowment of the movement to secure its continuous active agitation. Of time she cannot in the ordinary course of things count on very much, for she will be eighty years old on the 15th of next month; of energy her supply seems unimpaired and ample.

Miss ANTHONY'S name is known to most of the newspaper readers of the United States in connection with her vigorous and uncompromising advocacy of equal political rights for women. Very many of the allusions to her have been intended to be humorous and have been unsympathetic. Her downright expression and bearing, her fearlessness in every direction, her indifference to many of the cherished conventions of her sex, combined with some striking peculiarities of appearance, have at once challenged the newspaper humorist and brought her within the range of his not very extended resources. But among those who have known her best and those who have in State and Federal Legislatures had to deal with the questions she has discussed before them, she has won cordial respect for her character and for her intellectual powers. And if her life shall ever be fully written it will contain proof of unselfish helpfulness to others and of many a winning womanly quality which her critics delight to deny to her.

We should not at all be surprised if Miss ANTHONY succeeded in raising the fund she has undertaken to raise. It will be in these days, with the amount of what may be called idle wealth in the possession of men and still more of women who do not care to spend it after the fashionable manner and who find some difficulty in bestowing it on objects that really appeal to their minds, a far easier task than some that she has carried through with triumph in the past. And no one can deny that the creation of such a fund will be as good use for money as many that the rich indulge in. The promotion of agitation of the political rights of women can at the very worst do no harm, because, though those rights may be as pregnant with mischief as their most bitter opponents believe, they will not be secured until the public mind is well prepared for them nor until these opponents have had a good chance to demonstrate the evils involved in their exercise. We certainly are not of those who think with Miss ANTHONY that the suffrage and all other political rights should be extended to women on the conditions now applied to men. But on the other hand we are still less to be counted among those that think that the rule of men is beyond criticism or that the movement for the extension of the suffrage and for the protection of the property and personal rights of women which has accompanied it has not already done a great deal of good. Men are in theory chivalrous, of course, and there may be nothing finer than their instinctive reverence and tender regard for the weaker creatures depending on them, but in practice the possession of undisputed and indisputable monopoly of control is sadly demoralizing for human beings of either sex. The changes in the status of women before the law in the last half century have been both substantial and beneficent, and they have in the main been due to the agitation that such women as Miss ANTHONY have conducted. If there shall be found men and women to give a million of dollars to continue it the world will, perhaps, not be so much nearer the millennium as the promoters expect, but it may be really a little better than it is. Even that would be worth a million as millions go.

THE PUERTO RICAN TARIFF.

It seems that the President has seen a light on the question of Puerto Rico. In his message he recommended that the tariff of the United States should be extended to the island. This was the desire of the islanders. In his eagerness to serve them the President seems quite to have forgotten that there was such a thing as the sacred principle of Protection and that he had been personally much interested in it until his attention was distracted by other matters. It was not, apparently, until the faithful wound of The Tribune took him under the fifth rib that his attention was recalled to it. For a McKinley to be described by a Tribune as a "thoughtless Republican" was, indeed, calculated to break in upon his golden dreams of Free Trade.

It is now given out from Washington that "the Administration has not changed its policy in respect to Puerto Rico" and is still of the opinion that, while concessions may properly be made to the island, it would be a dangerous precedent to extend the tariff ring fence so as to include any of our dependencies. With the President's message not yet two months old, in which he distinctly recommended what the Administration now opposes, there is a refreshing coolness about this manifest untruth. The Tribune and the Protectionists are to be congratulated upon their victory.

Practically, and for the present purpose, it does not much matter. The concession for the products of Puerto Rico of 20 per cent., recommended by Senator PLATT of Connecticut, having been accepted by the Administration, will doubtless be enacted. It is to be hoped that it will be enacted at once, and the sufferings of the island, which are real and serious, be thereby relieved. A differential of one-fifth in their favor will apparently open our markets as widely to the sugar, tobacco, and coffee of the island as would the removal of duties from them altogether. It will make a market for everything the island produces. The long stagnation, followed by the recent acute distress, seems likely to be succeeded by something in the nature of a "boom." American capital, as well as American enterprise, may be expected to be attracted thither. It is obvious what an effect the sight of the prosperity of Puerto Rico will have upon Cuban politics. The industrial and commercial classes of Cuba will begin to clamor for similar privileges, even though they are to be had only by the acceptance of similar conditions. Those conditions do not include political assimilation, much less the prospect of admission to Statehood. At most they point to as large a measure of local self-government as it may be found desirable to bestow, under the flag and protection of the United States.

THE CONTROL OF TUBERCULOSIS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On Jan. 16 a bill was introduced into the Senate at Albany calling for an appropriation of $200,000 for the purpose of establishing a State hospital for the treatment of incipient pulmonary tuberculosis. This subject should be promptly brought to the attention of the taxpayers through the medium of your valuable paper. The questions to be considered are: Should the State enter into a matter of this kind from philanthropic motives, or in order to protect its citizens from this disease, and the probable cost to the taxpayers? It will be conceded by a very large majority that philanthropic motives should be ruled out from this discussion, and that each county should be required to care for its sick poor without aid from the State. The important considerations, then, are protection and expense.

It require no elaborate argument to prove that the proposition as it stands involves a very considerable initial outlay upon the part of the State, besides large annual appropriations to sustain the work, while the effort would be a farce as a means of protection, and would probably deter the Legislature from attacking this disease at its most vulnerable point. Tuberculosis is not confined to the hovels of the poor, or to crowded tenement houses, but attacks persons in all classes of society. The disease is conceded to be infectious, and it is supposed to spread from one individual to another in a similar manner to typhoid fever. The question then is, Will the establishment of a State sanatorium as proposed protect the citizens of this State? Most assuredly not. In the first place, it is only proposed to deal with incipient cases among the poor, leaving the advanced cases as centres of infection, and allowing the rich, who can travel, to scatter the tubercle bacilli from one end of the State to the other. Secondly, it cannot, because in order to stamp out an infectious disease the quarantine must not only include all of the infected persons, but it must guard against every source of infection. If the proposition were enlarged to include the quarantine of every infected individual in the State, it would still be inadequate, as one of the chief sources of infection would remain.

The Tuberculosis Committee of the New York State Board of Health, in its reports for 1897 and 1898, asserts that one of the chief sources of tubercular infection is the infected food products from tuberculous cattle, and that it is only by eradicating tuberculosis among cattle that the increased spread of tuberculosis in the human family can be successfully restricted. It is, therefore, probable that should every infected person in the State be quarantined immediately and infected persons from other States be refused admission to the State of New York, within one year a very large additional number of persons would show signs of the disease unless this source of infection is removed. As well might the State attempt to pump Lake Ontario dry while the Niagara River continues to pour into the lake its huge volume of water as to try to eradicate tuberculosis by means of quarantine and sanatoria while its citizens continue to partake of infected food products. Granting that every person suffering from this disease may become a centre of infection, the question arises whether the danger from this source is sufficiently urgent to demand isolation.

In 1897 the New York City Board of Health, in a circular of information issued to physicians, states: "It is to be remembered that while tuberculosis is always the result of infection, yet it is far less readily communicated than such diseases as smallpox, scarlatina, &c., and if proper sanitary conditions can be secured in each case there is little danger of the transmission of the disease to others." It is also freely admitted by sanitarians everywhere that when a consumptive carefully attends to the destruction of his sputum he may with impunity mingle freely with his family. It is moreover a matter of record that during the period between 1884 and 1896 the decrease of the death rate from tuberculosis in the City of New York was 14.8 per cent. This result was obtained by means of the unusual precautions taken by the local Board of Health, and proves that the disease may not only be controlled, but practically eradicated, by the persistent and energetic use of the agencies now in existence. What seems to be required is not isolation, but education and a wise use of their discretionary powers by the various Health Boards in the State, and a hearty co-operation between these boards and the medical profession.

Another phase of this subject should not be overlooked. Second only in its baneful effects to infected food products is the habit indulged in by our citizens of taking patent and proprietary medicines. Inspired by the numerous advertisements in both the secular and religious press or by the advice of some well-meaning though ill-advised friend, a large number of people prescribe for themselves only to discover when too late that they have been grossly deceived and that their lives must pay the forfeit. It is, indeed, extremely doubtful whether the majority of cases of incipient tuberculosis can be discovered until the Legislature prohibits the sale of these nostrums. The suggestions has been made that a State sanatorium could be used as an experimental station where the disease could be studied and new methods of treatment tested. No reasonable objection can be made to an appropriation to enable the State Board of Health to investigate the disease and the various methods adopted in dealing with it; but even such investigation can be carried on in connection with the large sanatorium at Saranac Lake without the necessity of a new foundation.

The question of expense should the State undertake to deal effectually with this disease by quarantine is appalling. Dr. Veeder estimates the number of infected persons in the State of New York at 50,000. To properly care for this large number would, at the least calculation, cost about $1 per day per capita, which would amount in one year to $18,250,000, to say nothing of buildings, equipment, medical attendance, &c. Add to this the outlay required to protect our citizens from infected food products, and the conclusion is irresistible that even the Empire State cannot assume a burden so vast. All idea of restricting this disease by means of sanatoria or of stamping it out by means of the isolation of infected persons should be abandoned and the same modus operandi observed as obtains in other infectious disease viz., each case should be reported to the local Board of Health and proper hygiene taught by the physician in charge of the case. When an infected family changes its location the Board of Health should be notified, and the vacated apartments, rooms, or houses should be thoroughly disinfected under the supervision of the health authorities.

The State Board of Health should be directed to cause the slaughter of all infected animals and the destruction of all infected food products in the State and to maintain a strict quarantine against infected animals and infected food products from other States. In addition to this, immediate steps should be taken to have physiology, hygiene, and dietetics taught in the public schools in order that the rising generation may know how to escape disease. If necessary, additional powers should be conferred upon the State Board of Health and these regulations rigidly enforced. In no other way is it possible to efficiently deal with this disease. In no other way can the work be accomplished at so small an expense to the State.

COST OF GAS SEVENTY YEARS AGO

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your fine comprehensive summary of the progress of the century, which appeared editorially at the beginning of the year, you make especial mention of the fact that it was not until about 1830 or later that gas came into use as an illuminant. Perhaps, in view of the present animated discussion concerning gas affairs in general, and the demand for cheaper gas in particular, it may interest you to learn both the exact date at which it was in actual use by some householders in the City of New York and also the price at which it was then furnished them, as is revealed by an examination of some bundles of old bills of various items covering two or three years of that period. That both the date and cost may be fixed thus precisely, we are indebted to the fact that these bills were for the most part rendered to an old-time lawyer with an instinctive aversion to destroying any black-and-white evidence whatever that might later be available.

One gas bill, transcribed verbatim, reads as follows:

New York, Nov. 2, 1831.
Mr. C. H. S. 102 Blank Street.
Index 400. 1700.

From Oct. 1 to Nov. 2.	$ c.
To 1,300 cubic feet of gas, at 7.00	9.10
To 1 month's rent of meter	.15
To 1 month's rent of fixtures	.96
	10.21

Received payment 6 Nov., 1831.
S. B. DEAN, Collector.

The bill for November and December immediately following was larger, being for 3,875 cubic feet, $27.12; a charge of $2.50 for two months' rent of meter and fixtures making its sum total $29.71. The large and varied assortment of candlesticks which survived with the bills furnish evidence that the record of the meter was kept down by tallow dips and spermaceti candles.

In all the scores of items both of necessities and luxuries in daily life enumerated in these bills no one other particular shows so wide a variance in cost during a period of seventy years. Even the coal bills—when the then slow, tedious method of transportation to tide water is considered—seem moderate by comparison, for, although the holder of these must have kept them for his own amusement, after he arrived in a region where 3s. 6d. per ton, delivered, was then a fair average price for anthracite, they variously show that "Lackawanna coal" was bought of E. H. Blasdell, 13 Batavia Street, at $12.50 per ton, or of Jones & Wurts at $11, while in bills from other agents "Lehigh" as well as "Schuylkill" was somewhat less. But it remained for Samuel B. Reeve & Co., corner Canal and Elm and Murray and Washington Streets, to foreshadow a coal trust, and show a possible benefit to the consumer in a combination, by the selling at "The Peach Orchard Coal Landing" of the entire list at an average price of $7.50; moreover, catering not alone to the economies of their patrons, but to their sense of the aesthetic as well by imprinting on the end of each bill slip a fine steel engraving that would be no discredit to a banknote, portraying said "Peach Orchard," rising on a sunny slope above the coal-laden boats, presumably on the North River waterfront. There are many further features of interest to be noted in these files of old accounts which serve to show vivid and picturesque characteristics of their day, but only in the one instance to which I called your attention in the beginning do they seem to come in touch again with the affairs of to-day; all the rest are entirely things of the past and gone. THE CONSENT OF THE GOVERNED.

Some of the letters on public questions printed in THE TIMES are quite as interesting and instructive as the editorials. That of Thomas Conyngton in THE TIMES of last Sunday, (Jan. 21,) in which he criticises a portion of Senator Beveridge's speech on the Philippines, makes the Senator's rhetoric look rather foolish. Speaking of the Government jobs in the Philippines, the Senator says: "Let no one fear that our party workers will seek to fill these places without regard to fitness." Your correspondent's answer is a clincher: "This fear would seem to have the best justification in our own experience. * * * Who brought pressure to bear on our too amiable President to relax the civil service rules * * *? Who is responsible for the power and prominence of men like Platt, Quay, Gorman, Croker, and Louis Payn in the administration of civilized government in our country but these same party workers? * * * Can the leopard change his spots or the Ethiopian his skin?" To reason as Senator Beveridge does is to reason that because the Tammany Government of New York City has been faithless over a few things we ought to make it a ruler over many. Ought not good government, like charity, to begin at home?

In another letter, in to-day's (Jan. 25) TIMES, Theodore McGarrah somewhat heatedly, but on the whole rightly, criticises your editorial, "Anti-Imperialism Hard Hit," in THE TIMES of Jan. 20. After rereading the editorial I find it rather flippant, and hardly worthy of serious notice. But I would like to say a few words, even if stammeringly, in regard to your attack on the principle of "the consent of the governed" and the Declaration of Independence.

It seems that you have a good deal of contempt for this document, for no other reason than that those who differ with you on the Philippine question cling to it as one of the pillars of popular liberty. You have said somewhere, I believe, that the Declaration was never intended to apply to a people like the Filipinos, but to peoples more or less accustomed to Anglo-Saxon institutions. Now, it seems to me that the Declaration is the enunciation by some of the best and wisest men this country has produced of an ideal of popular government in which this Nation had its birth, and that to ridicule this idea, because it stands in the way of some little scheme in which we are temporarily interested is unwise and dangerous. To deny the application of the principle that "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed" to the Filipinos, seems to be a long step toward denying its application to a large portion of our own people, whose use of the right of suffrage could scarcely be less intelligent and noxious than it is. Allow me to quote a passage from Abraham Lincoln's Lewiston speech which is well worth printing. Speaking of the fathers of this Republic, he says: "Wise statesmen as they were, they knew the tendency of prosperity to breed tyrants, and so they established these great self-evident truths, that when in the distant future some man, some faction, some interest, should set up the doctrine that none but rich men, or none but white men, or none but Anglo-Saxon white men, were entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, their posterity might look up again to the Declaration of Independence and take courage to renew the battle which their fathers began, so that truth and justice and mercy and all the humane and Christian virtues might not be extinguished from the land; so that no man should thereafter dare to limit or circumscribe the great principles on which the temple of liberty was being built. Now, my countrymen, if you have been taught doctrines conflicting with the Declaration of Independence; if you have listened to suggestions which would take away from its grandeur and mutilate the fair symmetry of its proportions, * * * let me entreat you to come back. Return to the fountain whose waters spring close by the blood of the Revolution."

Perhaps we run less risk of being wrong on this question by believing with Lincoln than by believing with those whom self-interest has made temporarily blind to the leavening power of high political ideals.

SYMPATHY FOR THE UNDER DOG.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is altogether too much talk about the "under dog" in this Anglo-Boer controversy. Carried to its logical conclusion, the inference to be drawn from H. R. Ostrom's letter is obvious. If we should see a burly wrongdoer resisting the attempts of five or more policemen to arrest him, our sympathies should all be on the side of the wrongdoer, because he is the "under dog." This may be sportsmanlike, love of fair play, but it surely is not just reasoning. The arbitrament of nations is far too serious a matter to be mentally linked with a twenty-foot ring or a set of Marquis of Queensberry rules.

To those whose hysterical vision can see in this war nothing but a gigantic empire bending all its ponderous forces to crush the life out of two feeble republics it would no doubt be more satisfactory if Clullius Krüger and Tullius Hostilius Kaller would agree to select three men from each side, (say three Boers vs. three British,) and let the sextet settle the dispute by combat to the death in view of the assembled armies. This would be giving the "under dog" a chance, sure enough, but alas! (H. R. Ostrom et al.) the methods of belligerent nations in A. D. 1900 show no tendency to return to those of 650 B. C.

Capt. Mahan, formerly commander of the United States cruiser Chicago, and author of "The Life of Admiral Farragut," is well able to take care of himself in National polemics, but where probably his modesty forbids him to reply to certain details of H. R. Ostrom's letter I may be permitted to say that, if my memory does not deceive me, the title of "Mr." Mahan's greatest work is not, as quoted by the former, "English Sea Power in History," but "Influence of Sea Power upon History," a distinctive difference which, if I quote correctly, deprives of its sting the opening sentence of the honorable member of the Holland Society.

A QUESTION OF CREED.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your paper this morning there is an article, "Fight Against Unitarianism." I wonder if Dr. Dixon and his friends ever saw the "Service Book" of the Unitarian Church of Charleston, S. C. If so, they will read that "Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ, the Son, and Messenger of God." In the "Family Prayers" they will read "We ask all things in the name and as disciples of Thy blessed Son, our Lord Jesus Christ. * * * Above all, we adore Thy mercy in sending Thy Son into the world to redeem us from sin, and show us the Father."

A few years ago the Rev. Dr. Henry J. Van Dyke, whose theology and Christian life are above question or reproach, received by letter as a member into his church a person from the Unitarian Church of Charleston, S. C. Do Dr. Dixon and his friends remember the demonstration in the Brooklyn Academy of Music a few years ago in commemoration of the birthday of William Ellery Channing, the father, so called, of Unitarianism in this country? A Methodist Bishop said his library would not be complete without Channing's works. Of course, like all beliefs, there are Unitarians and Unitarians, as there are open and close communion Baptists.

It is said a man went to heaven, saw all kinds of "beliefs," but looked in vain for a certain sect. He asked "Are there no Baptists here?" He was told to look in a far-off corner, and there was a little company of them holding close communion.

THE DEATH PENALTY AND CRIME

I have carefully read the article about capital punishment which Mr. N. M. Curtis wrote for your issue of last Sunday. I have considered the arguments for its abolition which he presents. I attended the initial meeting of those who gathered in the little meeting house in East Sixteenth Street one Saturday evening in December, and have since met again to form an association to fight for the repeal of the death-dealing provision of the laws of our State. I believe the arguments which are presented by Mr. Curtis, and which were given at the meeting, to be reasonable and convincing. I sincerely hope that they may have great influence to remedy this defect in our laws. If this proves to be so, I shall feel encouraged to have greater faith in our State Legislature.

But though the law dealing capital punishment to certain sorts of offenders may be cause for thankfulness to those who desire to see criminals punished and pecuniary expense saved to the State, would not the repeal of this law be greater cause for thanksgiving to those who are lovers of peace and good morals, if the reason given for the repeal were that society desired to strive by appeal to reason rather than brute fear, to diminish that most reprehensible of crimes for which death stands as the penalty in this State? I have not heard from a single advocate of the abolition of capital punishment a single protest of this nature against this barbarous way of "revenging an evil," or "righting a wrong," or "protecting society," or whatever else advocates of capital punishment may claim is its effect. I have heard our good friends the Quakers declare they believe "that man has no right to destroy what he cannot give or restore—human life," and I have heard these same friends admit that that argument is sentiment; but I have not met any who believe that killing by right of law to remedy any evil whatsoever is virtually admitting the inefficacy of the human intellect to govern the state which we call "society." Yet such an admission it is. We have arisen from the prehistoric barbarous state in which we once lived by cultivation of intellect. We have formed social order and maintained it by development of and reliance upon the intellect. We have striven to prove that far mightier is right than might, and in the teaching of the axiom we have necessarily taught one another that we can live happiest by conforming our lives to the Golden Rule. We (I speak of law-abiding citizens) believe and understand its wisdom; murderers and other lawbreakers do not. Yet to ultimately enforce its truth upon other (to-be) lawbreakers we revert to an instrument of savagery which the inception of the age of reason taught us to discard as cumbersome and ineffectual. Why do we do it? Why do we seek by appealing to the brute fear of the community to teach what for years and years we have believed, have in truth known, cannot be taught save by cultivation of intellect and reason that finds response in the brain? Why our despair? Do we admit after these many centuries that the brain is futile to guide us in certain phases of our civilization? Are we ready to agree in saying that the baser elements, like fear, are more potent to help the right and prevent the wrong than is an argument that appeals to the mind of a man? I do not believe it.

I anticipate hearing the assertion that murderers' brains will not respond to intellectual appeal, that they are in a state of disease. But society has its remedies for the infirm, and it gives all possible nourishment and stimulus to such, and the killing of murderers is not intended for deterring them. They cannot be reached by warnings of a fearful end more than by reason. If indifferent to reason, they will, by the same token, be indifferent to fear. Gen. Curtis and others have proved that fear is not an efficient deterrent. But it is known that in the last moments of murderers they have expressed—nay, more, they have betrayed—great sorrow for their deeds, and (as the observers believed) because they in the exercise of that better element of their nature—the intellect—had seen the great damage they had wrought in the world—not wholly because they feared hell or other punishment beyond the grave. Have not we, here, reason to be encouraged to believe that the work of prevention may be rendered as effective through the instrumentality of reason as by brute force, and, further, without that incalculable, that stupendous moral stupefaction that is wrought by the shedding of blood in the blind, desperate effort to attain to what we cannot reach by means which are compatible with our philosophy?

I take it, we all see the same ends. But I am sorry to have to believe that Mr. Curtis and our friends who use his argument seek it not for the reason I have endeavored to here review. JAY KNICKERBOCKER.

THE SPITTING NUISANCE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Much has been said and written of late concerning the disregard of sanitary laws on the cars of the surface and elevated roads of this city. Granting the need for general improvement, would it not be well in the crusade against overcrowding, imperfect heating and ventilation, and neglect of broom and scrubbing brush, to direct a vigorous effort toward stamping out an evil far more dangerous to the public health, namely, that still unabated nuisance, the spitting habit?

It is not a pleasant theme to discuss, nor will fine, soft words express the loathing and disgust refinement feels at the frequent exhibitions of the abominable practice; but when it comes to the condition of the stairways leading to some of the elevated stations, the whole range of the English language hasn't an expletive strong enough to fit the offense.

It cannot be ignored, however, for there, day after day, may be seen those accumulations of rotten expectoration left to besmear the gowns of the women, or ground into dust under foot, ready at the first puff of wind to offer their myriads of disease germs to throat and nostril.

While the remedy lies with the individual, there is always ignorance to reckon with, as well as a selfishness that will not voluntarily respect the rights of others, and an ill-bred vulgarity that has no appreciation of delicate sensibilities. Boards of Health may go on passing resolutions and posting notices until the crack of doom, but without the active co-operation of the railroad management and the support of the law no lasting impression will ever be made upon such offenders. The Death of Ervin Hopkins, Jr.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A telegram from Chicago appeared in THE NEW YORK TIMES and several local papers in the editions of Jan. 25 announcing the death of Ervin Hopkins, Jr., a former resident of New York City.

The items erroneously stated that the death occurred from the bite of a poisonous reptile. The facts, as vouched for by his friends who were with him at the time of his death, are that his death occurred from an acute attack of heart disease.

He was engaged in superintending the affairs of the firm in which he was interested, which had valuable concessions from the Colombian Government along the head waters of the Orinoco River. In order to carry out the terms of the concession, he was operating a steel boat, built for him in the United States last Fall. Some accident had occurred to the boat, and while attempting to raise it, the cable broke, and Mr. Hopkins started in a rowboat for Arauca, a distance of twenty miles, to procure more material and assistance. While making this trip he was stricken with heart disease, and lived only long enough to reach the shore of the river. He was subject to attacks of this kind.

Why the British Fail.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE TIMES has several times discussed with much intelligence the causes of the failure of British military operations in South Africa. Is it not possible that the British officers and soldiers soon lose heart in such a struggle against liberty? Perhaps Tommy Atkins is really too brave a man to enjoy slaughtering the beardless boys and graybeards who cling so heroically to their kopjes and shoot and sing "Old Hundred" with equal enthusiasm. This view of the case may not strike the general public or military critics, but is not military history full of examples of the failure of the best organized campaigns when brave men are sent to do that which humanity cannot but lament? After all, was not Gladstone right when he solved the South African problem on a basis of noble generosity, and are not his enemies brought to confusion for introducing pessimism where a little broad optimism as to peaceable methods might have gone a long way in the real civilization of South Africa?

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES

By WILLIAM PATTEN.

Professor of Zoölogy in Dartmouth College.

TO the laymen it is no doubt something of a mystery how the biologist can feel sure that animals so different (from one another as fishes, frogs, or mammals are blood relatives having a common descent from ancestors that must have lived many millions of years ago.

But the methods used by the biologist are very simple. He goes on the assumption that blood relationship and similarity in descent are indicated by similarity in structure.

The scientist, in reading the remote past of the organic kingdom and predicting its future, uses the same method that a boy does when he unhesitatingly identifies a kitten as the offspring of a cat, and, barring accidents, feels sure that it is destined to become a cat and the ancestor of cats. The boy recognizes the kitten because it is like other kittens in color, shape, and the proportion of its various parts. But as color, size, and the proportion of parts are extremely variable quantities, the anatomist neglects them altogether when he wishes to determine more remote relationships, as, for instance, the relationship between a fish, a frog, and a dog. He then goes below the surface and looks for similarities in the relative position of one part to another, and in the manner in which they grow and are bound together to form a complete organism.

There are certain structural and mental resemblances between mankind and the apes so obvious as to at once arouse in one the sense of the ludicrous, or of the deepest awe and reverence, according as one's eye is caught by the unexpected resemblances, or pictures to one's self these two organisms as different stages in a line of organic progress that extends downward far beyond the simplest animals and plants into the bottomless abyss of the past, and upward and onward into a future as bright with possibilities for man's progress as was ever imagined.

There are some organs which for some reason or other always appear at certain stages of development, and may remain practically unchanged throughout life; in other animals they are seen for a short time only, or perhaps a mere trace of them appears and then vanishes. For example, every back-boned animal has a series of perforations or slits on either side of the throat, and around these slits, or gill openings, the blood vessels are arranged in a characteristic manner. In all true fishes a stream of water is forced through these openings, which aerates the blood that flows in abundance through the surrounding tissue. In frogs the same gill slits and blood vessels are present during the tadpole stage, but they gradually disappear as the tadpole changes into a frog, and only the first two pairs remain, in a greatly modified form, as the lower jaw and parts of the cartilaginous support for the larynx. We find the same gill slits during the early stages of foetal life in the throat of human beings, but all except the first two pairs quickly disappear; these remain, as in the frog, and ultimately form the lower jaw and certain cartilages that attach the larynx to the base of the skull. Wherever these gill slits occur, whether in a shark, a frog, a bird, or a human being, they are always situated in the same relative place, and grow in the same way; the blood comes to them from the same sources, passes around them in the same direction, and is finally discharged into the same vessels, whether the animal happens to make use of its gills in respiration or not; and finally each gill-bar, that is the flesh and bone that lie between two adjacent slits is supplied by a set of nerves arising from exactly the same part of the brain. Every vertebrate animal known has at one time or another just such a set of gill slits, and no other animals, not belonging to the vertebrates, have anything resembling them in these respects. The same thing is seen to be true of almost every other important organ of the body, when we come to analyze its structure and see how it develops in the egg or embryo.

The brain of a fish, for example, differs from that of a human being only in size and in the relative development of its various parts; it is composed of the same elements, the same subdivisions; contains very nearly the same number of nerves, supplying the same organs, and arising from the same corresponding parts of the brain. No animal not a back-boned animal, has a brain showing anything like such an arrangement. As we ascend the vertebrate series, from the lowest fishes to man, we find that by an almost imperceptible series of changes, of course fluctuating here and there, the fish brain assumes more and more the characteristics of the higher mammals, and finally of man. The style of architecture changes as development goes on, and each great group of back-boned animals, such as birds, frogs, turtles, and mammals, has its own characteristic structure, but the anatomist sees the same plan in them all, just as you would recognize your own nine-room Colonial homestead, even though a modern tenant should add a Queen Anne roof or a bow-window here and there. The biologist concludes from such facts as these, that have been worked out with an astonishing amount of care and detail, that all vertebrates have descended from a common stock, most of the existing forms being more or less modified offshoots from different levels along the line of development. Some organs seem to quickly reach their full development and remain practically unchanged through an enormously long line of ancestors, as, for example, the lateral eyes, the two eyes you and I see with; they are called "lateral" to distinguish them from other eyes that perhaps you never heard of, and yet remnants of them are hidden away in your brain and have been in the brains of your remote ancestors for countless generations past. The lateral eyes have come down to us from our fish-like ancestors practically unchanged, except for eyelids and tear glands, and some other parts of minor importance. The coats of the eye, the muscles that move the eyeball, and the nerves that supply them, differ in unimportant respects only from the human eye or from that of any other back-boned animal. Such an eye is of little value to the comparative anatomist for determining relationships within the back-boned animals, because all subdivisions of the vertebrates show very nearly the same peculiarities in the structure of their eyes. The same thing is true of the median eye, just mentioned. This organ has long been known as the pineal gland. It is a conical body about as big as a pea, lying near the centre of the brain, deeply covered by overlying folds of the cerebrum and cerebellum. Some of the old philosophers thought it might be the seat of the soul, perhaps because it was situated near the centre of the brain, and because it afforded a sufficiently secluded spot within which the soul could hide itself.

But the biologist finally discovered in certain frogs and lizards, where the brain is simpler and its various lobes are smaller, that the pineal gland was situated at the end of a long, hollow stalk just under a semi-transparent spot in the roof of the skull, so that a glimmer of light could fall on the gland. In these animals the organ did not look like a gland, but showed unmistakable evidences of being a rudimentary eye. Since this discovery many students have studied the structure and development of this organ, and we now know that a rudimentary eye like this is present in almost every backboned animal. It always begins its growth in the young animal as a tubular projection from the roof of a brain chamber, and so constant is its location throughout the vertebrates that it serves as a very valuable landmark by which to identify and locate other parts of the brain. It is doubtful whether it is ever of much value as an eye, even, although it does in some cases have a very respectable lens, optic nerve, and retina. I mean by that if the lateral eye of an animal were destroyed its median eye, even at its best, would hardly do more than enable the animal to respond to a change from light to dark or vice versa. In the great majority of cases it is of no use whatever as an eye. The pineal eye lies underneath the soft spot on the top of a baby's head, and if its nerve were long enough the eye might reach the surface in that region, and not in the middle of the forehead as sometimes represented on the old cyclopean monsters. The Greeks probably drew their inspiration for the creation of these mythical beings not from any knowledge of the pineal eye, but from the observation of rather rare human freaks in which the two median eyes are actually fused into one. If you ever get a good look at a tadpole you may be able to see a minute whitish spot on top of its head between the eyes. The pineal eye lies under this spot just inside the skull.

Of course, you have already asked why does every backboned animal have such an eye if it is of no use. Different biologists would answer that question in different ways, but most of them would say that such an eye was probably present in the ancestors of the vertebrates, and that for some reason, perhaps because it did not have the right construction or connections, it was finally in part supplanted by the more favorably circumstanced lateral eyes.

There is one remarkable feature about the eyes of vertebrates not seen in any other animals. In both the lateral and pineal eyes, the retina, or the sensitive part of the eye, on which the light acts, is a part of the wall of the brain, which, when the animal is very young, grows out toward the surface of the head so that the light can reach it. Each retina is finally located at the end of a long hollow tube that leads into the cavity of the brain. The tube, which is made of the same kind of tissue as the brain and retina, is ultimately converted into the optic nerve.

As we have already indicated, biologists are agreed that the higher warm-blooded vertebrates are descended from fishes much like those that exist to-day, because there is a really wonderful resemblance in structure between a fish and a human being, the two extreme types in the series; and the younger the human being is, say during the first few weeks of its development within the mother's womb, the more perfect is this resemblance. But when we ask what were the ancestors of the lowest vertebrates, we find that the greatest difference of opinion prevails, and the problem is so difficult that many believe that it will never be solved, because it is probably that the real ancestors have long been extinct, and perhaps have left no trace behind by which their structure can be determined. This, then, is the real gap in our genealogy, and it is more important for the biologist to discover the animals that filled it than those that bridge over the narrow space between man and the apes. Some have thought the ancestors of the vertebrates were like annelida, that is, worms made of a succession of joints or rings, like the earth worms and clam worms; others have assigned this honor to insects, or to the ascidians, and to several other forms, whose names would not mean anything except to a naturalist. If we could only find in any of these animals indications of a hollow brain like that found in all vertebrates, or gill slits, or a primitive backbone, or tubular brain eyes, we would feel pretty confident that animals having such organs were either the ancestors of the vertebrates or very much like them. Now we find that almost without exception the invertebrates, that is all those animals that do not have a backbone, have eyes formed of little pits or depressions in the outer skin, sometimes a comparatively long way off from the brain; and although the retina of an invertebrate and a vertebrate eye is much alike, the latter is always inside out, and arises from the inside of the brain, while the former is right side up and arises from the outer skin of the body.

If a vertebrate inherits its eyes from some invertebrate, how did its eyes happen to get inside its brain? That is not so hard to answer as it may appear. If you examine a frog's egg, or that of a chick or a mouse, you will see that the whole brain and spinal cord is merely a slipper-shaped thickening of the outer skin, like a callous on the palm of your hand, and of course exposed to the direct action of everything that can stimulate the skin. As it grows thicker it is gradually folded into a long tube that quickly sinks out of sight below the surface, without leaving even a scar behind. Now, in some cases, while the brain is still on the surface of the back, we can see the eyes developing out of a part of the skin just as they are in invertebrates, but they are here situated on the very edge of the brain, and when the brain is infolded the eyes are carried down with it, turned inside out, and a little later, at the time when the eyes are first seen by the older observers, they appear to be growing out from the wall of the brain toward the surface of the head. This shows that the eyes of vertebrates were originally derived from the skin, some distance away from the brain, and that they have not always been a part of the brain wall, as they are now.

If we could find some invertebrate whose eyes were in danger of being ingulfed by an ingrowing brain it might give us some clue to the ancestry of the vertebrates. Indications of such a condition have been found in insects and scorpions, and in the horseshoe crap, or king crab, we find a very close approach to the vertebrate condition. The king crab has two large eyes on the side of the head, and in the middle three smaller ones about as big as the head of a pin. The extraordinary thing about it is that in the embryo crabs all these eyes lie on the edge of the brain, and as the front part of the brain is infolded the middle eyes are swept in with it, turned inside out, and finally all three of them come to lie at the end of a long tube growing out from the roof of the brain, just as the pineal eye of vertebrates. The lateral eyes barely escape being infolded with them.

But we have always supposed that the pineal eye of vertebrates was a single eye, until recently. But now that its very earliest stages of development have been studied with extreme care in some sharks, we know that it arises from several separate eyes that quickly unite to form what appears to be a single eye. Thus the resemblance between the midian eye of a crab and the pineal eye of vertebrates is made still more striking.

Of course we may not conclude from these facts that vertebrates have descended from king crabs, because the latter are comparatively modern animals that did not appear on the earth till many millions of years after the vertebrate stock was established. But the king crabs are the sole survivors of a very ancient group of spider-like crustacea that did flourish about the time the first vertebrates appeared. They are called trilobites and merostommata; some of them were gigantic fellows nearly 5 feet long and having in some respects a decidedly fish-like appearance, so much so that the elder Agassiz mistook some of them for very primitive kinds of vertebrates. Judging from the markings on their shells they must have had eyes very much like those of the king crab. These facts, together with many others that we cannot explain here, furnish very strong evidence that these ancient crabs are the long-lost ancestors of the vertebrates.

Such a study as we have outlined will serve to show how the biologist makes use of the structure and growth of various organs to read the history of the remote past; it also illustrates the way in which some organs are handed down with wonderful persistency through countless generations, long after they have passed their period of usefulness.

Chief Clerk, U. S. Court of Claims.

She stands as the years pass by her and views the grand parade,
As it sweeps, resistless, onward through sunshine and through shade.
Clad in the Spring's fresh verdure, alight
with the Summer's glow, Bedecked with Autumn's fruitage, white with the Winter's snow.
First 1800 enters with slow and stately tread,
To wailing martial dirges, for Washington is dead.
And all along the highways, at shops and mills and farms,
His veterans are gathered with crêpe upon their arms;
The nations stand uncovered, and all the people mourn
For the father, and the chieftain, who had all their burdens borne.
Right on the column marches, with never a halt or break,
With a mighty swinging cadence that makes the old thrones shake;
Naught checks its steady progress, none
dare to say it nay,
And Jefferson annexes an empire in a day.
Anon with streaming banners, with fifes and throbbing drums,
Grim Jackson heads the legions where 1814 comes;
The people throng about him to welcome and to greet.
The sturdy Indian fighters, rough sailors from the fleet,
The leathern-clad backwoodsmen, the hardy pioneers,
Stout matrons in their homespun, join in the roaring cheers;
And on, unstayed, unfearing, till all the land be won,
They press with axe and rifle toward the setting of the sun;
With every group of cabins a rude log schoolhouse grows,
The country's surest bulwark, the dread of freedom's foes.
Swift years pass by and vanish, the seas grow white with sails,
Great cities line the harbors, fair hamlets dot the vales,
Mines sink along the hillsides, great factories rise and whirr,
The furnace fires are lighted, the land is all astir;
The axe sounds in the woodland, the rifle rings out clear;
Vast forests yield to tillage, the red men disappear;
Town, city, village, hamlet, with strong newcomers teem,
And marching with the vanguard is the mighty conqueror, steam;
It bridges rushing rivers, cuts through the forest's gloom,
It carries every burden, moves wheel and lathe and loom;
On stream and lake and inlet the steamboat whistle shrill
Awakes the sleeping echoes, from rock and wood and hill.
Full thirty years have passed her, and again
Columbia hears
The rattling, rolling drum-beat, that fills her eyes with tears;
And doughty Scott and Taylor salute her as they go,
Crowned with the deathless laurels of far-off Mexico;
Again there comes expansion; wide stretching fair domains, Great mountains stored with riches, vast fertile, blooming plains,
Bring stars to deck the banner, and o'er their farthest reach
Extends our Saxon justice, prevails our Saxon speech;
And California opens, and pours forth golden streams,
Enriching, stimulating, beyond all hopes or dreams;
Spires, hospitals, fair colleges, great legislative domes
Spring up as if by magic; the land grows full of homes:
Art, science, oratory, the skill to nurse and heal,
The law, the stage, the pulpit, care for the poor man's weal;
Philosophy and literature, the bank, the mart, the press,
The teacher's desk, the platform, all glow with high success;
Morse flashes o'er the wires, "Behold what God hath wrought,"
And trains the captive lightning to carry human thought;
And patient high endeavor and dauntless courage yield
At last their wreath of victory, to crown heroic Field;
The thoughts of men are widened, time almost is no more,
When underneath the ocean, from shore to listening shore,
Is borne the healing message, writ down by ancient pen,
"Peace, peace on earth is coming, good will, good will to men."
But the years have grown despondent, reluctant, halting slow,
For the skies are full of portent of coming strife and woe;
Columbia stands grief-stricken, with half-averted gaze,
As '61 comes forward, with civil war ablaze,
And the land is rent and shaken, while four long bloody years
Drag past with roar of battle, with agony and tears.
But peace at last emerges, the Constitution stands,
And, lo! there march the black men all with unshackled hands.
And then with deep lamenting the Nation
once more weeps,
And bows herself heart-broken where murdered Lincoln sleeps;
Just in the hour of victory his gentle spirit fled,
The greatest, wisest, noblest, of all the martyred dead.
Columbia beams triumphant, as conscious of new birth,
While the mightiest army passes that ever trod the earth
Back to their farms and firesides, back to the ways of peace,
And thro' her wide dominions all sounds of conflict cease.
The silent, tireless soldier, he of the iron will,
And Farragut and Sherman, and "gallant little Phil,"
Who led the fleets and armies, and won the Titan game,
Pass on down endless ages, to never-dying fame;
Beyond the far horizon we know, we almost see,
They are holding friendly converse with Stonewall and with Lee.
Again the years press onward, the frontier is no more,
Steel highways gird the country from east to western shore;
Vast energies awaken, and cheerful, happy toil
Fills every port and market, from factory, mine, and soil;
Again the nimble lightning, caught by a wizard spell,
Yields new, undreamed-of service to Edison and Bell:
Records, and reproduces, the lightest word and tone,
And talks along the wires in every language known;
And men grow surely better, more gentle and more wise,
More helpful and more hopeful, less credulous of lies,
Till down the trodden highway, big with two nations' fate,
With troubled eyes, expectant, comes 1898.
And soon again the drum-beat; nor North
nor South may lag;
Both muster at the summons beneath the
dear old flag.
First Dewey at Manila strikes such a staggering blow
That none can doubt the finish; Spain's sun is sinking low;
And then at Santiago, on land and on the sea,
Are won the mighty victories that make the islands free.
Columbia smiles most proudly as down
along the line,
Erect, alert, and buoyant, steps youthful
'90,
With map all reconstructed, with treaty newly signed,
With Union Jack and Stars and Stripes
most lovingly entwined;
And in her kindling glances who looks may plainly see
An august, glorious vision of the century to be.

Needs of the United States Army.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES

By Capt. E. L. ZALINSKI,

United States Army, Retired.

THE report of the Secretary of War for the year 1899 touches vitally the most important needs of the armies and defenses of the Nation. It refers to nearly every essential point, but treats some by inference only. It is, however, the most businesslike and comprehensive consideration of a subject which has been heretofore treated in "spots." The point of view ordinarily taken has been the expediency demands of the moment, and not that for all time.

The affairs of a nation, as of individuals, should be so arranged as to meet the exigencies and dangers not alone of the current times, but of the probable future. So, it would appear, should be the case in National preparations for the dangers and contingencies of war. When the millennium has really come, it will be time enough to disarm and leave our households open for whoever may desire to enter.

The following extracts from the report give a concrete text upon which action should be based:

"The method of proposing and considering, one by one, specific defects does not seem to be an adequate treatment of the subject. It seems to me that the best course would be to settle upon the true principle which should govern the use to be made of the army and then inquire in what respect our present arrangement fails to conform to that principle, and make it conform."

"Two propositions seem to me fundamental in the consideration of the subject."

"First, that the real object of having an army is to provide for war."

"Second, that the regular establishment in the United States will probably never be by itself the whole machine with which any war will be fought."

This is somewhat analogous to Horace Greeley's dictum, that "the way to resumption is to resume," referring to specie payment. To leave the strength of the army the subject of chance and demagogic vituperations should be no longer thought of.

The general problem is here definitely presented. The various factors involved must be considered. A solution must be looked for which, above all other considerations, will give the regular army the greatest attainable effectiveness.

This, however, we must strive to attain with a minimum of expenditure and tax upon the productive energies of the Nation. Furthermore, there must be an entire absence of even the appearance of endangering the cherished National liberties.

A regular army of respectable numbers must be maintained—a large contingent of trained National reserves, drawn directly from the people, must be available, and behind these all we must have a military people ready to make any and all sacrifices to maintain the honor and integrity of the Nation against the world, if need be.

A well-defended coast, a powerful navy, and magazines stored with adequate supplies of arms, ammunition, and equipments wherewith to arm the Reserves, the people and arsenals equipped with machinery adequate to supply the waste of war, are essential. We have, then, to provide as follows:

1. An adequate Regular Army, with a competent staff.

2. A powerful Navy and a sufficient coast defense system.

3. An enrolled and trained National Volunteer reserve, both military and naval.

4. A system by which the enrolled Reserves shall have only competent officers.

5. Military instruction in public schools, to create a military people.

6. Rifle ranges.

7. Large reserve stores of arms, ammunition, and equipment.

8. Arsenals equipped with special machinery for resupplying these in very great quantities.

These will be considered in their order.

1. It would appear that the strength of the regular army should be fixed at each census, to bear a definite ratio to the population. The proportion of 1 regular soldier to 1,000 inhabitants can certainly not be considered as dangerous to the National liberties.

The law should, therefore, be enacted, fixing, at the discretion of the President, the strength of the army in time of peace at a maximum of one-tenth of 1 per cent. of the population as given by the last census. This would give a change in the strength of the army at each census taken. The strength of the company units should be at a maximum of one-half of the strength which could be readily handled by its complement of officers in time of war. This would permit of the doubling of the regular army in time of war, or threatened war, without reducing its efficiency. The third battalion of each regiment should be retained a skeleton, having only the officers and non-commissioned officers assigned thereto. The officers and non-commissioned officers of this skeleton battalion could be utilized for the numerous duties which are unavoidable in the administration of the army, for duties with the National Guard and reserves, and for instruction of colleges, public schools, &c. The non-commissioned officers could play an important and valuable part in the military instruction in public schools.

In time of war, a fourth battalion should be organized as a depot battalion. To this battalion the officers and non-commissioned officers least fitted for field service could be assigned. Recruits for the three battalions, which presumably are in the field, could be sent for instruction to the depot battalion. Thus a supply of material could be constantly trained in readiness to fill up vacancies which are sure to occur from disease and casualties incurred in action.

Such regiments of the regular army as are not serving abroad should be cantoned so that no State could be without at least one regular organization within its limits. They could there serve as a school of instruction for the National Guard and reserve officers and non-commissioned officers who should desire to become more efficient in military knowledge.

The maximum vigor and value of the regular army would be more sure to be obtained under a system where merit may receive its reward of promotion, or otherwise, as indicated in the report of the Secretary.

The necessity of a General Staff, which should receive its lifeblood by the selection of the fittest from the line, and which would constantly renew its vigor by contact with Mother Earth—i.e., the line troops from which they came—is too obvious to require further comment in this brief review. Recent events in our own history, as well as that of other nations, emphasize this as most essential. The evils of too great centralization in the system of the War Department have been shown in glaring colors both in our recent war with Spain and in Great Britain's present war operations in South Africa; a system admirably adapted for a small army in time of peace only, is not likely to be adequate for very great armies in time of war.

A system especially adapted for great armies in times of war may, however, be adapted to peace conditions without losing sight of the requirements for war conditions.

Above all, it would seem that in times of peace and war "the tail should not wag the dog."

A corollary of the second proposition quoted from the Secretary's report is that it is necessary to provide in time of peace a very large and effective auxiliary force, to be drawn from the people. In the past it has been thought that the National Guard of the various States would form the first line of this reserve.

But the experiences of the recent war, as well as some of those of previous wars, indicate that some very radical changes are demanded in this direction, if we would not have a broken reed to lean upon. It would seem as if an additional force should be formed in each State on a basis similar to the Naval Reserve, and directly allied to one of the regiments of the regular army. Such reserves should be divided into two classes:

(a) One organized for National purposes, available for service at home or abroad.

(b) For service at home in a designated harbor or fortification, both for artillery purposes and for submarine mining.

These last two services would attract men of intelligence and position in the community, who would gladly serve their country, but whose business and family relations are such as to render it most difficult and inadvisable to leave their homes.

Congress must initiate a much more liberal policy in making appropriations for supply of arms and equipments to the National Guard and to the National reserve forces just mentioned.

Steps should be taken to provide Summer schools of instruction for officers and non-commissioned officers of the National Guard and National reserve forces, with the regular troops serving in each State. After such course of instruction they should be required to pass examinations conducted by boards consisting of officers of the regular army. Graded certificates should be issued to the graduates of these regimental schools. Those passing such examinations with honor should have their names carried on a list of those who are eligible for commissions with troops of the National reserve. Officers of the National Guard should also be permitted to have their names enrolled in this list of eligible officers. When it becomes necessary to raise large bodies of volunteer troops, a sufficient number of instructed and capable officers would thus be available. It would take such appointments out of the field of political and personal "pull," which has been so fatal in our past history.

To provide material from the mass of our people, who should have some preliminary military training, it is proposed that military instruction should be given in public schools throughout the country, by officers and non-commissioned officers of the regular army, detailed by the General Government. Such instruction must be beneficial to the Nation from a purely military point of view, and also must necessarily be advantageous, in that it creates in the rising generation a tangible sense of public duties to be performed. It also tends to secure improved physique and personal bearing.

Such material must, without question, furnish a more quickly assimilated citizen soldiery than were this system not in existence. In modern wars time is a most essential element. All the potential strength of a nation must be quickly available, or it might as well not have been in existence, so far as being of any practical value. All its assets must be "quick assets," ready for the emergencies of the times.

4. Our own experience in war and the more recent examples given by the battles in South Africa should make obvious the enormous importance and value for defensive purposes, of skill in the use of rifles by the mass of the people. The military value of a people accustomed to the accurate use of rifles cannot be overrated. In the United States, skill in the use of firearms is no longer necessitated by having to secure game for food or for defense against Indians. The acquirement of such skill among the masses of the people might very easily be attained, and at relatively small cost, by the establishment of suitable rifle ranges in accessible parts of the country. The competitions at these ranges should be managed by the State and National officials, and the interest therein should be stimulated by competitions at which handsome National and State prizes should be awarded.

5. It is futile and puerile to have large bodies of men willing to serve and not have arms, ammunition, and equipments in readiness for them. It would seem that we should have a reserve at least 50 per cent. greater than would be required for the first armament and equipment for the maximum which would be available forces at the outbreak of war. This should be so distributed and stored that no time would be lost in the distribution. The more perishable supplies could be distributed from time to time to the regular troops, National Guards, and reserves for current uses, to be replaced as soon as issued.

6. But, besides these reserves, the Government should be provided with arsenals having a large surplusage of special machinery ready to turn out a very large volume of ammunition and other material which is expended in times of war with enormous rapidity, and which cannot ordinarily be obtained in sufficient quantities from the private manufactories of our own country and still less from those of other countries.

England has in its arsenal at Woolwich and private manufactories ready resources for manufacturing ammunition, &c., far above anything we have. Yet in the little war now going on in South Africa, which has only been in operation for a few weeks, we find that England is obliged to try to secure ammunition from other countries. The existing condition of affairs permits them to do this to some extent, but conditions can be easily imagined which render the obtaining of war supplies from foreign countries impossible for ourselves. It appears the part of wisdom, therefore, to anticipate the most unfavorable conditions which are likely to arise by now providing ourselves for an adequate plant for such purposes.

The Law of the Household in New York.

By Justice David McAdam

OF THE SUPREME COURT.

The husband is the head of the family and the dignitor persona. As there must be a home, the husband has the right to fix it where he pleases. The wife's domicile merges in that of her husband. If the husband proposes a radical change of the place of abode, it must be in good faith and upon reasonable cause, or otherwise a place might be selected entirely unsuited to the wife. The husband must furnish a suitable home, provide according to his means and conditions of life for the wife's maintenance and support, see that the offspring of their union are brought up with tenderness and care, and generally conduct himself according to the spirit of the matrimonial union, the basis of society. The relation is one of mutual affection, and the best of reciprocal faith is required, ending only when death removes one or the other from the world's cares and responsibilities.

The wife is the accredited agent of the husband in all ordinary matters pertaining to the household, and he the paymaster of all bills which she may contract for necessaries.

If the husband wrongfully casts the wife off, he sends her into the world with authority to purchase necessaries according to his condition in life, or his credit.

The husband's obligations do not cease on the wife's death, for, in the language of a recent decision:, "it is the right and the duty of the husband to bury his deceased wife in a suitable manner. His wishes in the premises must be respected, and no gratuitous intermeddling therewith by third parties will be encouraged. But if he neglects to discharge the duty of burying his dead wife he is liable to one who provides for her necessary and reasonable burial." (81 N. W. R., 206.) A corresponding right and duty falls on the wife when the husband dies.

If the husband dies the wife is entitled, by way of dower, to a life interest in one-third of his real estate and to part of his personalty, the portion of the latter depending on circumstances.

A deed executed by the husband alone leaves the wife's right of dower in the property conveyed unaffected. She must join in the deed to bar it.

The wife may by statute dispose of all her property by deed or will, cutting the husband off entirely. This statute was passed to protect the wife, the law supposing the husband to be capable of protecting himself.

If the wife fails to dispose of her property by deed or will and has issue, the property goes to the children, suject to the husband's common-law right as tenant by the courtesy, which in effect means that he takes the rents, issues, and profits during his life.

The husband, being the head of the family, is generally regarded as the principal; hence his acts do not bind the wife without authority from her, express or implied.

The wife by statute may now contract debts the same as if she were a single woman, and may therefore pledge her credit for debts pertaining to the household which the husband alone would otherwise have to pay.

The wife may engage in business on her own account, or become a member of a firm with her husband, or with strangers.

The wife or the husband may employ and discharge the help required to run the household. The husband must foot the bills unless the wife has agreed to do so.

Bills contracted with the grocer, the butcher, or baker become the debts of the husband, unless the wife has pledged her own credit for their payment.

Each is entitled to the society of the other as far as circumstances will permit. Partial separation for purposes connected with the husband's profession or trade, not unnecessarily prolonged, is allowed; as, for instance, where he is an army officer or a traveling salesman. Such absence does not constitute a breach of the marital relation, unless accompanied by neglect to provide for the family's maintenance.

Each is expected to overlook and smooth over the other's natural frailties and infirmities of temper, and to forget and forgive little differences, which, with a little sunshine, vanish when the storm subsides.

As the wife "left her happy home" for him, the husband is expected to make the new one as happy as the old.

A divorce obtained in one State without service of process therein on the defendant or without an appearance therein by the defendant is valueless in any other State or country.

Happiness is the true aim of life, and if skirmishing parties and pyrotechnics are discouraged, and the efforts of husband and wife are bent on attaining the desired end, there will be no trouble in pointing to theirs as "a happy home," and to its occupants "as two souls with but a single thought, two hearts that beat as one."

In the language of Somerville:

"True happiness (if understood) Consists alone in doing good."

DAVID McADAM.

Needless Noises of a Great City.

By M. G. ADAMS.

AMONG famous satires of London life drawn by the graphic pencil of Hogarth is the well-known print, "Enraged Musician." Various noises of the London streets are concentrated in the figures passing before the open window of a distracted composer, himself a conspirator against his neighbor's peace.

But the London of Hogarth and 1740 was a wilderness, albeit a howling wilderness, compared with the metropolis of our day and progressive country.

His fish peddler and milkmaid had but to voice their wares to the height of low buildings. Ballad singer and piper combined had not the resonance of one piano-organ penned in by the echoing walls of a modern street. The provincial play of children was not like the forays of the shrill-voiced street Arabs of to-day roaming in lawless bands, defiant, aggressive, leather-lunged, adding to the din while trying to overtop it.

The unpaved streets of all London gave back no answering ring to iron-shod hoof and wheel, or the hurrying feet of the multitude.

A city of the olden times seems like a pastoral quiet in comparison with the ceaseless roar of to-day's traffic—the babel of sound that smites the ear and strains the nerves of the citizen of the Borough of Manhattan.

This era may be again called the Iron Age—when imperative need for enduring material to resist life's hard grind has resulted in arming all opposing surfaces with iron or its equivalent.

Where the tide of travel or trade runs swiftest, the result is becoming every day more insupportable. Selfishness and greed show increasing indifference to the rights of humanity, and law seems inoperative when it clashes with the interests of corporations or contractors.

The enormous use of structural iron wherever new buildings, piers, bridging or trestle work are erecting has introduced a new and intolerable noise producer. Loading, hauling, and delivery of the heavy girders and beams, the placing and riveting of hollow columns and cornices under resonant blows of the smith's hammer, make a frightful din that is going on in almost every street, as new structures climb skyward.

A special ordinance forbids transportation of this material through the city without separate wrappings for each piece of metal. Yet daily one may see great trucks lumbering heavily over the pavements with a deafening rattle of loosely piled iron bars.

Constant change in leasehold and real estate values invades every part of the town with armies of busy workmen—who tear down and cart away apparently valuable buildings to make room for the skeleton of steel that rears its slender outlines so rapidly. As each story advances the metal and stone workers advance with it, all pounding and shouting and scurrying about to an accompaniment of creaking windlass and puffing engine, shrill whistles signaling the orders for hoisting—swinging inward and releasing the great tackles. Building operations are no longer dependent on favorable weather conditions, so the unbearable racket is uninterrupted.

It is equally clamorous in the business district or in upper Fifth Avenue, when a clubhouse, fashionable hotel, or millionaire's palace may force you to endure through many months the noisy rock-drill, succeeded by blasting, stone-dressing, and the lusty housesmith—with a daily procession of trucks and carts unloading material.

The eight-hour labor law blesses more than the workmen in giving some respite from the clamor of their various crafts, but the 6 o'clock whistle does not bring peace. Delivery wagons are clattering through the echoing streets all the evening. Legions of cabs and hansoms dash about on call as if they were messengers of life and death. Why does the steel-clad hoof of the belated cab horse seem to smite the pavement with special venom and resonance?

For a few blessed hours the city naps—when tinkling car horses roll over on their musty bedding, the "L" cars are few and far between, the whirr of the cable becomes a drowsy hum, and unholy revelers break the silence for only the passing moment. Of course, there is always a plaintive cat, equally distressing, whether flocking by himself or rending his fellow. His intermezzo can be silenced by a skillfully delivered missile—and—the nap resumed.

But just when the nerve tension relaxes and exhausted Nature is beginning her task of refreshment—in that delicious hour of deep sleep at early morn—comes the rumble of the heavy ice wagon with its clanking chains, and the cheerful song of the milkman, who thinks all the rest of the world should be up and doing, and clinks or smashes his empty bottles with a fine disregard of auditory nerves. Whistling butcher boys shout in challenge as they cool their heels in areas waiting for a drowsy cook. House porters converse in high key with fellow potters across the street as they splash and sputter high pressure hose over the house fronts. When it becomes a chorus one may drop off again, until the "White Wings" swoop down with their infernal sheet iron scrapers on the aspalt. Then, indeed, farewell to "Nature's foster-nurse, Repose," for a more insistent, rasping, penetrative racket never assailed the ear, unless that kindred device—the iron coal chute, delivering a season's supply of coal with thunderous clamor and lightning speed.

Vendors of flowers, fruit, honey, vegetables, begin early the shouting of their wares, with a skill in "projecting the voice" worth a fortune to a vocalist. The sound is bandied back and forth between the high walled streets in shrill echoes.

The aforetime bell of the knife grinder has been replaced by a coaching horn of sonorous quality warranted to put an edge on the dullest temper a block away. Diligent ragmen clamor for "bottles" from dawn till dark, along with several newer industries, proclaiming at the top of their lungs their desire to clean your refrigerator, to renew your clothes line, to convert your old clothes into the price of new. These are the solo performers to the general chorus of rumbling truck, rattling cart, the clatter of iron ash barrels on iron-sheathed ash carts, and the endless procession of tradesmen's wagons with their whistling, chaffing drivers.

The human voice in conversation is no factor in the case, because it is drowned in the general hubbub.

This for the side streets. On the business avenues matters are much worse. There is no intermission from early morning until well into the night in that ceaseless tide of traffic and travel surging through these great arteries of the city's life. Here the surface area is wholly occupied to imminent danger of humanity. Cable cars rush by with clanging gongs and grind of steel wheels in steel grooves; enormous vans and drays, heavy-laden trucks, and mail wagons rumble along with clatter of ponderous iron shoes on their powerful draught horses. Street peddlers ply a noisy trade at the edge of the sidewalks filled with an eager hurrying throng.

Overhead move the shuttles of the elevated roads, too busy with their problem of overcrowded transportation to heed the din of their mechanical operation. Day and night, past bedroom windows and living apartments of thousands of decent families, steam engines are puffing, whistling, sizzling, and the sharp sudden blast of the exhaust, the resonant bang of couplings and buffers, the whirr and grind of onrushing trains, at little more than arm's length!

Birth and death, and often the tragedies of life, must go on in this ceaseless roar—the home life of little children, the traffic of a myriad small shops. Perhaps the accommodative faculty of the ear is as ready to requirement as that of the eye. It is said people become dulled in time to the uproar about them. But it must be at the loss of power to perceive ordinary harmonious sound or the modulations of music. Will permanent dwellers on Third or Ninth Avenue be able to enjoy anything ultimately but the brazen blast of the "little German band" or the harsh chords of the calliope?

The situation has become of gravest importance when hearings in the courts have to be suspended. Official protest was made by the August Grand Jury "against noises of such volume at all times from the streets about the Court House that testimony given in court could not be heard by all the jurors."

Up-town movement of churches was largely necessitated because services could not be held comfortably even with closed windows.

To the observer of current events, relief seems close at hand for many of these conditions. Radical changes are beginning that must result in greatly lessening what seem now the necessary noises.

Muffling of all stone pavements by a covering of asphalt is the first and imperative need. Increasing application of rubber to metal surfaces is the next step of importance, and its use in the pneumatic tire is becoming so general for all the lighter class of vehicles, that the old type of wheel will soon be gone. Experience proves its economy in great saving of general repairs to carriages fitted with pneumatic wheel rims. Their manufacture has become one of the great industries. The development of inventions for propelling vehicles by electricity, various gases from petroleum, compressed air, and other elements, signs the death warrant of the noisy horseshoe, even if it, too, were not improving with the use of rubber.

Rapid advance in automobile construction has already produced the heavier class of vehicles for the world's work as well as pleasure. Self-propelling trucks, and delivery wagons, electric street cars, each with its own motor, are operating successfully. An automobile carrying three and a half tons has just made the run of 220 miles between Liverpool and London. Heavily capitalized companies organized to manufacture self-motor trucks have large advance orders. One express company has received a new wagon for test, and if a success, announces that it will use no more horses.

With the automobile will come the increase of danger signals, but we can cheerfully accept the music of the bells in exchange for the Anvil Chorus of to-day's traffic!

When our elevated roads are run by electric or air engines, and the reverberations of the wheel grind deadened by some of the simple devices for sinking the rails in sand or water channels, as advanced by Mr. James J. Russell and others; or that recently adopted by the New York Central Railroad on its viaduct at One Hundred and Tenth Street, we shall wake as from a nightmare to bless the relief.

Officials of the Chicago Board of Health and Police Departments are working jointly to enforce all city ordinances against peace disturb

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS.

W. S. James has been appointed Cleveland agent of the Hanover Fire Insurance Company.

The Southern Insurance Company of New Orleans has withdrawn from Illinois and Massachusetts.

Charles T. Evans has been appointed Philadelphia agent of the Potomac Fire Insurance Company of Washington.

The Salamandra Fire Insurance Company of St. Petersburg has been admitted to Massachusetts and Herbert G. Fairfield appointed Boston agent.

C. F. Shallcross of the home office of the Royal Insurance Company of Liverpool has been attached to the New York office of the company under United States Manager E. F. Beddall.

At the meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Life Insurance Company of Montpelier, Vt., the following officers were elected to serve during the ensuing year: President—Charles Dewey; First Vice President—James C. Houghton; Second Vice President—J. A. De Boer; Secretary—O. D. Clark; Treasurer—H. M. Cutler. J. T. Phelps of Boston was elected a Director.

The Committee of Twenty-five, which was named by President E. C. Irvin of the National Board of Fire Underwriters to consider the general condition of fire insurance with a view to the development of a plan to advance rates in different parts of the United States, will hold its first meeting in this city on Tuesday. The present plan of the committee is to hold a series of conferences in several cities and then formulate a definite programme to be reported at a meeting of the companies in April. The action of this April meeting will be strictly advisory in its character, but it is expected to exert considerable influence upon the agents of the country, because it will represent the consensus of opinion among the officers of the companies. It is especially designed to affect rates in such cities as Chicago and Philadelphia, where the brokerage interests of the agents have been sufficiently powerful so far to prevent the advance in rates desired by the companies to offset the severe fire losses of 1899.

The losses of the marine insurance companies sustained on their ocean marine business last year, which were unusually severe, as were the losses of fire underwriters, have led to a general discussion in the marine offices as to the necessity of increasing their premium charges. The matter has been more or less talked about for the last six weeks, and the appearance of the annual statements of the companies, which are being made up this month, has increased the probability that the whole question of deep-sea marine rates will be taken up in an advisory way by the members of the American Institute of Marine Underwriters. Should a definite agreement be reached, the companies are likely to observe any suggested advance, although no binding action is probable, because of the difficulty in reconciling the methods of mutual companies and stock companies. The lake business of the companies was somewhat improved last year.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Wall Street is spending its energy in talk; of action there is practically none. Total transactions on the Stock Exchange last week fell short of a million and a half shares—just about the average per day during the corresponding week of last year.

With this dullness there is irregularity in quotations, those stocks which are most conspicuous showing not unnatural weakness through lack of support. Only the room traders of the Stock Exchange seem at all interested in the market's immediate course—seem to be almost the only interests disposed to operate at all. Of outside business practically none shows, commission house brokers being almost uniformly outspoken in advising customers to wait for better opportunities than now offer—their view not being so much that quotations are likely to drop as that there is small prospect of early gains. The situation differs from the apathy which comes not infrequently in midsummer, for financiers who then enjoy vacations are now continually at business. And this fact induces confidence in quarters where it is insisted that current quiet in the market will be soon followed by an activity to result from plans now being perfected by interests which see advantages in holding the market in check pending the accomplishment of important corporate purposes.

While Stock Exchange business stands still, all Wall Street drifts into philosophy, of course; and the financial district is crowded with theories as to what this, that, or the other possibility may effect. Of topics most in view, the British-Boer war cuts the largest figure. According to the professional logicians who supplant the ticker, the course of events in South Africa must be consequential in the making or unmaking of values here. Yet during the past week there was forcible illustration that this idea may be overdrawn. In the early stages of this foreign war almost any development in the Transvaal could affect our market; but it is different now—as was indicated by the utter refusal of Wall Street to arouse when British victory was proclaimed on Thursday, and as was indicated on the day following, when British disaster was the chronicle. Neither successes nor rout brought other than the feeblest response.

As a trade fact, the continuance of a foreign war, wherein our own country does not become embroiled, cannot be without broadening effects upon our markets. Foodstuffs, war munitions, a wide variety of manufactures must be drawn from here, and not merely by the two nations directly involved, for every European country so closely touches the British-Boer situation that normal conditions are affected, normal producing powers reduced—which is but to say that thus larger drafts must be made upon the only actually independent country having crop and commodity surpluses to sell.

They who worry most over possibilities of damage to the American security market because of the Transvaal conflict lay chief stress upon what may come from disturbance to the money markets of the world. They insist that the rapid reduction of the Bank of England's discount rate represents manipulative force rather than natural influences and is but preliminary to the flotation of a tremendous British war loan which will quickly push up rates again the world over. Theories of this sort are guesses, but even while Wall Street's general view is that such apprehensions are unwarranted, it is not difficult to find thoughtful and careful bankers in Wall Street who discuss just such contingencies—and some bankers, in confidences, predict substantial American exports of gold. Their view is that we have the yellow metal to spare, and that advancing it to England will chiefly certify our financial strength, make emphatic our pre-eminence as the creditor nation of the world; but coincidentally they do not disguise their calculation that along with any important shipments of gold we would have money market rates automatically rising.

General trade conditions are satisfactory. Review agencies suggest that some slackening in both industrial and commercial activity impends, but practically one view is expressed by business men throughout the country, and that is unqualifiedly confident. The agreement seems to be that in volume of trade this year will break all past records, and there are few who doubt that rates for staples will be well maintained. One fact indisputable is that the country, every part of the country, is prosperous beyond prediction. The security market buoyancy of last year was based on anticipation; and it seems beyond credibility that actual realization can result in disturbance.

Railway earnings continue to expand. The returns of 1898 were considered big, the figures of 1899 were bigger, while the showings coming along in 1900 mount yet higher. Traffic managers of importance are predicting that this year's results will show even more favorably than yet has been indicated. New relations between the great railway systems of the country are already producing profitable effects, rate cutting being followed by cooperation and the maintenance of better schedules than formerly were possible.

Some incidental exhibits are not too encouraging, however. Yesterday the St. Paul Railroad issued its statement of net earnings for December, showing that a gross increase approximating $100,000 was turned into a decrease in net earnings close to $170,000. This makes the same company's exhibit for the first six months of its fiscal year a gain of over $2,250,000 in gross earnings, with a decrease in net earnings for the same period of over $300,000. It is theorized that this disappointing showing is to be accounted for by extraordinary improvement disbursements being charged arbitrarily into current operating expenses; but the truth is that even so great a property as the St. Paul Railroad obliges investors to be content with guessing. Unattended by some hypothesis, which can be based only upon speculation, such gains in gross converted into losses in net are not inspiriting. The matter of the wisdom of a financial policy which does away with the old fashion of waste-basket "construction accounts" and imposes extraordinary charges upon current operations is not at issue; many conservative authorities champion just such policy, regard any other procedure as hurtful. But there can fairly be no reason why the owners of any railroad, investors in the railroad's securities, should not be kept informed as to where their property stands—whether net losses are naturally resulting from the cost of making increases in gross earnings or whether such net losses betoken the investment of capital whereby to make the company more productive. Why should there be any mystery? What interest can be so furthered? The security holder is put at disadvantage. The Wall Street bear profits.

The gravest elements in the financial situation have to do with systems of secrecy which too many corporation managers feel themselves able to pursue. Third Avenue Street Railway disclosures illustrate this. There a floating debt close approaching $20,000,000 confronts the public all of a sudden, and the company is obliged to make appeals to outsiders to rescue it. While this crushing debt was being piled up nothing was heard of what was going on. Mystery with destruction sequels gets not new but only extraordinary exemplification in this Third Avenue incident.

Openness in corporation management can be neglected only at terrific risks.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

The bank statement issued yesterday shortly before the close of the market was, as had been anticipated, a very favorable one. Surplus reserves increased more than $5,000,000, while specie increased $5,154,700, legal tenders $3,689,600, deposits $15,008,000, and loans $7,515,600.

The increase in loans is said to be due principally to the steady buying of bonds, while the increase in cash shows that money from the interior continues steadily to come in. In the listless state of the market, the statement had little effect, though quotations seemed to be inclined to sag.

C. P. HUNTINGTON ON RAILWAY LEGISLATION.

Some adroit efforts are put forth to persuade Wall Street that misfortune threatens the railroads of the country because of new legislative enactments which may be aimed against traffic carrying corporations, and inquiries put by a representative of THE NEW YORK TIMES to Mr. C. P. Huntington elicit the following significant expression:

"What do I think of legislation adverse to railroads? Well, I do not think much of it—which may be taken in two ways. That is, I do not spend much time thinking about it, for one thing, and in the next place I naturally do not approve of it.

"This question of adverse legislation is an old one, which has come before me in various phases during the last sixty-five years that I have been in business for myself. The history of one State in that respect is only a repetition of conflicts which have occurred in many States of the Union, run their course, and been supplanted finally by the conservative, moderate, and generally just attitude taken and maintained by the legislators of the older States, notably in the East. Of course I speak from the railroad standpoint, being a railroad man, and more familiar with the history of railroads than of other enterprises.

"In my official capacity as a railroad officer I have encountered a number of these preliminary antagonisms, which are almost inevitable on account of the constantly recurring changes, economically speaking, which are brought about through the construction of lines of railroads and the bettering here and there of transportation facilities. These changes make the communities concerned readjust values to competitive trade conditions, and jealousies arise because of the personal interests affected, while for the time being the broader question of the general interest of the State becomes secondary. We expect opposition from new States—I mean States whose existence as such is, compared with the veteran States of the North and East, comparatively brief. In California we have had to contend with this opposition. There has been there, and elsewhere, a short-sighted apprehension that somebody may make money out of these investments, and that is in itself childish, for men of means do not risk the loss of large amounts of capital for the sole purpose of helping any community without regard to their own interests. Though they may be glad—and they always are—to have the improvements they create inure to the benefit of such communities and of the whole State, yet they demand, and rightfully, too, that, when they take all the risks and do all the work, they are entitled to a fair share in the rewards. I have yet to see a case where the creation of railroad facilities has not been of incalculably greater advantage and benefit to communities and States where railroads have been built than it has to the individuals who spent their money in establishing them. Since my associates and myself began railroad building in California we have bought many small roads on which the owners were losing money; in fact, if my memory serves me right, all of them. save one, were running at a loss on current expenses, to say nothing of the fixed expenses, such as interest, taxes, &c., and in every case but one, I believe, where we have taken these roads into the general system of the Southern Pacific Company we have been able to reduce the rates, accommodate the public better, and have at the same time made some money out of the properties themselves. Meantime the State herself has grown enormously, as we all know, until she has taken the prominent rank she is entitled to among the sisterhood of States. That this progress and prosperity is in the largest measure due to the transportation facilities which have been created through the building of the various railroads which now reach that State, I think no intelligent and fair man will for a moment deny.

"We are a very considerable factor in the growth and development of Texas also, and here, too, I regret to say, there has existed in the recent past an element of hostility to railroads, which has directly tended to retard the rapid development of the State's resources; and it is surprising to me that, with the careers of other States before her, Texas has not long ago repudiated counsels which were contrary to her best interests. She is so great in her undeveloped resources and in the character of her wideawake people that she should be great enough and acute enough, it seems to me, to realize that her growth and development are really dependent upon these aggregations of capital in the hands of able and strong men, who stand ready to expend large amounts of money there in a way to redound to the direct advantage of the whole State. But I am sure that I have seen within the last year or two better indications and the growth of a better public sentiment in Texas than was formerly the case. The people, as they are brought closer and closer together through the great agencies of the railroad, the telegraph, and the telephone, are growing wiser with respect to the vital relation between themselves and these vast, active, and growing interests that are doing so much for the advance of civilization and trade. I believe the people of Texas want to be just, and I have no fear but that in time they will be, for the question rests with themselves. If they send to the Legislature good and true men, of broad intelligence, who are awake to the situation, Texas will certainly take the place she is entitled to. If they send as their representatives agrarians and demagogues, they must expect that the detriment to the railroads, which such men seek to bring about without regard to the effect upon the State, will react even more strongly upon the State's own interest. The people of any State who discriminate against corporations do an unwise thing, as a corporation is chartered to do certain kinds of work and business because capital is needed to carry on the business than can be furnished by a single individual, except in very few instances—at least, I think one can count on his fingers the number of men who can with their own personal resources build any considerable system of railroads—and people will not accept the responsibility of going into an ordinary copartnership, under which each member becomes responsible for the indebtedness of the whole concern. Hence, the organization of a corporation permits men of moderate means to take stock aggregating very large amounts of money and to thus compete with large capital concentrated in single individuals. By means of these aggregations of small sums railroads can be built and transportation over them furnished to the people at the minimum cost.

"How many railroads have we in Texas now? We have some ten or twelve organizations there, which under a single complete and efficient management could be operated at the smallest possible expense and the public could be better accommodated than it is to-day. Under the present method compelled by the laws of Texas, separate or independent organizations are required to be kept, involving the additional expense of different sets of officers and offices, different machine shops and tools, and, to a certain extent, different depots and stations. Many expenses have to be duplicated, and this could be avoided by having all the organizations concentrated into one, business would be done with greater advantage to shippers, and the very minimum rates would be made possible. Texas, as a matter of fact, requires longer communicating lines than almost any other State, on account of its vast area, over which the population is spread out. The soil of the State is varied, but fine in its character, and the different sections must all be reached by railroad facilities in order to allow the various productions of those sections to be taken to the centres of trade and traffic. These long distances have to be overcome at great cost to those who are willing to take the risks of railroad construction, yet it must be done if the people of the State are to be in touch with the people of other States.

"Now, I am quite sure that no other State or Territory of this country receives greater benefit from her railroads than Texas does; and I do not believe there is any other State where the owners of such property are receiving less for their investments. I believe, too, that the people of Texas are finding out these things for themselves, for there certainly seems to be a better feeling there toward corporate property than there has been in the past; and I hope that good feeling will continue and increase as the people learn—as they must—the great benefits they are receiving from the railroads operating in that State.

"We are doing a great deal of work at Galveston and elsewhere in the State also, but particularly in Galveston, in the way of establishing great wharves for the transfer of our business between rail and ship. Galveston people are alive to the importance of their seaport, and still more alive to the necessity of improving it. There has been a great bound in business prosperity there since the work of deepening their harbor channel was first begun, and to-day, with deep water at her wharves, Galveston is confident of a great future, as she well may be. We are preparing to keep pace with what is expected of us there, and I think the Southern Pacific Company is fairly entitled to the sympathy and moral support of every interest of the State for it proposes to create splendid facilities for such an embarkadero as Texas ought to have. The great States of the East which have pushed forward to the front rank of progress have been those States which have been not only hospitable to great corporative enterprises, but have treated them justly and equitably after they have got them.

"Justice and fair play is all the railroads ask. It certainly is all they ought to ask for, and I will say for the Southern Pacific Company that all it asks for is the same equitable and fair treatment by legislators that the railroads of the older States get and that individuals generally receive.

"C. P. HUNTINGTON."

WALL STREET AND THE WAR.

Why should Wall Street worry; why should American business interests be adversely affected by the course of the British-Boer war? Effects are shown, the popular Wall Street theory as to current Stock Exchange dullness and market value nervousness being that events in South Africa are damaging here.

On this subject are presented herewith views from representative Wall Street authorities:

Disturbance Reflected Here.

H. H. Hollister—England, of course, is the financial centre of the world, and anything that disturbs its finances is reflected elsewhere. The probabilities are that the South African war is going to be a long one, and England will doubtless draw gold from us later on. Fortunately, we can afford to give it to her.

If the events of Friday had happened a few years ago the effect on Wall Street would have been very serious. Fortunately, again for this country, we have got into the position where the effect is very moderate. From now on I do not believe Wall Street markets will be seriously disturbed by the vicissitudes of the English campaign. I am looking more to the general business situation of our own country, which is excellent. At the present moment the leaders representing important interests are engaged in getting together the strings and tying up the loose ends. Later on, regardless of the war situation, I believe that the conditions existing in the country will dominate the situation in Wall Street.

A Steadily Diminishing Force.

John H. Davis—Beginning at home, the influence of the war upon our own markets is a steadily diminishing force. The first effect was to cause the New York market to reflect the uneasiness and depression in London. To a certain extent this will continue, but we have readily absorbed all American securities that London wished or was forced to sell, our money market has worked into a condition of ease, our industries are stimulated rather than retarded, and we are prepared to trade and invest upon the conditions existing within our own borders, irrespective of the varying fortunes of the war. This position may be changed if there should be European complications and such a violent monetary stringency as was witnessed in September in London, Berlin, Frankfort, and Paris simultaneously. But I do not anticipate any such complications, either political or financial, and therefore think we can look forward with complacency, so far as our markets are concerned. This view is strengthened by the fact that the war will give increased demand for our commercial products and will therefore stimulate American industries. It will open new channels and markets for our goods, which we shall permanently hold. This is, perhaps, a selfish view, but it is only another illustration of the adage that "what is one man's loss is another's gain."

The ultimate outcome of this war will prove that it is of incalculable value to the future of the British Empire, and, therefore, to the permanence and strength of good government throughout the civilized world. In the first place, it is binding together the mother country and all of her colonies as no other event could have done. this experience following the history of our own late war with Spain, which eliminated sectionalism and united the North and South, East and West, in the face of a common duty and a common danger. The British Empire to-day is stronger in a common purpose for the integrity of her institutions and her system of enlightened, beneficial government by reason of the trials through which she is passing, and the benefits of this will extend to all time.

In the next place, this war is teaching Great Britain her weak points, and this is always good for a nation as well as an individual. Tremendously strong in naval power, England has neglected her army, and was strangely and notably deficient when this war began. Through a most severe experience she has disclosed the defects which must be remedied, the deficiencies which must be supplied. It is certain that the lesson will not be unheeded, and England will look back to the African war as the date from which her military strength was established and maintained. The spirit of patriotism is as strongly demonstrated there at the present time as it was two years ago in the United States. Our millionaires and laborers, as privates in the ranks, shared equal dangers and duties; so to-day the titled members of the highest families in Great Britain are fighting and dying alongside the commoners and the humblest recruits.

It is because we are so closely identified with England in trade, in language, and in methods that I attach special importance to these views of the effect of the war. What helps England helps us; her strength supplements our own; her progress means our greater progress. So, looking for no immediate disturbance of our values here, for reasons which I stated at first, and then to ultimate advancement of the joint interests of the two nations, I see no reason to look for detrimental effects of the African war upon American markets.

Uncertainty Provokes Distrust.

Jefferson Seligman—The immediate issues of war are always uncertain. Uncertainty is always provocative of distrust, and distrust always results in lower quotations for Stock Exchange securities. No one may doubt, however, the ultimate issue of the unfortunate war in South Africa. All wars must come to an end. The only uncertain factor in the problem is when. It is but natural that the market should follow the trend of events in the Transvaal. Thus far it has been a one-sided contest, and consequently a one-sided market. Nevertheless, while quotations do not go up, it is to be noted that they go but mildly down. This shows that the foundations of values are strong. Cheap money, enormous earnings of the railroads and other corporations, manufacturing plants running day and night and unable to keep pace with their orders, capital in all lines well employed, and, better still, labor well employed and well remunerated, and the percentage of business failure less than ever before known—surely the underlying strata upon which all prosperity in the last analysis must rest were never more secure. Our warm sympathies are with our kinsmen across the sea, as were theirs with us in our recent war. We cannot doubt the final issue. History repeats itself. Civilization in its onward march takes no step backward. The tide of war will turn, and when it does we may confidentially expect as substantial an advance in all securities of merit as that following the Spanish-American conflict.

The Wild Rush to Buy.

Alfred de Cordova—Had not the stock market been resting on a foundation of unshakable strength, born of business stability, prosperity, and sound and solid facts, the outcome would have been a sorry tale to chronicle and a hideous one to contemplate. Accumulations of three years' business prosperity intensified by speculative craze on the part of nearly every one in this country and of other countries, the speculative ball kept rolling almost perpetually, and as it merely went around gathered converts to its merry gyrations. Savings were drawn from banks, money that was hiding in the proverbial stocking found its way to the marts of speculation, to add to the craze and to make up the wild rush to "buy—buy—buy."

The natural sequence to such a condition: Prices for all securities went to an unnaturally high plane, and fictitious values were created, but as long as the music lasted the revelry was unchecked. But the old adage again asserted its correctness—those who dance must pay the piper. A halt to speculation was called by banks and trust companies refusing first to continue to loan money to the middle class of brokers with good standing. This created the first ripple of uncertainty, and as those securities were sold a lower range of prices had to be made. To save themselves from too much loss and too heavy shrinkages these securities had to be absorbed by the pools, promoters, and syndicates, already largely long of them. Then came the crash. It was a rich man's panic. Even the wealthiest and best names were asked by the banks and money lenders to lighten their loads and pay off some of their loans.

The result was that in the mad rush to sell, without any buyers, quotations went to panic prices, and at one time a very serious financial condition threatened the business situation, which was happily averted. Since then the atmosphere has cleared; money is easy, and all strained conditions, as to money for the present, have passed. The South African situation is made to play the important part in what little lifeless speculation now exists. Fluctuations swing up and down in a narrow range, with reports of English victory or defeat. To believe the misfortunes or successes of a nation so closely allied to us by ties of friendship and business relations would be folly. Still, there is a salve to the wounds of our friends' reverses in the benefit that must eventually accrue to us in any prolonged struggle.

Had not the speculative rank and file been badly damaged the market in the main would not loose from these influences, and we would have a great trading market, with swings both ways of the pendulum, but such is not the case; hence inertia and inactivity. The market is suffering now not from lack of merit or demerit, but from lack of buyers and sellers, a most important factor in every business. When this changes, or when it will, one man's guess is as good as another.

What the speculator must now content himself with is: Be prepared for the worst and hope for the best.

A Buller and Boer Market.

Henry Clews—Wall Street used to be influenced by bulls and bears in making the fluctuations of the Street. But now it is influenced for the time being by Buller and Boers, and, instead of saying, as formerly, that the market is a bull market, we have to say it is a Buller market, or, vice versa, a Boer market. Shortly, when the British get properly "in fighting time," we shall see the commencement of the end, which will remove the only cloud now hanging over the situation.

The country certainly is very prosperous and has a look of continuing so. There is no better evidence of this than the present phenomenal railroad earnings. The corn crop, which is the largest in this country's history, being over two billion bushels, has only just commenced to move. This, therefore, gives the railroads business enough in sight to admit of continued good earnings and continued big business for the balance of this year at least. The railroads of the country occupy a prouder high-trade position than ever before in the history of the Nation. They have passed through reorganization, fixed charges have been cut down to a 4 per cent. basis, and they are under better, more expert, and more honest management than ever before, with the search light of public opinion turned on them, which compels officials to be honest. There is, therefore, no reason why these securities should not have equal standing with investors to those in Great Britain.

It is true we are on the eve of a Presidential campaign, which generally is disturbing to business interests, but there is every reason why it should be less disturbing at this period than at any previous period. There is no better evidence of this than the recent visit of William Jennings Bryan to this city. If he had come on an ostrich's back there would have been a big turnout to see him, but they would have been curiosity-seekers—not voters. In that event he might have flattered himself that the reception was a warm one instead of finding a freeze-out. He certainly has asserted by his visit that things have changed slightly at this end. When he was here before the rag-tag and bobtail were with him 16 to 1 in numbers, whereas these same people, by the prosperous condition of the country, have since ceased to be of that grade, and in consequence have changed their debased ideas and now are 16 to 1 against him. For that reason his visit to us was a very brief one, and we ne'er shall see him more on a political mission. Mr. Bryan's attitude in continuing to advocate silver at 16 to 1 is, to say the least, audacious and an insult to American intelligence.

And inasmuch as we are growing more and more stable and prosperous here, the war's effects will begin less and less to be felt.

Market Will Cut Loose.

Daniel O'Dell—To me the market seems better. It goes up on good news and does not go down on bad. I think we will cut loose from the foreign market, and from this time on be less influenced by the course of events in South Africa. One thing is certain, and that is that many good things can be bought cheaply now.

DULLEST DAY IN MONTHS.

Yesterday was one of the dullest Saturdays on the Stock Exchange in months. Barely 90,000 shares were traded in, and of this total over one-third was in three stocks—Brooklyn Rapid Transit, American Sugar, and Third Avenue, transactions in each of which totalled about 11,500. Such figures, as compared with those of past days in the same three stocks, are so insignificant as to be almost remarkable. Such stocks, for instance, as New York Central, Delaware and Hudson, and Federal Steel preferred were not even dealt in during the day.

RUMORS ABOUT THIRD AVENUE.

Third Avenue Railroad stock was subject to a pronounced attack in the market yesterday, coincident with the reappearance of the rumor about a hitch in the negotiations for taking up the floating debt of the corporation. People identified with the road denounced this as a stock-jobbing report, and it met prompt denial from Kuhn, Loeb & Co., who head the syndicate which is to finance the debt.

But, although its guise was painfully like that which it wore on a previous occasion, it found credence enough with the speculatively minded to prove effectual. Considerable selling for forward delivery, and the steady offering down of the stock by brokers popularly supposed to be identified with interests which are financing the debt, led to the impression in some quarters that the stock was being depressed to get more advantageous terms in the new financial arrangements. There was no really substantial evidence, however, to show that the raid was anything more than an attack by operators who thought the time opportune to reap profits in this way.

The range of prices for the stock was from 108½ to 114, in dealings amounting to well over 11,000 shares, it closed at 110, a net decline of 4¾ points. The price on two or three occasions broke a point at a time.

Kuhn, Loeb & Co. have issued a private circular inviting some of their friends to enter the syndicate to take up the Third Avenue debt. The assumption by the syndicate of the task is dependent, however, on satisfactory results of the examination now being made of the company's books by expert accountants, acting on behalf of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. A representative of the firm said yesterday: "Our experts are still at work examining the financial and physical condition of the Third Avenue Road. It is not likely that they will complete their work before the latter part of next week. By that time we will have a definite idea of the company's affairs. We know nothing about the cause of the break in the stock. Certainly there is no hitch in the negotiations with which we are concerned."

NEWS OF THE EXCHANGES.

The coffee market was fairly active in yesterday's two hours of trading. Transactions aggregated 24,750 bags. Weakness was developed in coffee, in sympathy with weak foreign advices, and as a result of increased receipts in Brazilian ports. The receipts at Rio Janeiro amounted to 13,000 bags and those at Santos to 17,000 bags, a total of 30,000 bags, against 17,000 for Friday, 21,000 for Thursday, and 27,000 on Wednesday. Coffee opened 5 points off and closed barely steady, at a net decline of from 10 to 15 points.

Cotton was strong. The Cotton Exchange market opened 2 to 3 points up, advanced some 6 points, and, receding, closed with a net gain of 3 to 4 points, after dealings of perhaps 150,000 bales. Liverpool straddle buying and purchases by a prominent financial house, (which is said to have sold later in the day,) caused a large proportion of the demand for cotton. The receipts were 22,896 bales, about the same as they were a year previous. The estimates for to-morrow's receipts are high. Demand for spot cotton is steady to 1-16 higher in the South.

Wheat closed on the Produce Exchange at prices near the top, after a three-cent rise for the week. Opening trades were the lowest of the day, and prices soon stiffened in sympathy with higher cables and news of unfavorable weather in the West. French markets are strong. There was practically no export buying of wheat, and the market was not active. The corn market was featureless. The week has effected almost no change in it. Oats remain dull.

BROOKLYN RAPID TRANSIT.

The newly elected Board of Directors of Brooklyn Rapid Transit will meet some time this week for organization, probably Tuesday. It was learned yesterday that the re-election of Clinton L. Rossiter as President of the company and Col Williams as Secretary and Treasurer is assured. Henry H. Porter, who is largely identified with Federal Steel, and who is one of the new Directors of Brooklyn Rapid Transit, will be chosen to act in an important capacity, which will enable him to have an influence on the management of the corporation. He may be made Chairman of the Board of Directors.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Jan. 27.—Owing to the unfavorable war news, business on the Bourse opened with an all-round slump. Afterward a tendency to recover passed off, and the market closed dull. Government securities were practically unchanged. Rio Tintos were steadier and De Beers Mines declined. Kafir shares were agitated, on London selling. On the street after the closing of the Bourse the market was distinctly flat.

Three per cent. rentes, 100f 2½c for the account. Exchange on London, 25f 18c for checks.

Spanish 4s closed at 68.32½.

BERLIN, Jan. 27.—Prices were buoyant on the Borse to-day, which was induced by the ease and cheapness of money. Foreign securities were maintained. Iron shares were strong, in consequence of the order for 9,000 trucks for the Russian State Railways. Canadian Pacifics were higher and Americans quiet.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 49 pfenings for checks.

Discount rates: Short bills, 3¼ per cent.; three months' bills, 3⅝ per cent.

The Bank of Germany reduced the rate of discount to 5½.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 27.—Business opened dull on the Boerse to-day on the unfavorable advices from other Bourses, but improved later. American securities were weaker.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

In yesterday's market for outside securities the only stock that attracted much attention was New Amsterdam Gas. The rest of the market showed little change from the closing figures of the previous day, and the total transactions were very small. A little more firmness appeared, and some few stocks advanced substantially—in some cases without sales. Rumors affecting the market mostly had to do with the gas situation, but no actual news of importance came to hand. The market was even less active than on the previous days of the week, with the one exception of the trading in the New Amsterdam issues, but the day appeared somewhat more favorable on account of the steadier tone of the market.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS common was traded in to the extent of about 3,000 shares, an amount much in excess of any single day's trading in this issue for many weeks past. On these transactions the price advanced to 26⅝, and it closed at 26 bid, showing a net gain of 1½ points. The preferred stock got as high as 49 and ended the day at 48½ bid, a net advance of 2 points. Practically no change occurred in the price of the bonds, which were traded in in small amount around 93. Buying of the stock was of the same character as that which showed on the previous day, and it was still attributed to the same interests. Friends of the stock insist that developments of consequence are near at hand, and that an important change in the gas situation may be looked for within a month or even a week. On the other hand, persons seemingly as well informed say that the question stands as it did weeks ago. That Consolidated Gas interests are making any effort to buy a controlling interest in New Amsterdam Gas is by no means generally credited, and in some quarters the explanation offered for the strength which the New Amsterdam Gas issues have shown for the past two days is that is due to manipulative efforts to advance the price of these stocks. At all events, nothing of a very definite character has yet been made public pointing to an agreement between the Consolidated and the New Amsterdam Companies.

STANDARD OIL advanced 2 points further, to 520, and closed at 518 bid, showing a net gain of 1 point. Confident predictions of much higher prices for the stock are made, but thus far it has not appeared what the immediate reason for the advance is. It is generally believed that the earnings of the company are beyond precedent and that the coming year will see a large increase in the amount of extra dividends. This belief is the reason for the buying of the stock, so far as it is being bought by persons not in a position to be closely informed as to the company's condition, but insiders continue to be the large buyers of the stock.

RUBBER GOODS was strong. It advanced a full point in the common stock and half a point in the preferred. The former ended the day at 20½ bid, and the preferred stock closed at 80 bid, with little stock offered. The stocks were favorably affected by the announcement that an agreement in regard to the Tillinghast patents had been reached between the owners of those patents and the Diamond and Goodyear Companies. It is thought that the agreement will lead to a considerable increase in the earnings of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, which owns a three-quarter interest in the Tillinghast patents.

ST. LOUIS subscriptions were in good demand and enjoyed a net gain of 1 point on light transactions.

ELECTRIC VEHICLE common advanced 2 points, to 42, and the preferred stock made a net gain of 3 points, closing at 55 bid.

Closing quotations were as follows:

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 27.—The Boston market was even duller than Wall Street, but, on the whole, firmer, although the close was irregular. What feature there was in the trading was to be found in the interesting gossip regarding Bay State Gas. This long-idle outsider was quoted to-day at 95c bid, $1.05 asked. Just what is back of the trading, if indeed anything, has not as yet transpired. Still there appears to be a very confident feeling abroad, and it is said to be good for at least 5 points.

For strength attention was directed principally to Old Dominion, Chicago Junction, Erie Telephone, Bell Telephone, Pullman, United States Oil, and Arcadian. One-quarter of 1 per cent was bid to call 3,000 shares of United States Mining at 10 for thirty days. There was a sale of 50 shares of the stock to-day in the market at 7⅞, the first for many days.

At the local Clearing House 4 per cent. was again the nominal rate between the banks, but the business done was extremely small. On call money is in large supply to the best borrowers at 4 per cent. Four to six months' money is easily obtainable at 4 per cent on the strongest grade of collateral. This is also the rate for twelve months. Business in mercantile paper is slow, because of the scarcity of offerings. The best names are quoted at 4@4½ per cent.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 27.—Except for the recovery in two stocks, United Gas Improvement and Electric Storage Battery, the market here was dead. In both of the issues named the advance reflected a scarcity of stock rather than any activity in demand. The minor steel stocks were under the ban most of the day. New Haven falling to a new low record, and Susquehanna, on light offerings, declined ¼, to 4. Not a sale of Union Traction was made. This is the first instance of this on record.

The specialties were well held with American Asphalt the feature. That stock rose ⅛, and Wes'ern New York maintained its strength of yesterday. No change was effected in Philadelphia Electric, but Tidewater yielded a point, to 14½. There was a better commission house business, though orders were small.

England at War.

'Tis past; the hour of parting's o'er,
The troopship's on the main,
And some have looked on England's shore
That ne'er shall look again:
The last adieus come faint and low,
Borne on the wintry wind—
God's mercy on the men that go,
And those they leave behind!

For them, the strife—for us, the fears
That grow with hope's delay,
The daily dread, the nightly tears
For loved ones far away:
Yet O though loss be hard to bear,
And sense of threatening harm,
Let not the thought of private care
Unnerve a nation's arm!

For sternly must the soldier fight
Whose country stakes her all:
Now is the day when England's might
Must conquer, or must fall:
Though Valor unrewarded die
Nor every field be won,
We'll bate no jot of courage high
Before our task be done.

Souls of our best! whose bodies fill
Their unforgotten grave
By Magersfontein's murderous hill
Or dark Tugela's wave,
Nobly ye strove, ye gallant dead,
For England's honor slain!
'Tis ours to prove the blood ye shed
Has not been shed in vain!
—A. D. GODLEY in The Spectator.

A Flash of Lightning, Natal.

Lady Broome in The Cornhill Magazine.

A very few days after my arrival at Maritzburg, at the end of 1875, I was standing one afternoon in the shade of my little house on a hill, anxiously watching the picturesque arrival of an ox wagon laden with my boxes. It was in the very early Summer, and the exigencies of settling in left me no time to worry about the thunderstorms, of which, of course, I had often heard. A more serene and brilliant afternoon could not be imagined, and it was not even hot—at all events, out of the sun. My two small boys, as usual, trotted after me like dogs, and clamored to assist at the arrival of the wagon; so I lifted the little one up in my arms and stood there, with the elder boy clinging to my skirts. Suddenly, out of the blue unclouded sky, out of the blaze of golden sunshine, came a flash and a crash which seemed as if it must be the crack of doom. No words at my command can give any idea of the intolerable blinding glare of the light which seemed to wrap us round, or of the rending sound, as if the universe were being torn asunder.

I suppose I flung myself on the ground, because I was crouching there, holding the little boys beneath me with some sort of protective instinct, when in a second or two of time it had all passed, for I heard only a short and distant rumble. I do not believe the sun had ceased shining for an instant, though its light had seemed to be extinguished by that blaze of fire. Never can I forget my amazement, an amazement which even preceded my deep thankfulness at finding we were absolutely unhurt, the fearless little boys only inquiring, "What was that, Mummy?" There had been no time for their rosy cheeks even to pale. I wonder what color I was? I looked at the little stone house with astonishment to find it still there, for I had expected to see nothing but a heap of ruins. Nay, it seemed miraculous that the hills all around should still be standing.

Booming a Weekly.

From "The Bread Line," by Albert Bigelow Paine, in Lippincott's.

"Ours will be religious in tone, too, and a home paper besides. It will go to every household that Frisby's would reach, and to thousands besides who are not of any particular denomination. We also will offer Bibles, but we will offer other things, too. We will offer watches and cameras and premiums for boys and girls; dolls, fishing tackle, and guns—"

"I should think," interrupted Van Dorn dryly, "that with a gun and a Bible we might gather in the most of them."

"Now you're talking sense!" said Barrifield excitedly. "We'll get all of them. We'll capture the whole country. Frisby had a quarter of a million circulation in six months! We'll have half a million circulation in three months! Mark my words—half a million in three months!"

"But the price, Barry! A dollar a year and a premium." Perner was still unsatisfied. "How are we going to do it?"

Barrifield regarded him in a superior way. "The paper itself," he said, "will cost us less than 50 cents a year, even figuring on a basis of only a quarter of a million circulation. Most of the premiums can now be bought for less than the other fifty. Those that can't we'll give just the same, only we'll add on the difference in the form of postage and packing. Nobody ever thinks of objecting to a slight additional charge for postage and packing."

A Diplomat's Pug.

From Chambers's Journal.

One almost forgets how long ago it is since the muzzling order was first issued, but shortly after the inception of that order a housemaid "attached" to a foreign legation took a pug dog, also "attached" to the same legation, out for a walk. She was stopped by a Constable, who asked her why the dog was not wearing a muzzle. The housemaid replied that the dog did not possess a muzzle, because it was a diplomatic dog. The Constable responded that the dog was a pug, and that he was not a fool. The Constable took the name and address of the housemaid. A few days later a summons arrived at the legation. The housemaid did not present herself at the court, and the Magistrate imposed a fine on her. At last the Foreign Minister went to the Marquis of Salisbury about the matter. The result was that all the officials connected with the case were reprimanded, and a "note" was addressed from Lord Salisbury to all the legations in London, in which note Lord Salisbury said he had the honor to call attention to a certain order entitled the "muzzling order," by which it was enacted that all dogs, when taken into public places, should wear a muzzle over the head.

Somali Life.

From "Sport in Somaliland." By Count Potocki.

The camel yields them milk—frequently the only food of the natives—gives them meat and hides, facilitates transport from one place to another, and forms the means of exchange, which at any moment it is possible to barter for other articles, thus taking the place of money. The Somalis also accommodate their existence to the wants of the camels; they go with the herd wherever pasture is best, or where rain has recently fallen; and on this account one may frequently not find the trace of a village where yesterday a place was full of life and people. The camels, in fact, carry away the village on their backs miles distant. * * * Such are the chief events in the life of a Somali. Everything is governed according to some ancient unwritten law, not contained in any codex, not dictated by any tribunal, but still sacredly observed and carried out for centuries throughout the whole region inhabited by the Somalis.

Lord Kelvin.

From Good Words.

Lord Kelvin's scientific discoveries do not lend themselves easily to popular description His work has had many sides. To perhaps the majority of pepole he is known as an inventor whose instruments are the standards used in all exact electrical measurements, whether in the laboratory or in the workshop, whose compass and sounding machine, by freeing the course of the mariner from error due to the magnetism of the ship, and making his approach to the coast in thick weather easily ascertainable, has saved thousands of lives, and robbed ocean navigation to a great extent of its perils and delays. By his telegraph instruments, founded on a perception of the conditions of successful submarine telegraphy, he first made cable signaling commercially possible, and played a great part in the practical working out of the immense enterprise initiated forty years ago by the first Atlantic cable, and now represented by the network of cables connecting all the countries of the world in which there are civilized settlements.

These are great achievements, but the writer of this article once at a public luncheon in a large town in South Wales met a gentleman who seemed to know nothing of them, but recognized Lord Kelvin's name as that of the inventor of a water-tap. The tap in question is useful and efficient, and many men have achieved great fortune and bulked much in the public estimation, whose real services to the arts represented less—an improved paper-fastener or a collar button perhaps; but this conception of Lord Kelvin's eminence as an inventor shows how little many men of affairs may know of the services which have been rendered to the country by its greatest citizens.

The Fighting Wapiti.

From "Game and Life in the Far West," by Baillie-Grohman.

The combatants had moved about the meadows, much as expert boxers would, though after a quarter of an hour's fighting weight had told its tale, and the smaller stag had to retreat more frequently than ever, and the adversaries were fast approaching the edge of the forest at the latter's back. Here a last stand was made by the defeated one, and a ten minutes' tussle ended by bringing both on to their knees; and here, too, the repulsed one received his death wound, though I failed to see exactly how it was inflicted, the movements being so rapid and the light too indistinct. It appeared to me, however, that the weaker stag, on regaining his feet first, made a dash at his foe, but from some cause or other his lunge missed its aim, and, while the impeteus carried him past his still kneeling adversary, his whole flank was exposed to the thrust of the latter's horns. The next second he was down, too, but this time with a heavy thud stretched out at full length, just out of reach of the kneeling victor's horns, who, too exhausted to rise, kept butting at the body which he could not reach. A minute later they were both up again, but the battle was decided, and the wounded hart fled into the forest, where I found him the next morning dead, with a ghastly slash 2 feet in length, that had ripped open his side and penetrated to his vitals.

To Fly in Your Dreams.

From Longman's.

There is a peculiarity about the flying dream that seems to be constant. Of all those whom I asked about the matter, and who are conscious of the flying dream at all, not one has ever known himself to make any high flights in his dreams. One always flies low, with a skimming manner, slightly but only slightly above the heads of pedestrians. And one's critical attitude in a dream toward one's own performance is always interesting to note, both in regard to this particular class of dream and even more toward one of the other classes. It is an attitude that is well brought out in "Alice in Wonderland," where Alice is made to exclaim or to think while she is falling, "How brave they will all think it of me at home not to mind a great fall like this!"

English and Dutch Migration.

From "The Dutch and Quaker Colonies in America," by John Fiske.

The migration to New England was a migration of communities already organized in England; the parish, crossing the ocean, became the township, and, in its relation to the powers above it, assumed a shape essentially similar to that which it had maintained in the old country. The most fundamental fact in the case was that government by the primary assembly had not lost its vitality in rural England. What did not cross the ocean at that time, but was at a later period made the subject of conscious imitation, was the urban form of representative government, with the Mayor at its head. Now the Dutch migration to New Netherland was not a migration of churches but of individuals. It brought with it no pre-existing organization. The resulting community was for a long time a fortuitous aggregation of traders, more at home on a ship's deck than in the farmyard, and without that abiding interest in creating and sustaining homes which an agricultural community feels.

This shifting mercantile community was governed by a commercial company, whose prime interest in it was to make large dividends for its stockholders. The Director General was the salaried servant of the company, and felt responsible to the company rather than to the people whose affairs he administered.

The First Coaches in London.

The Bishop of London in The Cornhill Magazine.

Riding was the only alternative to walking at the beginning of Elizabeth's reign, and a lady never rode without six or seven serving men to carry attire suitable to all contingencies, and the means to repair a toilet which might suffer on the journey. To diminish this cost coaches came into use. They were introduced in 1564 by a Dutch coachman of the Queen; but we are told "a coach was a strange monster in those days, and the sight of it put both man and horse into amazement; some said it was a great crabshell brought out of China, and some imagined it to be one of the pagan temples in which the cannibals worshipped the devil." But at length these doubts were cleared and coachmaking became a substantial trade. So rapid was the increase of coaches that in 1601 an act of Parliament was passed "to restrain the excessive and superfluous use of coaches within this realm." In spite of this innovation, no method could be devised which made locomotion pleasant through streets which were alternately torrents of dirt finding their way to the Fleet ditch, and thick deposits of black mud, which furnished a ready weapon to any one who wished to express disapprobation. It is difficult for us to picture London without either cabs or omnibuses.

A Question of Clocks.

From "The Lewis Carroll Picture Book."

"Which is the best, a clock that is right only once a year, or a clock that is right twice every day? 'The latter,' you reply, 'unquestionably.' Very good, reader, now attend. I have two clocks; one doesn't go at all, and the other loses a minute a day; which would you prefer? 'The losing one,' you answer, 'without a doubt.' Now observe: the one which loses a minute a day has to lose twelve hours, or 720 minutes, before it is right again; consequently it is only right once in two years, whereas the other is evidently right as often as the time it points to comes round, which happens twice a day. So you've contradicted yourself once. 'Ah, but,' you say, 'what's the use of its being right twice a day, if I can't tell when the time comes?' Why, suppose the clock points to 8 o'clock, don't you see that the clock is right at 8 o'clock? Consequently when 8 o'clock comes your clock is right. 'Yes, I see that,' you reply. Very good, then you've contradicted yourself twice; now get out of the difficulty as you can, and don't contradict yourself again if you can help it."

How Long?

Out of the south is the chill wind blowing,
Straight from the white world of ice and snow;
And over the wild sea my thoughts are going
To a far country where roses glow.
For, dear, unto thee, when the clouds are flying
Like war-torn banners the skies along,
In mournful measure my heart is crying—
"Oh, my beloved! How long? how long?"

Low overhead are the dark mists trailing,
And hiding the mountains from longing eyes;
And, far beyond them, the ships are sailing
To thy fair home-land—Love's paradise!
But here the skylark has ceased his singing,
And dropped to his nest with a broken song,
And ever to thee is my wild cry winging—
"Love of my heart! How long? how long?"

A Question of Artillery.

From The Contemporary Review.

Considerable comment has been made on the alleged inability of English artillery to deal effectively with the Boer guns. Our field pieces are said to be outranged, to be of inferior metal, and altogether to be outclassed by the weapons of our opponents. A little calm consideration, however, may serve to allay the discontent which has arisen on these points. The guns we have had in the field have been twelve-pounders and so-called fifteen—really fourteen—pounders; for the howitzer batteries, firing a fifty-pound shell with a bursting charge of nearly ten pounds of lyddite, have only been used by Methuen. Against these have been brought, not in large number, forty-five-pound howitzers and a few guns firing a shell of about 100 pounds, besides ordinary field guns firing a fourteen-pound shell. Why have we not had similar weapons? As a fact, we have had the long-range naval twelve-pounder of twelve hundred weight and the 4.7-inch gun of two tons—thanks to naval assistance. But both we and the Boers have only been able to employ the heaviest guns we have because the fighting has been stationary. "Long Tom" was not in use at Elandslaagte, because he could not be manoeuvred in the field. Had the progress of the war been swifter, we should not have found our enemies using anything heavier than their twelve centimeter howitzers—somewhat inferior weapons to our own five-inch. No doubt it was unwise not to send more howitzer batteries into the field at first, because, considering Boer tactics and the nature of the ground on which the fighting was to take place, it was certain that field guns firing only shrapnel were not the best of weapons to form practically the whole armament. So far the authorities are to blame. But in face of the good service the guns have done in keeping down the Boer rifle fire and silencing their guns by killing their gunners, it is idle to talk of our artillery as if it were useless.

A newspaper correspondent wires that a Boer gun is firing shells at us from a range of 8,000 yards, and that our field guns cannot reply. No more could those of any other power with any good effect. But he does not tell us that this 8,000 yards fire has produced any great result, and he does not state—probably because he does not know—that the gun in question has only been dragged into position by a painfully long process, and that this was only done because of our own lack of mobility, owing to the absence of a proper number of mounted men and possibly to the absence of proper transport, has rendered our movements so slow. I don't say our field guns are perfect. I have always preached the desirability of more powerful weapons, considering the increase in value of modern rifle fire. Although events in South Africa have seemed to justify my views. I am free to admit that the tendency in Europe has been to diminish the shell weight fired from field guns, with a view to increased mobility. Rapidity of motion has always been the characteristic of our artillery. The well-known story of the Horse Artilleryman who said he could take his battery anywhere if it were not for the beastly guns, is perhaps an exaggeration. But one thing is certain, that guns to be of use must be mobile.

A Song.

The rose-root takes earth's kisses for its meat;
The rose-leaf makes its blush from the sun's heat;
The rose-scent wakes—who knows from what thing sweet?
Who knows
The secret of the perfume of the rose?

A rose ungathered is but a rose;
Pluck it, lover, don't mind a thorn!
Tuck it away in your bosom-clothes
And drink its beauty from night to morn.

Dig, gardener, deep, till the Earth-lips cling tight.
Prune, gardener! keep those blushes to the light.
Then, gardener, sleep. He brings the scent by night.
Who knows
The secret of the perfume of the rose?

Pale, pale are the rose lips, sweet!
Red is the heart of the rose,
But red are the lips mine meet,
And your heart white as the snows.
—FLORA ANNIE STEEL in The New Lippincott.

The Hospital Orderly.

From The Cornhill Magazine.

The position of hospital orderly, though not such an easy one as that of the patient, is also not to be despised. The hours off duty are many, and the work by no means hard. The orderly is supposed to undergo a course of training; one of his duties is to write accurate reports. These begin in a crude and elementary form. A night report on a serious case which demanded hourly attention ran thus: "Patient were of no trubbel." (As an amendment to this report, "Nurse and patient slept well" was suggested.)

Another on an unpopular Sergeant was brief: "Jackson is a confounded newsance." More advanced specimens are these: "Saunders 'ad is nurrishment regular, he also 'ad bleeding from the nose." "O'Flanagan were very restless and would not sleep without I sot beside 'im and took milk reglar." But why wonder at these efforts of ignorant orderlies, when medical students have been known to write notes thus: "The house surgeon dressed the wound looking red and angry;" or, "Patient complains of severe headache, but has no children."

Disraeli's Wife.

From Blackwood.

Lady Beaconsfield was an enthusiastic sympathizer with her husband in all his interests, and was devoted to him. When in the Commons he was constantly at work and gave himself little rest. He used to dine late at night, and very sparingly, always with a bottle of Beaune. Once, referring to this hasty dinner and assiduous attendance, I said to Lady Beaconsfield that I could not understand how he kept going. "Ah, but," she answered, "I always have supper for him when he comes home, and lights, lights, plenty of lights—Dizzy always likes lights, and then he tells me everything that has happened in the house, and then I clap him off to bed."

Why We Sit on Tables.

From The Criterion.

About ten million women are exasperated every day by men sitting on tables. So far as I am aware, women do not pay for the furniture, and it is none of their business how it is used. The habit of men sitting on tables has led to the invention of the cushioned billiard table and will no doubt ultimately result in other clever notions. At one time it was supposed that men chose to sit on tables because they could get exercise without exertion by swinging their own legs and by kicking the legs of the table. The scientific fact is that tables are more magnetic than chairs. If three men walk into a room where there is no woman, two of them will make for the table naturally. The third one will try two or three chairs and finally give up in despair and join the others. The source of this magnetism is the friction that women create by polishing tables so frequently. Of course, women say that they only polish tables because men sit on them and spoil them, but this is illogical and feminine. No really clever men sit on chairs. They use their chairs for keeping their papers and things on, also their feet.

Chairs are notoriously immoral. You will notice that a well-bred man, when he finds himself losing his temper, invariably gets up from his chair and makes a direct line for the nearest table. This enables him to keep his temper and to argue reasonably.

The English Intelligence Department.

Major Arthur Griffiths in The Fortnightly Review.

There is a general impression that the formidable armed strength of the Boers, which has lately made itself so unmistakably evident, was not fully known to our authorities. But this is not quite the case. Our Military Intelligence Department may not have been fully informed on all points, and more particularly as to the presence in the Transvaal ranks of leaders of such undoubted military skill, but the facts as to numbers, weapons, war material, were all pretty accurately tabulated and at the disposal of our authorities. That such good use would be made of their means may not have been exactly foreseen, and this was what Lord Wolseley no doubt intended to convey when speaking on a late occasion as to our having underrated the Boer power until taught better by actual collision. But the military side of the War Office—and it cannot be stated too emphatically that there are two "sides" there, one with expert knowledge subordinate to a second with no mission seemingly but to hamper and impede military administration—the military chiefs were so fully alive to the danger that threatened British South Africa in its then defenseless state that as far back as last July the Government was urged with much insistence to dispatch an army corps to the Cape. We have since been told that such a step would only have hastened the Boer ultimatum; that being on the spot they could still have concentrated their forces to invade British territory before we could send out reinforcements. The answer to this is that in July the Boers could not have mastered, there was no grass, and the season was unfavorable to military operations.

The Sailor in a Land Fight.

From The Spectator.

Wherever and whenever Jack has been permitted to join in the work of the army he has made his mark so deeply that he has come to be looked upon as indispensable, invincible. His effervescent humor never seems to desert him, as the following anecdote, told the writer recently, fairly well illustrates: It was at Gingihlovo, and the Naval Brigade was face to face with an apparently overwhelming force of Zulus, numbers of whom were armed with rifles. The sailors were reserving their fire, only sending an occasional volley when a favorable opportunity presented itself. Forth from the Zulu host stepped a warrior laden with an ancient firearm, which he calmly mounted upon a tripod in the open, while the sailors looked on admiring his pluck, but wondering much what he was proposing to do. At last one jovial tar suggested that their photographs were going to be taken, and, by common consent, no shots were sent at the supposed photographer. Having loaded his piece with great deliberation, the Zulu primed it, sighted, and, leaning hard against its breech, he fired. The recoil—for the thing was much overloaded—knocked him head over heels backward, while a great roar of laughter went up from the delighted sailors. He sat up looking hurt and dazed, and then, the amusement over, he, along with a suddenly charging impi of his countrymen, was annihilated by a volley from the steadily aimed pieces of the little cheerful band of bluejackets.

The Trouble Over the Umbrella.

From The Cornhill Magazine.

"Old Mike and his wife lived in a little cabin on the mountain, one of a type which is happily becoming every day more rare. The walls were of mud, and the floor of the same useful material, with a gutter running down the middle to divide the family apartment from that of the cow and ass, for Mike did not rise to the dignity of a 'harse baste.' To this mansion came his reverence one cold showery morning in March, to hold a station. His umbrella was wet and dripping, so, being a careful man, he placed it open in the space vacated by the animals, who were grazing outside. After the usual devotions, when the congregation had dispersed, he went for a stroll while Moira prepared his breakfast, for to entertain his reverence afterward is the crowning honor of a station. He had not gone far when a heavy shower obliged him to take shelter under a tree, and send a little gossoon running back for his umbrella. 'His riverence is afther sinding me to bring him his ombrell,' said the boy, bursting into the cabin. 'The saints preserve us! said Mike. 'Maybe it's the thing he left there beyant in the corner,' and seizing the umbrella he tried to pass it through the door, but the entrance was low and narrow and the umbrella large and wide.

"Without a moment's hesitation he caught up a spade and began shoveling down the wall at either side of the door. 'Man alive!' said the priest, appearing on the scene, 'whatever are ye at?' 'Shure, its makin' way I am for yer riverence's ombrell,' said old Mike; 'divil a bit of it 'ill go through the door at all, at all.' 'Ah, nonsense, man,' said his reverence, laughing, and stepping inside he took the umbrella out of Moira's hand and closed it before them. Old Mike stared at it aghast. Then he turned to his wife. 'Glory be to God, Moira,' he said; 'is there anything beyant the power of the priest?'"

Dutch Streets.

From The Gentleman's Magazine.

Commend us to the ever-tranquil Dutch streets with their mellow antique houses. These mostly follow circles, as is to be expected in a fortified place. But the typical Dutch street, found everywhere, is the line of houses by the canal, a range of old trees in front, shading the Indian red brick behind, with its bright white window sashes, as bright as much-polished brass. Nothing is more suggestive of tranquil repose and old fashion. They stretch along the broad canal before them, where bridges cross and barges lie together alongside. Even in very populous capitals we come in the suburbs on some delightful, retired bits of canal, leaving much the same effect as does Church Row at Hampstead. Old-fashioned well-to-do folk live here in retirement. There is one such at the entrance of The Hague on the Scheveningen side, where the charming woods begin; anything more old-world and solemnly attractive cannot be imagined. We might well fancy ourselves back to the days of Sir William Temple and of William of Orange, who may have strolled along these banks.

The Mormons Still Polygamous.

R. L. Hartt in The Atlantic.

With the survival or rehabilitation of plural marriages contracted before the manifesto we have been altogether too lenient. Mormons say: "Sir, suppose that for fifteen years you have had two wives; suppose you tenderly loved them both, and then suppose that Congress should compel you to relinquish one of them. Do you think you would keep the law?" What puling sentimentality! These Mormons took their plural wives when polygamy was a crime; they perjured themselves, one and all, when they promised to give them up; and now they stand defiant. A thousand polygamous children have been born in Utah since Statehood. The Church smugly grins and approves. Naturally, for its leaders rank chief among the offenders. Mr. C. M. Owen, who is traversing the State to expose polygamists, telegraphed his paper a dispatch which concluded with this interesting summary: Of the whole fifteen members of the First President and Twelve Apostles, who pledged their faith and honor for the future compliance with the law by the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, eleven have been actually guilty of the transgression of the law; one is undoubtedly morally so; and three, two of whom are exceedingly old and feeble men, have complied with the pledge given to the people of the United States through their President."

The Open Heart.

Would you understand
The language with no word,
The speech of brook and bird,
Of waves along the sand?

Would you make your own
The meaning of the leaves,
The song the silence weaves
Where little winds made moan?

Would you know how sweet
The falling of the rill,
The calling on the hill—
All tunes the days repeat?

Neither aims nor art,
No toil, can help you hear;
The secret of the ear
Is in the open heart.
—JOHN VANCE CHENEY in The Century.

Napier at the Battle of Meeanee.

From a Letter of Sir Charles Napier's.

When in the fight I held my life as gone; for as to escaping, all idea of that vanished when I saw the Twenty-second giving way and was obliged to ride between the fires of two lines not twenty yards apart. I expected death as much from our men as the enemy, and I was much singed by our fire; my whiskers twice or thrice so, and my face peppered by fellows who in their fear fired high over all heads but mine, and nearly scattered my brains. In agony I rode, holding my reins with a broken hand (he had sprained it a few days before) and quite unequal to a single combat, had a Beloochee picked me out, as one was about to do when Marston slew him.

Rather Cold-Blooded.

From "How Soldiers Fight." By F. Norreys Connell.

Of the tactics of infantry there is no end, but there are some simple rules for the individual foot soldier to remember when lost in the chaos of battle. If you cannot bayonet your enemy, shoot him; if he goes away, aim at the base of his spine. But do not let your attention be distracted from business by the consideration that other people are making a mark of you. It is your duty to kill the highest possible number of those opposed to you, not to save your own skin.

Thackeray's Taverns.

From Blackwood.

When Harry Warrington comes to London he puts up at the Bedford and dines with Mr. Draper at the Cock. That establishment, however, must have been conducted on somewhat different principles in George II.'s reign from those which governed it in the days of Queen Victoria, for Mr. Draper had ordered what he called "an elegant collation there" beforehand, a thing unknown at the Cock when the plump head waiter held sway. In "Vanity Fair," Dobbin and George Osborne dine at Slaughter's, in St. Martin's Lane, a house which seems in Colman's time to have been much used by Frenchmen. There he and Mr. Chopper, Osborne's head clerk, and the two ensigns, Spooner and Stubble, have "a famous dinner" together, before the officers depart on the Waterloo campaign.

When Dobbin revisits the house after ten years in India, John, the old waiter, receives him as if he had only left the day before, and supposes he'll have a roast fowl for his dinner. These faithful old waiters at these old taverns regarded regular customers as friends, and practiced much the same familiarity with them as the old-fashioned man servant used with his master's family in which he had lived perhaps half a century and for whom he would have died. In "Pendennis" we have Dick's and the Albion. Of Dick's Thackeray seems to write with special interest, as if it had been a favorite resort of his own in early days.

Schoenbein and Guncotton.

From "The Letters of Faraday and Schoenbein."

On March 18, 1846, Schönbein wrote to Faraday:

"I am enabled to prepare in any quantity a matter which, next to gunpowder, must be regarded as the most combustible substance known. So inflammable is this matter that, on being brought in contact with the slightest spark, it will instantly be set on fire, leaving hardly any trace of ashes, and if the combustion be caused within closed vessels a violent explosion takes place. * * * What shall I do with that matter? Shall I offer it to your Government?"

Then in a letter written five days later he sends this postscript:

"I open the letter to tell you that I have just now made some preliminary experiments about the explosive powder of my prepared cotton, and found that it is rather considerable. A common soldier's gun, charged with the eighth part of an ounce only, caused a pretty strong explosion."

Having perfected his remarkable discovery he visited England in August with the view of securing patent rights, and he then writes to Faraday as follows:

"The affair which has brought me over to England refers to my explosive cotton, which I have so much improved that it has all the appearance of becoming a dangerous rival to gunpowder. As to its explosive powers, 'guncotton,' as I call it, is very superior to powder; in given cases one part of it does the work of four parts of gunpowder, and under the most unfavorable circumstances the force of guncotton is as 2 to 1 to that of gunpowder. In the course of the last two months I have made many experiments with cannons, mortars, rifles, &c., and obtained results which I am allowed to call highly satisfactory. The same may be said with regard to blasting rocks."

The Mocker.

One there came to my casement shouting,
Loudly lilting a norland stave,
Merrily fleering and madly flouting,
Making a mock o'er the Summer's grave.

"What," I said, "shall some riant fellow
Gird at her whom I held most dear,
Some cup-companion grown over-mellow
Scoff at the dead in my very ear?"

Swiftly then to the casement faring,
While still the riotous mirth upwelled,
Back I turned with a mute despairing
From one who gleamed with the snows of eld—

Winter the willful, the wild intriguer,
Winter who blighted my fair one's breath,
Winter the wary, the world-old leaguer
With him who sits on the throne of Death.

And now while I brood 'neath the fire-lit rafter,
And mourn for her whom I might not save,
Nightly he, with his boisterous laughter,
Makes his mock o'er the Summer's grave.

New Crimes and Penalties.

From The Forum.

The theft of a lamp is larceny; it may be a Roman lamp or a Greek lamp, an oil lamp or an electric lamp. Whether it constitutes grand larceny or petit larceny will in certain States of the Union depend, not upon its age or newness, but upon its market value. On the other hand, there are a great number of modern crimes which could not have been committed in ancient days because the instruments for their perpetration did not exist. They are the outcome of modern civilization and they require new legislation.

The tapping of a telegraph wire is a modern form of highway robbery. In the old days the method was to waylay the courier on the road and to rob him of his purse or of his message. The formula of the modern highwayman is not "Stand and deliver," but simply "Deliver!" And he may get a message from the lightning courier which may be worth more to him than a well-filled purse. But there is nothing to be gained by indiscriminate tapping. It is some special message or information that the thief is looking for, possibly for its effect on the stock market or on other business ventures; but the use of cipher codes renders the tapping of telegraph wires of little avail even in time of war, unless the code as well as the message has been stolen. For the tapping of power or light lines the modern highwayman comes in out of the rain. He can do his business better indoors by attacking the electric meter, confusing its calculations, and thus getting more current than he pays for. Such at least seems to be the implication of recent statutes.

The Lightship.

When boats come home across the bar,
And Winter's sunlight dies afar;
When green and purple dusk creeps down
And hides the harbor and the town;
Each night far out to sea a beam
Of pale, wan light sends forth its gleam
Across the peaceful, darkening tides,
And marks the lightship where she rides.

When tempest-tossed, the ships slip by
The foam-hid headland, and the sky
Is torn with wrack of scudding cloud,
And winds of Winter cry aloud:
Lo, through the roar of crashing wave,
Above the tempest's moan and rave,
A voice comes o'er the troubled tides,
And marks where yet the lightship rides!
—RICHARD STILLMAN POWELL in The Criterion.

Some Epitaphs.

From The Gentleman's Magazine.

At length, my friends, the feast of life is o'er,
I've eat sufficient, and I'll drink no more;
My night is come, I've spent a jovial day.
'Tis time to part, but oh, what is to pay?

In Wolverhampton Church, ob. 1690:

Here lie the bones
Of Joseph Jones,
Who eat whilst he was able;
But once o'er fed,
He dropt down dead,
And fell beneath the table.
When from the tomb,
To meet his doom,
He rises amidst sinners:
Since he must dwell
In Heav'n or Hell,
Take him—which gives best dinners!

Here lies Johnny Cole,
Who died, on my soul,
After eating a plentiful dinner;
While chewing his crust,
He was turned into dust,
With his crimes undigested—poor sinner.

Mr. Chamberlain as a Sunday School Teacher.

From The Sunday Strand.

In his Sunday-school days Mr. Chamberlain wore an eyeglass, but no orchid. He always kept on his hat and overcoat, and carried his umbrella, while teaching. He was fond of walking about the room as he taught; and when, as sometimes happened, one of the tired factory lads in his class showed unmistakable signs of drowsiness, the teacher would point with his umbrella to the sleepy boy and say, "Good night, Jones! I have no objection to your going to sleep, only please don't snore."

On one occasion a scholar was reading about the battle of Bunker's Hill, and dropped the "h" in the word "Hill," pronouncing it "ill." It was necessary, of course, to correct the blunderer. Mr. Chamberlain convulsed the class with laughter by putting his glass to his eye and saying, "Poor old Bunker! What's the matter with him?"

He was questioning the class, and, our answers not satisfying him, he rose from his chair, and, surveying us through his eyeglass, observed, "Well! you are, without exception, the most ignorant set of fellows I ever came across."

The Religious Sentiment in Naples.

From the Gentleman's Magazine.

Volumes might be written about the religious sentiment and the superstition of the Neapolitans. I will restrict myself here to a few remarks. Among the poor or criminal classes in Naples it would be impossible to find an atheist or materialist. The worst subjects are often the most devout, and Camorrists are generally found wearing a number of amulets and religious symbols. Ignorance and the influence of the priests are the chief sources of superstition. In the lower middle class the father-confessor has often such an ascendency that in many families nothing is done without his advice and approbation. These priests harness the members of the family to the ecclesiastical car, impress on them ascetic practices, turn the women into bigots, and force the girls into a nunnery. The most vile and miserable of the population will keep a picture of the Madonna in their houses, and never grudge the price of the oil in the never-extinguished lamp. The cheat, the thief, the assassin, take religious vows and keep them, often at a considerable sacrifice.

Before breaking into a shop or committing some other crime the perpetrators will devoutly make the sign of the cross, and when a man goes to a duel he will sprinkle himself with holy water at the nearest church, in order to make sure that his revolver will not miss fire, or his knife fail. Even when robbing some valuable objects from a church altar the thief will first kneel down, murmuring an assurance that it is not contempt for the sacred utensils, but necessity, which leads him to the crime. A very superstitious rascal will try to avoid fighting with a man who has a dagger with a handle in the form of a cross. Very many are the miraculous shrines in Naples and the neighboring country, and not only do the poor and ignorant congregate there, but the rich and educated.

The Stag-Beetle.

From Longman's.

As you walk by the hedgeside a strange noise suddenly arrests your attention; it is the buzz of an insect, but loud enough to startle you; it might be mistaken for the reeling of a nightjar, but it is perhaps more like the jarring hum of a fastly driven motor car. The reason of the noise is that the beetle has with great pains climbed up a certain height from the ground, and in order to ascertain whether he has got far enough, he erects himself on his stand, lifts his wing-cases, shakes out his wings, and begins to agitate them violently, turning this way and that to make sure that he has a clear space. If he then attempts to fly—it is one of his common blunders—he instantly strikes against some branch or cluster of leaves, and is thrown down. The tumble does not hurt him in the least, but so greatly astonishes him that he remains motionless a good while; then, recovering his senses, he begins to ascend again. At length, after a good many accidents and adventures by the way, he gets on to the topmost twig, and, after some buzzing to get up steam, launches himself heavily on the air and goes away in grand style.

The Old Coffee House.

From The Connoisseur.

The coffee house is every night crowded with men of parts. Almost every one you meet is a polite scholar and a wit. Jokes and bon-mots are echoed from box to box; every branch of nature is critically examined, and the merit of every production of the press, or performance at the theatres, weighed and determined. This school (to which I am myself indebted for a great part of my education, and in which, though unworthy, I am now arrived at the honor of being a public lecturer) has bred up many authors, to the amazing entertainment and instruction of their readers. Button's, the grand archetype of the Bedford, was frequented by Addison, Steele, Pope, and the rest of that celebrated set, who flourished at the beginning of this century, and was regarded with just deference on account of the real geniuses who frequented it. But we can now boast men of superior abilities; men who, without any one acquired excellence, by the mere dint of a happy assurance, can exact the same tribute of veneration, and receive it as due to the illustrious characters, the scribblers, players, fiddlers, gamblers, that make so large a part of the company at the Bedford.

IT PLAYS ANY PIANO. - - ANY ONE CAN PLAY IT.

The "Angelus" is the original cabinet piano player, and is the result of continuous experimenting of three generations of celebrated instrument makers.

An original is always valued more than a copy, but in this case the original costs no more and does what no other piano player can do, for with the original "Angelus" you can produce these five effects:

1. A piano playing alone
2. An Orchestral Organ playing alone.
3. A piano with violin effect.
4. A piano with flute effect.
5. Piano and full Orchestral Organ combined all at the same time.

The "Angelus" has the endorsement of some of the best musicians.

It is instantly adjusted to any piano, Grand, Square, or Upright.

It is a perfect instrument, and if you will only take the trouble to investigate for yourself; we will have no trouble in convincing you that the Original is the best.

METHODS OF TAXATION

John Brisben Walker Writes the Governor on the Subject.

Some Remedies Needed in the Present System—Property Now Taxed Doubly and Trebly.

John Brisben Walker has addressed a letter to Gov. Roosevelt in regard to what he considers the evils of the present taxation system of this State. He outlines in the communication the principles which in his opinion underlie just taxation. His letter is as follows:

Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y., Jan. 25, 1900.
The Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, Governor of New York:

Dear Sir: The iniquities of taxation as now practiced in the State of New York would do credit to the most remote province of Turkey. If the matter is to be taken up at Albany it is of importance to have a radical reconsideration of the entire subject. Before any action can be taken that will be other than bungling and inefficient the State of New York must first decide upon the principles which underlie just taxation. I beg to present for your consideration an attempt to formulate these principles.

First—All property of every kind and description, real or personal, shall bear its pro rata share of State, county, town, and school taxes, so that where the property is represented in two or three ways, as in the case of real estate held by a company for which stock has been issued and at the same time mortgage bonds given, the taxation shall be levied upon the property itself, thus preventing all confusion as to the manner of assessment.

Second—No property shall be taxed more than once.

Third—The valuation of all property shall be fixed at a mean between the price at which such property would sell at forced sale and the price at which its owner holds it for personal uses or speculative purposes—in other words, a just mean of valuation.

Fourth—All State, county, town, village, school, and other taxes shall be paid at one central county office—namely, that of the County Treasurer—and all accounts pertaining thereto shall become a part of the county records, so that a single reference will at all times show the condition of taxes paid and unpaid.

Fifth—The County Treasurer shall mail to each taxpayer who shall return his list of property holdings an itemized bill giving clearly the description of the property, its valuation, the rate of taxation, and the total of each kind of taxes—State, county, town, village, and school; and the best principles known to the mercantile world of to-day shall be introduced to facilitate the easy collection of taxes.

Sixth—No extraordinary usury shall be charged for non-payment of taxes, but the delinquent taxes negotiated with the leading trust companies so as to leave the unfortunate non-taxpayer in the position of least loss until the property shal be finally sold or redeemed.

If fundamental principles of just taxation could be established in law, most of the difficulties which now surround the subject would disappear. It is the injustice and inequality of the existing system which gives excuse for many men in their avoidance of taxes and leaves a violent disgust in the minds of all regarding the methods in use.

Under the existing practice, it is quite possible for a piece of property to be taxed not less than three times, while on the other hand we know that large amounts of property escape taxation altogether. If men could feel that all others were paying their fair share of taxes, and that they would not be called upon to pay taxes twice on the same property, I believe that nine-tenths of the effort to avoid taxation would cease.

I have talked with many business men and officers of corporations and have usually discovered that the motive beneath the avoidance of taxes arose from these two facts: That other men are not fairly assessed and consequently are not paying their share of taxation, and that property under the laws of the State is likely to be taxed two or even three times.

There should be a State court, to which any man having reason to believe that his property was taxed twice could submit his grievance in a businesslike way, so that the securing of justice would not be attended by the expensive litigation now required. Under the present system, a man's taxes may be outrageously unjust through mistake or intentional malice on the part of the Assessors. He has practically no recourse to-day except through litigation so expensive that the property holder of moderate means had better bear his grievance in silence.

With reference to methods of collecting taxes: In Westchester County, for instance, the Collector is allowed 10 per cent. if the property holder fails to pay by a certain date. The taxpayer very often receives no notice, because it is to the interest of the Collector that he should not have this notice. The Collector moves his tax office from town to town. Small bills are posted on trees and in obscure places to the effect that he will be in one town from the 1st to the 3d of the month; in another from the 4th to the 6th; in still a third from the 7th to the 10th, and so on. Considerable perseverance is required to follow up these movements and know where to send taxes. In consequence of the system, the Tax Collector, tempted to become a thief, in but too many cases fails to use the exertion which the law contemplates for the notification of the taxpayer, and for which notification the Collector receives compensation and pockets the iniquitous 10 per cent. to which through his own connivance he becomes legally entitled.

Still other difficulties are found in the payment of the village taxes at one point and of the county taxes at another; while in purchasing a piece of property there is no way of determining whether the taxes have been paid without reference to several records.

In States whose laws are of modern origin, all taxes—State, county, town, village, and school—are collected in the County Treasurer's office, and properly itemized bills for the taxes on all property returned are sent at the proper time to the taxpayer. The County Treasurer should see that the taxpayer's work is made as easy as possible, and that he is not subjected to snap judgments or usurious penalties because of oversight upon the part of the public servant who is employed to notify him in regard to paying his taxes.

Finally, when taxes have been settled, they should become a part of the county records, so that a single reference will tell the exact condition of all taxes paid and unpaid.

The burden of the infamous usury which is now practiced with regard to tax collection is as a rule borne by the poor man who is struggling along, and through sickness or unexpected difficulty is unable to secure the money to pay his taxes at the proper time. These unfortunates are subjected to penalties of 10, 20, and even 30 or 40 per cent. in some States. Very often a ring of unscrupulous men is formed around the tax office which makes a business of this kind of usury and annoys the unfortunate by unjust claims upon property. There are many instances of property passing into the hands of these robbers at only one-twentieth or even a fiftieth of its value.

Such practices are contrary to public interest, and it is impossible to conceive of intelligent lawmakers countenancing them. Taxes form the very highest class of security that can be found in the whole business world, and money, with proper negotiation, should be loaned on them by the large trust and insurance companies at the lowest rate at which money is loaned on Government bonds, because the security is absolute.

JOHN BRISBEN WALKER.

TAXATION OF MORTGAGES AND DEDUCTION OF DEBTS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Clarke, the counsel of the Stranahan Committee on Taxation, says "mortgages are now taxable by the law of the State" and that "the committee's proposition is to change the rate so as to make it low." He suppresses all mention of the other change which the law makes, namely, that under the Stranahan law mortgages are taxable WITHOUT DEDUCTION FOR DEBT. In all other personal property the tax is offset by the owner's just debts, which is rightful. On real estate no such deduction is made, and under the Stranahan bill mortgages would be classed with real estate in this respect. Mr. Clarke is silent about this important change, and I do not believe that the eminent gentlemen whom he quotes had clearly in mind that the proposed law would change not only the rate but the mode of taxation.

This is the real grievance, and this is what makes it certain that the mortgage tax, being essentially a realty tax, will be finally paid by the owner or user of the realty. Then we shall have the gross unfairness of mortgaged property alone paying State tax, while free-and-clear property is exempt.

The bill under consideration might be appropriately headed "An act to burden the heavily laden and weigh down the oppressed."

As to the statement that the mortgageor will, even if he has to pay the five mills, receive the counterbalancing benefit of a reduction in local taxation, let us see how the counterbalancing will work.

Let us suppose that all the real estate in a certain county is represented by two farms, the one (M) being worth $10,000, subject to an overdue mortgage of $8,000, while the other (N) is free and clear of mortgage. The owner of N is so fortunate as to have inherited his property or paid for it in cash, or perhaps has given his personal notes.

Let us further suppose that this county has to raise on its real estate $420 for local purposes and $40 for State purposes.

A.

Distribution of Taxes Under Present Law.

Amount to be raised on real estate, $460, equals 2.3 per cent. of $20,000.

M pays on $10,000 freehold	$230
N pays on $10,000 freehold	230
Total	$460

B.

Distribution of Tax Under Stranahan Bill.

Amount to be raised by mortgage tax fixed at one-half of 1 per cent of $8,000.	$40
Amount to be raised on freehold. (Equals 2.1 per cent. of $20,000.)	420
N pays on $10,000 freehold	$210
M pays on $10,000 freehold	$210
And also by increase of rate of interest on mortgage	40
	$250

If N pays $210 and M pays $250, where is the equalization?

If the farms in one county are more heavily mortgaged than those in another, the former must be more heavily taxed for State purposes. Is this fair?

It is idle to say that the tax will come out of the mortgagee. No matter who pays it, it must come out of the produce of the property. There is no other source of earning but the physical property and the skill with which it is managed.

To call mortgages personalty is a fiction. But if they are taxed as personalty they should be subject to the same allowance as personalty, the deduction of just debts.

AGAINST THE DEATH PENALTY.

Society of Friends and Others Urge Legislature to Act.

The Society of Friends, with others interested, held a conference yesterday afternoon at the Friends' Meeting House in Rutherfurd Place upon the subject, "Our Responsibility in Regard to the Abolition of the Death Penalty." All those who spoke unanimously condemned capital punishment and no word was spoken in its favor. At the close of the meeting petitions were circulated calling upon the members of the State Legislature to pass the Maher bill now pending, which abolishes the death penalty.

The first speaker was the Rev. Thomas R. Slicer. "Punishment by death," said he, "does not prevent crime, and statistics show it. Does any one claim that lynching stops killing? That community where it is practiced has not yet passed out of the first crude stages of civilization."

The speaker held that being forever shut off from an adequate knowledge of a man's mental life, mankind were not in a position to execute a judgment which belonged in the province of Deity.

Gen. Newton M. Curtis, who during forty years of agitation has gained a National reputation as a foe of capital punishment, cited Michigan, Wisconsin, Rhode Island, and Maine as States employing the life sentence alone, and claimed that without the death penalty convictions were more certainly, quickly, and inexpensively secured. He asserted that the increase of homicide in States where capital punishment prevailed was fourfold in comparison to what it was in States where it had been abolished.

J. William Hutchinson followed with a paper, in which he made an attempt to show the inconsistency of modern Christians in attaching such unalterable authority to the verse in Genesis, "Whoso shedeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," and treating other Old Testament injunctions with disregard.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

FREDERICK CLINCH.—The word "trolley" is derived from the Middle Low German "drol" or "drul," which means anything round. Thence came the Middle Dutch "drol," a top, and the Scotch "trolley," which is used in various senses, the most ordinary being that of any long, unshapely thing that trails on the ground. "Isinglass" comes from the Middle Dutch "huysenblas" and the German "hausenblase," which signify literally "sturgeon bladder." That is one of the substances of which isinglass is formed. "Macadamize" is one of the few words in the English language derived from a proper name in comparatively recent times. John London Macadam was a Scotchman who, born in 1756 and dying in 1836, invented an improved process for forming roads, which proved a great success in England, and was named after the inventor.

"J. N."—"Bar sinister" is an erroneous expression for "bend sinister," a term in heraldry. A bend is one of the nine "ordinaries" of a coat of arms. It consists of a diagonal band drawn from the dexter chief (left top corner) to the sinister base, (right bottom corner.) A bend sinister is drawn from the sinister chief to the dexter base. It is one of the rarest features of a coat of arms, and usually, though not always, denotes illegitimacy of birth. From this circumstance comes the ordinary use of the expression "bar sinister" to denote illegitimacy.

"DISPUTANTS."—As a general rule the United States grants the same privileges to an alien as are granted in the latter's country to citizens of the United States. There are also special National and State acts regarding the status of the citizens of various foreign countries. An act was, for instance, passed by the Legislature of this State in 1897 providing that "any citizen of a State or Nation which, by its laws, confers similar privileges on citizens of the United States, may take, acquire, hold, or convey lands or real estate within the State, in the same manner and with like effect as if such person were, at the time, a citizen of the United States." As Americans are allowed in Great Britain and most of the important countries of Europe to hold and dispose of real estate, the generality of foreigners have the same privileges here.

"I. G."—Inquiry at the office of the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children elicited the response that it is legal for a child of eleven years to play violin solos on a theatrical or other stage. But there is a certain formality to be observed before any public performances of this sort. The law prescribes that a permit must be obtained from the Mayor and at least twenty-four hours before application is made, notice of such application must be given the Gerry society. The Mayor's permit covers all public performances for a week, and a new one can be obtained for subsequent appearances.

FOREIGN.—Gen. Warren's entire force retreated to the south side of the Tugela River, under the personal direction of Gen. Buller, who reports that the place was "abandoned" because its perimeter was too large and there was little water. Circumstantial Boer accounts state that the republicans took Spion Kop by direct assault, driving the British step by step until they showed the white flag, and 150 of them surrendered. Other Boer reports place the British loss in dead left on the battlefield at 1,500 men. It is reported from London that Dr. Leyds, the Transvaal Agent in Europe, is trying to secure the mediation of Germany. He himself in an interview, said that the Boers did not desire peace at this time on the basis of the status quo. Gen. Mercier was yesterday elected to the French Senate. PRESIDENT DIAZ'S SUCCESSOR.

It is Said Gen. Reyes Will be Mexico's Next Chief Executive.

Special to The New York Times.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 28.—The gazetting of Gen. Bernardo Reyes to be Minister of War is but the carrying out of a plan long entertained by President Diaz of providing for the succession and retiring from active participation in public affairs. For years he has regarded Reyes as his right hand man. His political experience as Governor of Nuevo de Leon and his military career have endowed him with those qualities here considered necessary to the Chief Executive.

It was well known that four years ago President Diaz was sincere in his desire to retire. He feels that his mission has been fulfilled and that he merits a rest. The plan is to make Gen. Reyes the personal representative of the President, who will thus be relieved and enabled to make the tour which he has from time to time postponed, in deference to the pleadings of his advisers.

Four years hence it is expected that Reyes will succeed Diaz in proper person. The President will go abroad as soon as the preliminaries for carrying on the Government as indicated are fully completed.

GOT EVEN WITH INSURGENTS.

American Civil Prisoner Told Where Treasure Was Concealed.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 28.—The transport City of Pekin brings a story from Manila to the effect that Harvey L. Jackson, a trader of Malolos, who succeeded in having $40,000 of insurgent coin turned over to the United States, is a beach comber in Manila, without funds to return to this country or start again in business.

Jackson did well as a trader at Malolos until the war came. Then the insurgents looted his store and took him prisoner, dragging him around from place to place.

When Lawton captured San Nicolas, Jackson escaped to the American lines, and in revenge promised to reveal the hiding place of the Spanish commander's treasure which Aguinaldo had taken. Under his guidance some soldiers recovered $40,000 in coin, but they found much more in coin and jewelry, which was divided among themselves. Several soldiers wore diamond rings and all had money to burn.

Jackson got nothing of the plunder, and his part in the recovery of the treasure was never reported to headquarters.

To Inspect the Semmes Statue.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 28.—The committee of citizens of Mobile, Ala., which has in charge the erection of a statue to the late Confederate Admiral Raphael Semmes, will arrive here on Tuesday to inspect the statue which has been cast by Ernest Vatier at his foundry in Market Street. The statue, which was begun last August, is not complete. It is of bronze, life size. The statue will be shipped next month.

VINDICATES 71ST REGIMENT

Gen. Hawkins Contradicts the Testimony of Gen. Kent.

NO NOTICE OF CHANGED PLANS

Says Trouble at San Juan Was Due to Men Being Taken Out of His Brigade Without His Knowledge.

When Brig. Gen. Hamilton S. Hawkins, United States Army, retired, reviewed the Seventy-first Regiment last Tuesday night at the armory, after the military ceremonies he met the officers of the regiment and a few special guests in the Colonel's room, and there made some remarks on the campaign against the Spanish in Cuba, and particularly as to the part played by the Seventy-first Regiment. While the General's remarks were not intended for publication, a number of the officers, after a conference, decided yesterday that they had such an important bearing in relation to the war history of the Seventy-first that they should be made public. Some of the officers go so far as to express the possibility of a new court of inquiry being appointed, in view of them.

Gen Hawkins was in command of the brigade of which the Seventy-first was a part. The importance of his speech lies in its contradiction of the testimony of Major Gen. Jacob Kent, who commanded the division in which the Seventy-first Regiment fought. This testimony appears in the proceedings of the court of inquiry. The officers of the Seventy-first have always claimed that the regiment, on account of its black-powder rifles and lack of experience, was intended for a reserve, and that it did not receive orders to cross the San Juan River. The testimony in question reads as follows:

Question by Col. Bacon—Then from the time you left Col. Downs at the forks (10 A. M.) until night you sent no further orders to him?

Answer by Gen. Kent—No; I virtually abandoned him, as far as I was concerned. That belonged to his brigade commander.

In his speech, Gen. Hawkins took occasion to emphasize the fact that the Seventy-first was taken out of his brigade without his knowledge, and contrary to his plans and intentions, and that the whole trouble arose from that fact. After the regiment had been deflected into the trail, it was two miles away from Gen. Hawkins the distance between being an impenetrable jungle of cactus. Communication was practically impossible. Col. Downs has always claimed that he received no orders after 10 o'clock, and Gen. Hawkins's statement now that he did not know about Gen. Kent's plan to deflect the Seventy-first, the officers of the regiment take as a vindication of Col. Downs. Gen. Hawkins was not called before the court of inquiry, and the officers now claim that his testimony would have cleared every member of the regiment.

WHAT GEN. HAWKINS SAYS.

The remarks made by Gen. Hawkins were as follows. "When we were at Tampa the regular officers had an opportunity of watching the Seventy-first Regiment, and had all formed a good opinion of it. When the assignments were made, I felt myself especially honored to have the Seventy-first assigned to my brigade. Going down on the transports I saw little of it, but I saw that it was landed promptly.

"I remained on the transports after my brigade was landed, for the reason that I did not wish to have my personal horses swim out to sea, as most of you gentlemen remember was a common occurrence. I had determined that the navy should furnish small boats to act as sort of lane through which the horses could be taken ashore. It took so long that I turned the matter over to one of my trusted aides, and I left the transport.

"When I put my foot on land I was met by a civilian and told that a great battle had taken place at the front, and that we had met reverses. To substantiate this statement, he pointed up the hill at some Rough Riders who were returning wounded. I looked up the hill and did see some wounded men. I was then asked who was in command, and I said that I did not know, but that possibly I was.

"I then gave orders that my brigade and one or two other regiments should leave immediately for the front. I was struck by the prompt response of the Seventy-first. Going up the hill, you gentlemen will, no doubt, remember that we met some of the Rough Riders who were returning in a demoralized condition, and who reported that the Rough Riders had been annhilated, and that their Colonel had been killed. The first regiment I found coming up the hill was the Seventy-first in good order. We found that the great battle had not taken place, so we returned to Siboney.

"We now come to the morning of the first day of July, when so many unfortunate occurrences took place. The orders were to start the night before, but we did not start until the morning. We had no orders to take the hill, and could receive none from Gen. Shafter. Gen. Kent seemed much troubled. Lieut. Miley of Gen. Shafter's staff, when the situation seemed critical, stated to Gen. Kent that if he had no objection, he would give orders to advance in the name of Gen. Shafter. To which Gen. Kent replied: 'Very well, Sir,' and started down the road to give the necessary orders.

SAYS KENT ACTED UNFORTUNATELY.

"My intention was that the Seventy-first should be in the second line, in rear of the Sixth and Sixteenth, to act as a sort of reserve, and when the final charge should come that my whole brigade should advance together. But Gen. Kent, without my knowledge, deflected the Seventy-first Regiment to the left when its head reached a trail discovered by the balloon.

"He evidently thought that my intention was to have the Seventy-first on the left of my brigade, and that this would be a shorter way to accomplish this object, but such was not my intention. It was a most unfortunate circumstance, for it removed the Seventy-first Regiment far from the rest of my brigade and placed it in the most trying position that troops could be thrown.

"When the Seventy-first came up the hill I placed them on the line, and as far as my observation went, it acted splendidly. The firing had ceased, but Gen. Shafter, who was in the rear had sent word to Lawton at El Caney, to leave and reinforce our right, as he was needed. It is certainly wonderful how fierce a battle seems when viewed from the rear. [Laughter.]

"I saw a shell burst over the left company of the Seventy-first Regiment. It did not become panic-stricken, but behaved in a soldierly manner, and quickly recovered itself and seemed to be kept well in hand by its officers.

"A battery seemed to be inactive, and I sent word to it to commence firing. My aide brought back a reply from its commanding officer that his men and horses were too much exposed and that he was going to move, which he did.

"I then placed two or three companies of the Seventy-first Regiment in the position vacated by the battery, and although just as much exposed, I heard no complaints from them or its officers of being in too much danger, and when I left on July 2, having been promoted, the Seventy-first was doing its duty.

"I have every reason to believe that if the Seventy-first Regiment was permitted to go where I intended that it should, and was not deflected to the left without my knowledge, it would have done equally well as the other two regiments of my brigade, and I am pleased to testify to the worth of the Seventy-first Regiment at any time.

COL. DOWNS PLEASED.

Col. Wallace Downs, formerly commander of the regiment, was asked what he thought of the remarks of Gen. Hawkins: "They are just what I should expect from a fair and impartial man," he said, "who was at the scene and knew how the Seventy-first was sacrificed by being thrown into the trail. I hear that Gen. Hawkins went even further, and said that the trail ought never to have been discovered.

"It is perfectly true that I was abandoned to my brigade commander by Gen. Kent, and as he had fixed it so that Gen. Hawkins was completely out of touch with me, I could get no orders from him. I am still waiting for them. Here is a fact that no military man has yet disputed:

"Gen. Kent gave me his last orders, he admits on the witness stand, at 10 A. M. The attack was not to begin on San Juan till after Lawton had taken El Caney. This capture was delayed, and finally, with every prospect of our position being made untenable, Col. Miley, at 12:20, ordered the regulars to attack the hill. I had been left to my brigade commander two hours before, and he could not communicate with me.

"If the blunder had not been made of pushing the Seventy-first into the trail that had been discovered only a few minutes before, and the outlet of which no one knew anything about, there would have been none of the bungling and confusion which interested persons tried to unload upon the Seventy-first. I am profoundly grateful to Gen. Hawkins for having let light in upon the situation at last."

Brig. Gen. George Moore Smith of the Fifth Brigade, who was among those present, also expressed his approval of the remarks of Gen. Hawkins.

BLUE LAWS IN BALTIMORE.

Every Store in the City Ordered Closed on Sunday—Police Take Names of All Offenders.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 28.—Not even a cigarette or a seidlitz powder could be bought in Baltimore to-day. For the first Sunday in many years every cigar store, corner grocery, bakery, and the like were closed up tight. Few drug stores kept open, and those that did displayed placards informing the public that the soda fountains were closed and that absolutely nothing would be sold without a prescription.

Five or six hundred policemen were kept busy all day taking the names of bootblacks, cabmen, and the keepers of little shops or fruit stands, for presentation to the Grand Jury. The Sunday newspapers were not stopped, but policemen took the names of the pressmen and other employes. The Police Department will hand in enough names to the Grand Jury to keep that body busy for nearly the rest of the term to the exclusion of the regular business for which it was chosen. Cases of petty offenders will receive attention while the gross violators lay low until the agitation blows over.

The down-town saloons which have a "pull" were given the tip that even side doors must be closed. Not a drink was obtainable for love or money.

The statute which the ministers' associations of various denominations insist upon being enforced is Article XXVII., Section 247, of the public general laws of Maryland. It is 177 years old, and reads as follows:

"No person shall work or do any bodily labor on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, and no person having children or servants shall command or willingly suffer any of them to do any manner of work or labor on the Lord's Day, (works of necessity or charity always excepted,) nor shall any one suffer or permit any children or servants to profane the Lord's Day by gaming, fishing, fowling, hunting, or unlawful pastime or recreation."

This action of the authorities, it is asserted, will lead to a revision of the statute by the Legislature now in session.

ELOPERS COME TO NEW YORK.

Step-daughter of Thomas Nelson Page of Washington and Preston Gibson Are Married Here.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The magnificent home of Thomas Nelson Page, the author, was thrown into great excitement to-day by the announcement from New York of the elopement of his young step-daughter, Miss Mina Field, and Preston Gibson, son of the late Senator Gibson of Louisiana, and nephew of Justice White of the United States Supreme Court.

According to their usual custom, Mr. and Mrs. Page refuse to see representatives of the press, but a friend of the family has authorized a local paper to make a formal announcement of the marriage to-morrow morning, the date of the ceremony being given as Jan. 27. The place or name of the officiating clergyman is scrupulously withheld.

Miss Field is just seventeen, a petite brunette. She was until last Saturday a pupil at a fashionable finishing school at Dobb's Ferry, N. Y., and was to have been presented in society next Winter. She spent the Christmas holidays at her home in this city, one of the smartest junior dances of that season being given by Mrs. Page in honor of her two young daughters. These young women are among the heiresses of the capital, their father having been a brother and partner of Marshal Field of Chicago.

Young Gibson was a junior at Princeton, and like his bride spent the Christmas holidays in Washington, when an engagement of marriage is said to have come about.

The young people met in New York on Saturday, and are spending the early days of their honeymoon in that city. They are expected to return to Washington at the end of the month, when they will be received by the bride's family.

CASTELLANES AT LAKEWOOD.

The Count and Countess Guests of Mr. and Mrs. Dwight M. Harris—Outwit Crowd at the Station.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., Jan. 28.—Count and Countess de Castellane, Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould, Mr. and Mrs. Snowden, Robert Collier, George Taylor, and S. L. Herbert arrived here on the 10:15 train from New York this morning. While the Count and Countess alighted from the front part of the parlor car and were received by Dwight Miller Harris, who escorted them to his private carriage in the rear of the station unnoticed, the rest of the party came from the rear end of the car and proceeded to the large coach of Mr. Gould, which was surrounded by four or five hundred people, all expecting to see the distinguished visitors enter the Gould coach.

During this commotion the Count and Countess were riding away with Mr. Harris to his beautiful colonial home on the lake just opposite the Gould mansion. During their stay here the Count and Countess are to be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Miller Harris.

Luncheon was served on the arrival of the Castellanes at the Harris mansion, and later a visit was made to Georgian Court, where Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould are entertaining some guests from New York and Philadelphia. Both families and their guests, with the Count and Countess, then drove to the Country Club, returning before dark.

It is expected that the Count will go to the Country Club to-morrow as the guest of Mr. Harris and engage in some shooting before the traps and take a turn at golf.

The grounds of Georgian Court were brilliantly illuminated to-night in honor of the Count and Countess. The Castellanes dined with Mr. and Mrs. Harris. Among those at the table were Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Gould, Miss May, Mr. and Mrs. E. Robbins Walker, Mr. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. James Converse, and Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Miller Harris.

Josephine, who has had great experience in this line as a public and parochial school teacher in New York City, has been selected as the head of the new institution.

BRITISH CAMPAIGN AN ENTIRE FAILURE

London Times Looks Forward to a Terrible Disaster.

FALL OF LADYSMITH CERTAIN

No Relief Could Reach Gen. White for a Month at Least.

HE CANNOT HOLD OUT.

Said to Have Expended His Rations Freely in His Confidence of Early Succor by Buller's Army.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The week has opened with the utmost gloom for the British public, and the reaction is all the stronger because of the high hopes that were reposed in Gen. Buller's turning movement and of his announcement that there would be "no turning back."

The Times says: "The most carefully planned and executed movement of the whole campaign has entirely failed, and it can hardly be necessary to dwell upon the extreme probability that we shall learn, a little sooner or a little later, of a catastrophe almost without precedent in our military history, a catastrophe, indeed, without a parallel except in the surrender at Yorktown.

"We are checked at every point in the campaign. In fact, the campaign is still to begin. We wish we had clearer proofs that even now the Government has any adequate comprehension of the situation. The utterances of responsible Ministers have done nothing to reassure the country on this point.

MORE TROOPS NECESSARY.

"Heavy or light, the thing has to be done, and the Government ought to prepare for the immediate dispatch of 50,000 men and to take steps to send yet another 50,000, if those should be needed. The hopeless attempts to carry on the campaign with four widely separated columns, each unequal to its task, must be abandoned for a concentration of force and of purpose."

All the editorials this morning breathe the spirit of calm determination. Not one will allow that any reverse could deter the country from the object it has set itself to attain, whatever the sacrifices which may be involved.

CRITICISM OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Very frank criticism of the Government, however, is beginning to be heard even in quarters that have hitherto refrained. The Daily Mail boldly throws all the blame upon Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Lord Lansdowne, and Lord Wolseley. It points to President Lincoln's dismissal of Simon Cameron from the post of Secretary of War as a precedent for "getting rid of incompetent Ministers."

The Morning Post dwells upon the danger of further rebellion at the cape, and of possible European complications. It urges that the navy be prepared for "any emergency."

The Standard and other papers reflect the anxiety of the public to learn how much truth there is in the Boer accounts of the fighting at Spion Kop. Gen. Buller's obscurity in his dispatches is bitterly criticised, as well as the evident fact that the censor is not only delaying but is removing all important matters from the newspaper dispatches. To judge with any accuracy of the extent of the disaster is virtually impossible.

THE FORCE ENGAGED.

It appears that Gen. Buller had altogether—five brigades wholly or partly engaged, Gen. Coke's, Gen. Hildyard's, Gen. Hart's, Gen. Woodgate's, and Gen. Lyttleton's, and the 270 casualties already announced in Lyttleton's brigade are thus explained.

Much mystery still surrounds the retreat. It is possible that Gen. Buller has withdrawn his whole forces; but it is generally assumed that Lyttleton's brigade and Lord Dundonald's cavalry and other troops are still on the north side of the Tugela.

Gen. Buller's confidence that the Boers did not molest his retreat because they had been taught to respect the fighting powers of the British soldier, is not shared in London. It is thought rather that the Boers had some other plan in store, or did not wish to waste their men

CRITICISM OF BULLER.

At the service clubs the situation as revealed by Gen. Buller was considered very unpleasant. His excuses or explanations were characterized as very weak. The absence of water, which Sir Charles Warren was "led to believe" existed, and the facts that Spion Kop was "indeed a mountain," and that its "perimeter was too large," are all matters which even Gen. Buller's warmest admirers hold should have been ascertained before he attacked.

The comforting feature of the situation, however, is the fact that Gen. Buller's retirement across the Tugela was accomplished without loss, which puts an end to the unpleasant rumors that were in circulation here and on the Continent.

To Ladysmith the disappointment must be very bitter. A dispatch from the Boer laager near the town, dated Jan. 24, describes the garrison as "very evidently preparing a desperate coup in order to effect a junction with Gen. Buller's advancing army."

GEN. WHITE'S CONDITION.

It may be regarded as a certainty that, in the confident hope of early relief, Sir George White has lately been issuing extra rations, and this fact has given rise to an exaggerated idea as to the length of time the provisions would last.

Even should it be decided to send Gen. Buller reinforcements and to attempt to reach Ladysmith by a movement through the still more difficult country east of Colenso, it is extremely doubtful whether the garrison could hold out long enough, as such a movement would occupy at least a month.

MAY ABANDON LADYSMITH.

Open talk is heard of the absolute necessity of abandoning Ladysmith to its fate, while Lord Rob[illegible] reverts to the original plan of an adva[illegible] over the Orange River upon Bloemfontein.

It is reported from Boer headquarters near Ladysmith that Gen. Buller had been down with fever, but had recovered.

Large arrivals of troops are due at Cape Town during the week.

There has been great activity in military quarters in all parts of England since Saturday morning.

The War Office, anticipating a great crush at the opening of Parliament, has placed new restrictions upon visitors during the session.

The situation at other points is unchanged, but indications that Lord Roberts is preparing plans for an advance across the Orange River come in a dispatch to The Daily Chronicle from Storkstroom, dated Jan. 25, which says that Thebits, an important position near Steynsburg, on the Stormberg-Rosmead line, is now occupied by the British, who are repairing the railway and bridges.

The correspondent observes that this will facilitate communication between Gen. Gatacre and Gen. Kelly-Kenny.

KILLED BY HIS OWN CROWD?

One of the Invaders of Frankfort, Ky., Reported Murdered on the Train Because He Yelled for Goebel.

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Ky., Jan. 28.—J. W. Bryant, who went to Frankfort a few days ago on the special train that carried more than 1,000 mountain men to the State Capitol, has not returned, although it is certain he left Frankfort for his home Friday.

Two of the men who were on the special train and have returned here say that Bryant was shot and killed and pitched from the train window by the crowd as they were returning. Whether this be true or not, his family at East Bernsted, this county, are much worried about his whereabouts.

The two men who report that Bryant was killed are Messrs. Smith and Moore of this county and are reliable men. They say he was shot in the face and mouth and thrown from the car window because he yelled for Goebel.

ALL QUIET AT FRANKFORT.

Another Contest in the Legislature to Take Place To-day.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 28.—Politicians of both parties took a rest to-day, and the lobby of the Capitol Hotel was more quiet than it has been for several weeks. Last night the leaders of both parties were in caucus, that of the Republicans being prolonged until a late hour. No action of any kind was taken during the day, however. There were persistent rumors that another detachment of men from the mountains would arrive in Frankfort during the first half of the week.

E. G. Sebree, campaign manager for the Republicans, denied the story positively. "Nobody is coming that I know of," he said, "and if there was any organized movement among the Republicans to come to Frankfort I would know it. No such thing is contemplated by anybody."

To-morrow morning another contest will be heard in the House—that of Gill, Democrat, against Brister, Republican, from Logan County. This case was made a special order for Saturday morning at the same time as the Van Metter-Berry case. The majority of the Contest Committee is composed of Republicans, and will report in favor of Brister. A minority report will be presented in favor of Gill.

ANNA MAUD BOWEN DEAD.

Dean of Woman's Hall at Northwestern University.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 28.—Miss Anna Maud Bowen, Dean of Woman's Hall, Northwestern University, dropped dead at noon to-day of heart disease. She was appointed Dean in June last year, and was the youngest woman ever appointed to the post.

She was born in Chicago in 1872, and entered the university in 1891 from the Southside High School. As freshman in the philosophical course she accomplished twice the amount of work that the ordinary student did, and finished the four-year course in three years, and was graduated in 1894 with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. In 1895 she was made a Fellow of Philosophy at Cornell, and after two years secured the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, being the youngest of 150 students. She then went to Leipsic.

Returning she was made Dean of the seminary at Martin's Ferry, Ohio, and then became an editorial writer on The Nation. She held the editorial position until her appointment as Dean last year.

FIRE IN HAWTHORNE MILLS.

Connecticut Factory Damaged on Account of Lack of Water.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Jan. 28.—Fire in the Hawthorne Woolen Mills at Glenville, one of the mills in the American Felt Company's trust, did $5,000 damage to-day. Oily waste caused a spontaneous combustion in the stock room, and the flames burned through the ceiling to the weaving room above.

When the flames were discovered first it was found that the storage reservoir generally reserved for fire purposes was empty, and it became necessary to first start the water wheel to force the water into the tank, and then to start the engine to pump it into the building.

The floors were flooded to a depth of six inches before the fire was subdued.

P. D. ARMOUR SERIOUSLY ILL.

Special to The New York Times.

PASADENA, Cal., Jan. 28.—Mrs. Philip D. Armour, Jr., left Santa Barbara at 10 o'clock this morning with the body of her husband, and will arrive in Chicago some time Wednesday evening. The physicians have told Mr Armour, the father, that the trip to Chicago, with its attendant grief and excitement, would be almost certain to result in his death. His wife has decided to remain here with her husband, who is sadly in need of her care and encouragement. His condition is said to be very serious.

BRITISH RETREAT OVER THE TUGELA

Warren's Force Crosses Under Buller's Personal Direction.

BRITISH DEAD MAY BE 1,500

Were Driven by the Boers from Spion Kop, Step by Step.

HOIST A WHITE FLAG

150 of Them Taken Prisoners in the Assault.

Spion Kop Lacked Water, Gen. Buller Reports, and Its Perimeter Was Too Large, So It Was "Abandoned."

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The War Office has received the following from Gen. Buller announcing that Gen. Warren has retreated to the south side of the Tugela River:

Spearman's Camp, Jan. 27, 6:10 P. M.

"On Jan. 20 Warren drove back the enemy and obtained possession of the southern crests of the high tableland extending from the line of Acton Homes and Hongers Poort to the western Ladysmith hills. From then to Jan. 25 he remained in close contact with the enemy.

"The enemy held a strong position on a range of small kopjes stretching from northwest to southeast across the plateau from Acton Homes, through Spion Kop, to the left bank of the Tugela.

"The actual position held was perfectly tenable, but did not lend itself to an advance, as the southern slopes were so steep that Warren could not get an effective artillery position, and water supply was a difficulty.

"On Jan. 23 I assented to his attacking Spion Kop, a large hill, indeed a mountain, which was evidently the key of the position, but was far more accessible from the north than from the south.

"On the night of Jan. 23 he attacked Spion Kop, but found it very difficult to hold, as its perimiter was too large and water, which he had been led to believe existed in this extraordinarily dry season, was found very deficient.

"The crests were held all that day against severe attack and a heavy shell fire. Our men fought with great gallantry.

"I would especially mention the conduct of the Second Cameronians and the Third King's Rifles, who supported the attack on the mountain from the steepest side and, in each case, fought their way to the top, and the Second Lancashire Fusiliers and Second Middlesex, who magnificently maintained the best traditions of the British Army throughout the trying day of Jan. 24, and Thornycroft's Mounted Infantry, who fought throughout the day equally well alongside of them.

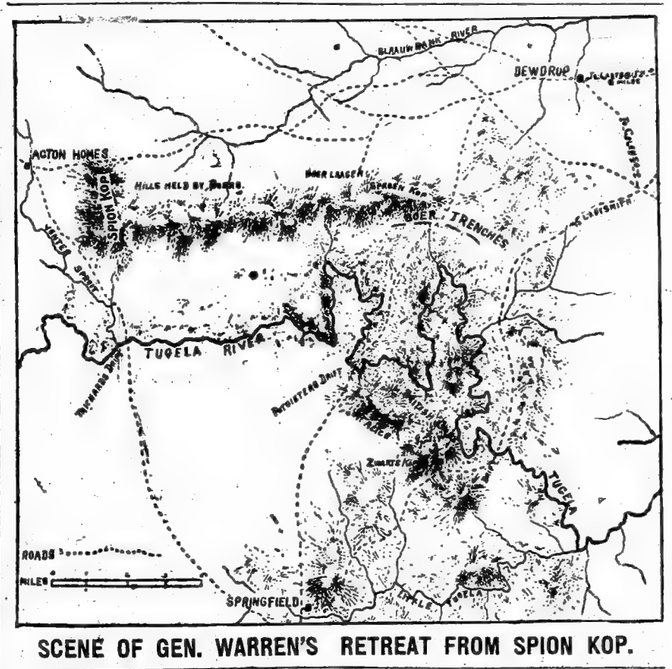
"Gen. Woodgate, who was in command at the summit, having been wounded, the officer who succeeded him decided on the night of Jan. 24 to abandon the position and did so before dawn Jan. 25.

"I reached Warren's camp at 5 A. M. on Jan. 25 and decided that a second attack upon Spion Kop was useless and that the enemy's right was too strong to allow me to force it.

"Accordingly, I decided to withdraw the force to the south of the Tugela.

"At 6 A. M. we commenced withdrawing the train and by 8 A. M. Jan. 27, (Saturday,) Warren's force was concentrated south of the Tugela without the loss of a man of a pound of stores.

"The fact that the force could withdraw from actual touch—in some cases the lines were less than 1,000 yards apart—with the enemy in the manner it did is, I think, sufficient evidence of the morale of the troops; and that we were permitted to withdraw our cumbrous ox and mule transport across the river, 85 yards broad, with 20-foot banks, and a very swift current, unmolested, is, I think, proof that the enemy has been taught to respect our soldiers' fighting powers."



SCENE OF GEN. WARREN'S RETREAT FROM SPION KOP.

WARREN WAS DRIVEN OUT

Boer Report of the Retaking of Spion Kop by Direct Assault in the Face of Heavy Fire.

BOER HEADQUARTERS, MODDER SPRUIT, Upper Tugela, Wednesday, Jan. 24, Midnight, (via Lorenzo Marques, Thursday, Jan. 25.)—Some Vryheid burghers from the outposts on the highest hills on the Spion Kop group rushed into the laager, saying that the kop was lost and that the English had taken it. Reinforcements were ordered up, but nothing could be done for some time, the hill being enveloped in thick mist.

At dawn the Heidelberg and Carolina contingents, supplemented from other commandoes, began the ascent of the hill. Three spurs, precipitous projections, faced the Boer positions. Up these the advance was made. The horses were left under the first terrace of rocks.

Scaling the steep, the Boers found that the English had improved the opportunity and intrenched heavily. Between the lines of trenches was an open veldt, which had to be rushed under a heavy fire not only from rifles, but of lyddite and shrapnel from field guns.

Three forces ascended the three spurs coordinately under cover of fire from the Free State Krupps, a Creusot, and a big Maxim. The English tried to rush the Boers with the bayonet, but their infantry went down before the Boer rifle fire as before a scythe.

The Boer investing party advanced step by step until 2 in the afternoon, when a white flag went up and 150 men in the front trenches surrendered, being sent as prisoners to the head laager.

The Boer advance continued on the two kopjes east of Spion Kop. Many Boers were shot, but so numerous were the burghers that the gaps filled automatically. Toward twilight they reached the summit of the second kopje, but did not get further.

The British Maxims belched flame, but a wall of fire from the Mausers held the English back. Their centre under this pressure gradually gave way and broke, abandoning the position.

The prisoners speak highly of the bravery of the burghers, who, despising cover, stood against the skyline edges of the summit to shoot the Dublin Fusiliers, sheltered in the trenches.

Firing continued for some time, and then the fusiliers and the Light Horse serving as infantry threw up their arms and rushed out of the trenches.

The effect of the abandonment of Spion Kop by the English can hardly be gauged as yet, but it must prove to be immense.

An unusually high proportion of lyddite shells did not explode.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—The following dispatch has been received in London from Pretoria, dated Jan. 25, via Lorenzo Marques, Jan. 28:

"The Government is advised that, after heavy fighting near Spion Kop, some British on the kop, being stormed, hoisted a white flag. One hundred and fifty prisoners. God be thanked! Although we also had to give brave and valuable lives."

1,500 BRITISH KILLED?

BOER HEAD LAAGER, Ladysmith, Jan 25—6 P. M.—The British dead left on the battlefield yesterday numbered 1,500.

BRITISH CAPTURE OF SPION KOP.

SPEARMAN'S CAMP, Friday, Jan. 26.—About 2 o'clock on the morning of Jan. 24, (Wednesday,) when heavy clouds rested upon the kopjes, the main point of the Boer position, Tabanyama, was stormed by the British infantry under Gen. Woodgate. Our force crossed over a ravine and climbed the mountain side steadily, getting within thirty yards of the enemy's first line of trenches.

The Boers, who had been asleep, decamped, leaving everything behind, and the British, with a ringing cheer, climbed to the summit.

The Boers opened fire from several points, but it was apparent that they had been taken completely by surprise, and their resistance was dispirited. The western crest of the hill was soon won, and the infantry crept along the top of the hill.

At daybreak, however, the Boers, from a high point on the extreme east, sent a withering fire among the British, which momentarily staggered them. The Boers had the range fixed to a nicety, and their artillery sent several shells right to the top of the crest, forcing the infantry to take cover. A Boer Nordenfeldt also was worked with great precision.

The British held the position against great odds. At 10 o'clock strong reinforcements were sent up the hill and advanced in skeleton formation, the enemy being driven back to the extreme point.

A special dispatch from Spearman's Camp, dated Friday, and supplying additional details of the operations of Wednesday, says:

"The British made a most successful movement to-day. They deployed to Gen. Warren's right flank and reinforced the troops in possession of Tabanyama. They were subjected to a heavy Boer shell fire, but stood their ground nobly.

"Part of Gen. Lyttleton's brigade extended on the plain in front of Mount Alice and, within two hours, scaled the height of Spion Kop under a heavy fire. One rifleman, who reached the summit before his comrades, proudly stood on top."

The Daily News publishes a dispatch dated Spearman's Camp, Wednesday afternoon, but held back presumably by the censor until Friday, Jan. 26, 6:40 P. M. The correspondent says:

"Having gallantly taken a portion of Tabanyama Mountain during last night, Gen. Warren's troops are finding considerable difficulty in holding it. There has been heavy fighting to-day. The Boer shells are splendidly directed, and in the face of the enemy's heavy fire the further advance of our forces has been checked.

"Again and again attempts had been made to dislodge the enemy, and things had begun to look serious. Determined as had been their attack, however, the Boers had not succeeded in dislodging them.

"Meanwhile the King's Royal Rifles, approaching from Potgieter's Drift side of the mountain range, began the arduous ascent of Spion Kop. The heights at the place where they arrived were precipitous and their task was no light one. They advanced, however, and apparently at first without the knowledge of the Boers, but before reaching the top they became exposed to a flank fire from the enemy.

"The other part of the hill was even more precipitous than the road along which they had come, but the brave fellows scrambled up, little by little, sometimes on their feet and hands, sometimes crawling on their knees until, panting and exhausted, they reached the top and threw themselves upon the ground with a cheer. It was grandly accomplished."

LEYDS AT WORK IN GERMANY.

BERLIN, Jan. 28.—The Deutsche Tageszeitung publishes an interview to-day with Dr. Leyds, which represents him as having said:

"The war will certainly last a very long time. The Transvaal will decidedly not be the first to seek peace, and will refuse any proposals on the basis of the status quo."

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The Berlin correspondent of The Daily Mail says:

"Dr Leyds is a popular lion here. He is being welcomed with an enthusiasm ordinarily extended only to most favored envoys. I have ascertained, from unimpeachable evidence, that he is trying to induce Germany to mediate on the basis of a guarantee of the independence of the Boer Republics, which would be granted some minor territorial concessions, but not a port, this latter being left for future negotiation with a certain power having colonies in South Africa.

"Dr. Leyds is offering Germany commercial, railway, and mining monopolies, as well as other inducements. If he fails here he will try Washington through Mr. Mahrum and Montagu White, and St. Petersburg by an envoy to Russia.

"It is not likely that he will obtain an audience of Emperor William. During his reception by Count von Bülow no political matters were mentioned."

FRENCHMEN JOIN THE BOERS.

LONDON, Jan 28.—The correspondent of The Times at Lorenzo Marques telegraphing Jan. 25, says:

"Over thirty Frenchmen, who arrived here by the French steamer Gironde and were prohibited from proceeding to the Transvaal, appealed to the French Consul, who protested that they held passports indorsed by the Transvaal Consul, and who declared that he would hold the Portuguese Government liable in damages for a breach of international law in the event of continued refusal to allow them to go forward.

"As the Portuguese Governor General had previously signed the passports, he was compelled to admit the validity of the French Consul's contention. The result was that the Frenchmen were allowed to proceed.

"Eighty more foreigners are expected by a German steamer next week."

BROOKLYN ELEVATED TRAGEDY.

An Electrician Killed on the Fifth Avenue Line Either by Shock or the Wheels of a Train.

Louis Lipton, an electrician employed by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit System, was killed at one o'clock this morning on the Fifth Avenue Elevated Road at Thirty-sixth Street.

He was adjusting a brush on the commutator of the motor and in doing so placed one hand on the third rail. In this manner he completed a circuit, which started the car forward.

His body was mangled, but it could not be ascertained whether or not he had been shocked to death before the wheels of the car passed over him. He was dead when picked up.

Lipton lived in the East New York section of Brooklyn.

DEATH SHOCK IN ARC LIGHT.

Waiter in a Bowery Cafe Instantly Killed—Employer Hurt Trying to Rescue Him.

Charles Nord, a waiter employed at the Café Schumann at 383 Bowery was instantly killed last evening by an electric shock. Nord had been employed at the café for several years up to a few weeks ago when he lost his position. His young wife pleaded with the proprietors, Kunst & Conde, with the result that they took Nord back on Saturday evening.

In front of the café is an arc light hanging from an iron rod. In some way this rod became loosened from the building last night, and the light dropped down to within three feet of the sidewalk. Nord, who was working in the front part of the café, ran out to the street intending to swing the light around so that it would be out of the way of people desiring to enter the café.

He caught hold of the iron bars connecting the upper and lower parts of the lamp. As he did so the electric current passed through his body. There was a number of pedestrians on the street at the time. They saw Nord's body twitching and trembling.

Some person called for help and Conde went to Nord's assistance. Conde succeeded in dragging the limp body of the waiter away from the lamp. In doing so he received a severe shock, and had to be carried into the café himself.

An ambulance surgeon from Bellevue Hospital on his arrival said that Nord had been instantly killed by the shock. The surgeon, after administering stimulants to Mr. Conde, found that it was not necessary to take him to the hospital.

Nord's body was taken to the Fifth Street Police Station and from there to his home, at 214 East Thirteenth Street. He was twenty-seven years old, and had been married only eight months.

TRYING MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP.

Indiana Town Furnishes Cheap Light, Water, and Telephone Service.

Special to The New York Times.

BUTLER, Ind., Jan 28.—One of the most remarkable examples of municipal ownership in the United States is shown by the town reports of Edinburg, Ind.

Incandescent electric lights are furnished to residences for 15 cents a month and to business houses for 20 cents a month for sixteen candle-power lights. Waterworks are also operated at an annual charge of $1 to each consumer, and a complete and perfect telephone exchange is maintained with a monthly rental of 50 cents.

These are municipal enterprises, all self-supporting.

THE SITUATION IN CHINA.

The Dowager Empress's Action Arouses No Official Protest.

PEKING, Jan. 28.—The latest move of the Empress Dowager appears to be accepted by both officials and people with the greatest equanimity. None of the high officials, either metropolitan or provincial, seems to have thought it worth while even to enter a protest.

The prevailing impression among all classes of Chinese seems to be that, in order to consolidate her power, the Empress Dowager must at all costs effect the removal of the present Emperor. Having now felt the pulse of the country and having found the Emperor's party unprepared to rally to his protection, it is likely that the Empress Dowager is preparing for a still more striking move with the advent of the Chinese New Year.

Judging from surface indications, it is almost safe to predict that any action she may take will be accepted quietly, not leading to anything in the shape of internal convulsions or outward complications.

LABOR FOR TUNNEL WORK

Central Federated Union Wants Citizens Only Employed.

DISPUTE OVER ACTORS' STRIKE

Brooklyn Telephone Employes Ordered Out—Cloak Cutters Against Mortgage Tax.

The question of labor on the rapid transit tunnel which is being agitated by the trades unions of this city came up again for discussion before the Central Federated Union yesterday in the form of a resolution that citizens only should be employed on the work.

Delegate Brown of the Cigarmakers objected to the resolution, and held that the resolution should demand that only union men be employed. The aliens, he held, had done a great deal in developing the city, and it would be wrong to exclude them now.

Delegate Joseph Barondess spoke in the same vein, and then Delegate William J. O'Brien of the Granite Workers insisted on protesting against the employment of aliens. "If we do not enforce this resolution," he said, "the Italian padrones will advertise in the newspapers in Italy that men are wanted to work on the rapid transit road in New York, and we will have the city crowded with alien Italians, who will work for the lowest wages possible, while our own American workingmen will go about starving. I have seen these Italians going out to work. They carry a loaf of bread under the arm, and it is that with a couple of onions that they live upon during the day. They do not benefit the country they live in, and after saving up $300 or $400 they go back to their own country. I know one public job in this city on which 500 Italians are employed, but not one American. And why? Simply because they work cheap, while the American is accustomed to live decently and requires living wages."

"It would be an outrage to let the aliens come here and take away the money which belongs to good American citizens," remarked Patrick J. McNulty of the Street Sweepers.

"The law says that only citizens should be employed on public works, and we should place ourselves on record as supporting the labor laws," said Delegate George H. Warner of the International Association of Machinists.

The resolution was adopted and a committee was appointed to call on the city authorities and insist on its being enforced.

Delegate Simons of the Cigar Packers brought up the subject of the Jewish actors' strike in the People's Theatre by saying that Manager Edelstein of the theatre had charged two members of the United Hebrew Trades with having offered to break up the actors' union for $500.

One of the men against whom the charges were alleged to have been made was present and said they were not true, and Delegate Philip Kelly of the Theatrical Protective Union said the complaints of the actors that they made only $11 a week were not true. They earned much more, and he knew of one actress who was paid $40 a week for an entire season of twenty-three weeks. Mr. Kelly believed that an attempt had been made to blackmail Manager Edelstein, and said he would not be a party to any such conspiracy.

"Manager Adler said that Mr. Kelly was the best walking delegate he ever knew, and gave him $5," remarked Delegate Barondess. Then he added: "Of the new actors that were brought from Chicago to replace the strikers one is a bag of bones and another, a centenarian, was introduced as a hero of Baxter Street." Then he added: "Delegate Kelly would not call out the stage carpenters to help the actors, but if they win they will insist upon those carpenters being discharged."

Delegate Kelly shook his fist at Barondess as he cried, "You can't organize another stage carpenters' union. If you want a strike a strike we will be prepared and can retaliate."

The meeting passed a resolution ordering the Theatrical Protective Union to call out the stage carpenters in the People's Theatre on a sympathetic strike, but they refused to obey the mandate.

Grand Treasurer Wissinger of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers said the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company had discharged members of the union in its employ in Newark and also in Brooklyn, with the intention of breaking up the union. Thereupon the Brooklyn local union held a meeting and decided to order strikes to-day in all the offices of the company in Brooklyn until the discharged members were reinstated.

The cloak cutters sent in resolutions protesting against a bill proposing to impose a tax on mortgages. The protest said that the joint committee, which represented eighty-nine trades organizations which had been requested to recommend to the Legislature a bill for home rule in taxation, had failed to do so, and instead had prepared a bill imposing a tax on mortgages, by whomsoever held, rather than taxing monopolies, franchises, and trusts.

This bill, the protest continued, would impose a tax on deposits in savings banks where poor working people have their savings, and would thus discourage them. It would also impose an unnecessary burden on building loan associations, in which many workingmen had their money tied up; it would discourage building operations, and would thus deprive many workingmen in the building trades of the means of making a living.

The meeting indorsed the protest and appointed a committee to send a protest against the bill to the Legislature.

A circular was received from ex-Judge Van Hoesen, Chairman of the committee to arrange for the pro-Boer mass meeting, but as the circular did not bear a union stamp the meeting would not consider it.

The letter carriers announced that they would have a grand reception and ball at the Grand Central Palace on Feb. 12 for the benefit of their sick benefit fund.

The New York Elevator Operators' Benevolent Association will have their annual reception and ball at the Lenox Lyceum on the evening of Feb. 21.

FAVORS A TAX ON ALIEN LABOR.

Rev. Dr. Peters Would Bar All But Citizens from Working on Tunnel.

The Rev. Madison C. Peters of the Bloomingdale Reformed Church at his Sunday afternoon service in the Ninth Regiment Armory yesterday, spoke in opposition to the system of glutting the labor market with European laborers whenever there is to be any great work begun in the United States, to the hurt of the American laborer, and advocated the placing of the protective tax upon every alien laborer who comes into this country.

"It is a remarkable fact," said he, "which is borne out by statistics, that whenever there is a business depression in this country there is a decrease in the number of immigrants, and whenever there is prosperity or a big enterprise on there is a tremendous increase in immigration. Ninety per cent. of this immigration consists of unskilled laborers, and it therefore enters into direct competition with the laborers who are already in the country.

"The present is the time when our immigration laws should be amended, and we should exclude the birds of passage, who live in a way utterly incompatible with American decency, and who have no intention of becoming American citizens, who simply stay here for a short time and take home to their native land what they have earned. The employer has become independent of American workmen because of the ease with which their places can be filled by immigrants who are glad to get work at any price.

"It is said you could not get enough American citizens who would be willing to perform the common labor required on our new tunnel. This is not true. American citizens will be glad to get the work, but they dislike to be put on a level with the pauper labor of Europe and live according to their standards. Under present conditions the United States is trying to solve the question of non-employment for Europe as well as for itself. We have already tens of thousands more men and women than necessary to perform the labor required, and I favor the law that will give the American citizen the first chance."

Dr. Peters said he knew there was a law prohibiting the employment of any but citizens upon municipal works like the new tunnel road, but he declared that it was impossible to detect among the thousands employed which are and which are not citizens, and the law is violated continually.

The Rev. Leighton Williams of the Amity Baptist Church also spoke at the meeting. His subject was "The Just Man." He spoke, in the course of his remarks, of the stay-at-home voter, saying that it had been said that the Board of Aldermen in this city was representative of the voters who allowed it to exist, but he believed that it was also representative of the citizens who staid away from the polls and allowed the election of these men.

"God is the final judge of the man," said he. "He will decide whether the man who gives millions to perpetuate his name in charitable institutions, and who should rather return the money he gives this way to the employes from whom he has got it in small salaries, is a just man or a hypocrite. I believe that the hypocrite who oppresses the poor is on his way to hell, no matter what amounts he gives in his ostentatious way to churches."

No Aliens on Tunnel Work.

The Laborers' Union Protective Society, that has some 13,000 members in this city, is agitating to have only citizens employed on the underground railroad, and those members who are not yet citizens are taking steps to get out their papers. The members say that the prevailing rate of wages in their work, and which they get from the Master Builders' Association, is 33 cents an hour, and they want double pay for overtime—that is, after eight hours' work.

JAMES WATSON GERARD DEAD.

The Distinguished Author and Lawyer Passed Away in His Gramercy Park Home.

James Watson Gerard, the well-known lawyer and author, died at his home, 17 Gramercy Park, yesterday morning. The direct cause of death was hemorrhage of the brain. He had been ill for the past year.

Mr. Gerard was born in lower Broadway in 1822, and was the son of James Watson Gerard, also a distinguished lawyer of this city, who was born in 1794 and died in 1874. The Gerards were among the notable families driven from France by the troubles of the reign of Louis XVI. The members of the family went to Scotland, where William Gerard was born, near Banff. For a time William Gerard was a resident of Gibraltar, but came to this country previous to 1780 and engaged in business. The year after his arrival here he married Christina Glass of a Sutherlandshire family, whose mother was a grandniece of Sir Thomas Hector Monroe, Governor of the East Indies, and a favorite niece of Dr. Alexander Monroe, one of the founders of the University of Edinburgh. A brother of Miss Glass was a well-known New York merchant of the early part of this century.

William and Christina Gerard had seven children. Ann married Andrew Hosie, and was the mother of Mrs. Schuyler Livingston. Christina married Dr. Jeremiah Fisher, a Surgeon in the war of 1812, in the United States Army. James W. was the youngest of three sons, and was graduated from Columbia College in 1811. Soon after leaving college he became enrolled in a volunteer company called "The Iron Grays," which was raised for the defense of the harbor during the war with Great Britain. After the war he entered the law office of George Griffin, who was one of the most distinguished members of the bar at that time, and in 1816 took the degree of M. A. from Columbia, being then admitted to his profession. He continued to practice in New York until 1869. He was, it is said, the first person in this country to advocate uniformed police. Early in life he married Eliza, daughter of Increase and Elizabeth Sumner Boston.

James Watson Gerard, the second of the name, was born in this city in 1822, and was graduated from Columbia with the honors of valedictorian in 1843. The same institution conferred the degree of LL. D. upon him in 1892. He was an able advocate in the courts, and became a recognized authority on real estate and property. He devoted a great deal of his time to the schools of this city, and was School Trustee, Inspector, and Commissioner, holding the last named office for two terms. In 1876-7 he was State Senator. In 1880 he ran for Congress against Levi P. Morton, but was defeated, President Cleveland, during his second term, offered Mr. Gerard the office of Special Commissioner to the Hawaiian Islands, but on account of ill-health the office was declined.

Mr. Gerard wrote a number of books, among them "The Pelican Papers," "Titles to Real Estate in the State of New York," and "The Peace of Utrecht," his most important historical work.

Mr. Gerard in 1866 married Miss Jennie Angel, daughter of Benjamin F. Angel of Geneseo, N. Y., who was United States Minister to Sweden during President Buchanan's Administration. Mrs. Gerard and three sons, James W., Sumner, and Julian, survive Mr. Gerard. They were all present at his bedside when he died. He was a member of the Union, Players, and Tuxedo Clubs, and the St. Nicholas and Historical Societies. The house Mr. Gerard died in had been his home for more than forty years.

The funeral will take place from Calvary Episcopal Church, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-first Street, at 10 o'clock on Wednesday morning. The rector, the Rev. Dr. J. L. Parks, will officiate. The burial will be in the Gerard family plot in Greenwood Cemetery.

SMALLPOX IN KENTUCKY.

The Disease Rages in Thirty-five Counties and There Is No Money to Fight It.

Special to The New York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 28.—The whole State of Kentucky is at the mercy of smallpox. With the disease prevalent in thirty-five counties of the State, the State Board of Health finds itself without money to fight the epidemic.

Secretary J. N. McCormack has received the resignations of the County Boards of Health in about a dozen counties in which the disease is the most serious, the last being that of Caldwell County, where nearly 50 per cent. of the people are suffering from the disease.

The cause of these resignations is the lack of money with which to combat the disease. Daily requests for inspectors come from other counties where smallpox undoubtedly exists, but the State Board has no money with which to send the inspectors, so the county authorities refuse to take any action.

The disease is becoming more virulent, and fatalities are being reported in considerable numbers. Paducah, next to Princeton, shows the largest percentage of afflicted, and the whites are becoming victims. Dr. McCormack has advanced the State Board $1,500 out of his own pocket, but refuses to do anything further.

SHOT BY HER STEP-BROTHER.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 28.—A distressing accident occurred at the residence of John P. Shannahan this afternoon, by which his fourteen-year-old daughter Nora was shot and almost instantly killed by John J. Gallagher, the seventeen-year-old son of Mrs. Shannahan by a former husband.

Gallagher was cleaning a revolver in his room when Nora came up to make the bed. In the room was another revolver that had lain unused since last Fourth of July, and which Gallagher did not know was loaded. This he took up, and, while he was explaining how it worked, the weapon was accidentally discharged, the bullet entering the girl's face under the right eye and lodging at the base of the brain. An ambulance was summoned, but the girl died before she could be taken away. Gallagher was arrested, but was later admitted to bail.

READY FOR TRAIN ROBBERS.

Armed Posse on Missouri Pacific Train Leaving Kansas City.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 28.—In anticipation of a hold-up, six local policemen in citizens' clothes and a number of Pinkerton detectives occupied the express car on the Missouri Pacific passenger train leaving Kansas City at 9 P. M. for St. Louis.

The officials of the road had, it is said, received information that an attempt would be made to rob the train. The officials refused to make known the point at which the attack was expected to take place. Up to mid night no report had been received in this city from the fortified train.

Leeds and Cracker Neck, desolate places situated in the woods a few miles out of Kansas City on the Missouri Pacific, were the favorite stamping grounds of the James Bryan gang and the gang that more recently worked out of Kansas City under John (Quail Hunter) Kennedy, whose seventeen-year sentence to the penitentiary for robbing a train at Macomb, Mo., has just been affirmed.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

PROVIDENCE, Jan. 28.—Fire practically destroyed the bakery of J. H. Althans, corner of Brook and John Streets, to-day. The loss on the building will be about $10,000, and on the contents about an equal amount.

POLICE KILL SAFE BLOWERS.

Quincy (Ill.) Officers End the Careers of Two Burglars and Wound a Third.

QUINCY, Ill., Jan. 28.—Quincy police officers last night killed two expert safe blowers, supposed to be from Chicago, and seriously wounded another. The men are believed to be the same who recently operated in Galesburg, Freeport, and other Illinois cities, making a specialty of cracking safes in building and loan association offices.

On Jan. 6 the safe in the offices of the Adams County Building and Loan Association in this city was blown open at the noon hour, and cash and securities amounting to $20,000 taken. Saturday last three men came to Moecker's Hotel, two of them registering from Kansas City. The proprietor suspected them, and warned the police, and when one of the men went out he was shadowed by Detective George Koch. The officer finally asked the suspect to go to the station and explain himself. The man drew a pistol and pointed it at the officer's heart, but as he did so, Koch drew his own pistol and fired four shots. Three took effect, and the man fell dead. This occurred at 11 o'clock Saturday night in front of the Newcomb Hotel.

Meanwhile officers had examined the baggage of the suspected men, and found it included burglars' tools, skeleton keys, dynamite sticks, and nitro-glycerine. When the other two men returned to the hotel at 2 o'clock this morning they found the hotel surrounded by officers. They ran into the hotel saloon and loaded their revolvers. Then ensued a running fight in the hotel corridor. One man reached the street, pursued by Chief of Police John Ahearn. He turned to fire, and as he did so Ahearn sent a bullet crashing through his skull. He died in a few minutes. The third man was shot on the stairs by Officer Charnhorst, and sank to the floor with a broken hip. He refused to say who his accomplices were.

When the men came here Jan. 5 they registered as J. M. Burt and H. F. Crowley. Saturday Burt was registered as C. H. Rogers. From letters found on his person it appears he also used the name of C. H. Prince of Chicago. The wounded man refused to give his name.

KEEPING UP PIG IRON PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

READING, Penn., Jan. 28.—A number of furnace men in Eastern Pennsylvania are, it is said, storing pig iron, because consumers decline to pay the prices asked by the producers. It is reported that 3,000 tons have been stored at Birdsborough, Berks County, and that other furnaces have large quantities of pig put away as a measure to maintain present prices. The railroad men say immense quantities of iron, as much as at any time the past year, are being shipped now.

KILLED IN FIRE AND RUNAWAY.

Two Victims of a Peculiar Double Accident in Muncie, Ind.

MUNCIE, Ind., Jan. 28.—Two lives were lost as the result of a fire which to-night destroyed the residence of William Miller, four miles west of here. Miller's two-year-old grandchild was smothered to death.

Frank Stephens, who was driving past with his wife, discovered the fire and jumped from the buggy to alarm the Miller family. The horses became frightened, and Mrs. Stephens was thrown from the buggy, sustaining fatal injuries.

CATHOLIC PRIEST SUSPENDED.

Was Too Radical in Advocacy of Temperance Measures.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Jan. 28.—The Rev. Father George Zurcher of St. Joseph's Church at Buffalo Plains has been suspended from his charge by Bishop Quigley because of a "notorious disobedience, not to say defiance, of the ordinary of the diocese during the Bishop's absence in Europe."

Father Zurcher has been in conflict with the diocesan authorities on several occasions within the last few months, owing to his strong advocacy of temperance measures which were considered too radical and a sermon preached by him on All Souls' Day, in which he stated that there was nothing in the canons of the Church that compelled its adherents to send in contributions of money on that day in order that their friends should be remembered in the masses said for the dead.

MANY CHINAMEN TO BE TRIED.

Batch of 74 in Fargo, N. D., Charged with Violating Exclusion Act.

FARGO, N. D., Jan. 28.—The trial of the Chinamen, who have been in jail here two or three months awaiting a hearing on the charge of violating the exclusion act, will commence to-morrow. United States District Attorney Rourke has been in Green Bay, Chicago, and other points for some time taking testimony. There are seventy-four Celestials here who have been in jail some time, another has been held for a longer period awaiting deportation, and the colony was increased yesterday by the arrival of Jung On, who was caught this week attempting to cross into the United States at Porta.

District Attorney Rourke has apparently unearthed a plot by which the Mongolians who return to their native country permanently sell their passports, and by substitution of photographs many illegal entries are made.

FIRE TEAM IN A TRENCH.

Driver and Centre Horse of Three Seriously Injured.

Going west at a high rate of speed through Forty-third Street to a fire last night Driver Timothy Donovan of Engine No. 65 drove his three-horse team into the trench at Seventh Avenue, where the work of introducing the sub-trolley is under way. The centre horse was injured so seriously that it will have to be shot. Donovan was thrown fifteen feet and was seriously hurt. He was taken to Roosevelt Hospital.

Donovan saw his peril in time to apply the brakes, and the engine was stopped on the brink of the excavation. Had it been otherwise the three horses would have been crushed under the heavy weight of the engine.

There was until a few days ago a fairly strong bridge over the excavation. For some reason it was taken away, and the substitute left was so weak that the weight of the three horses carried it down with a crash. Donovan noticed when about 30 feet away that a change had been made, and not wishing to take a chance, applied the brake with all his power in the effort to stop and take the bridge at a walk.

Engine No. 65 is located in Forty-third Street, near Fifth Avenue.

Higher Prices for Baby Carriages.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Jan. 28.—Manufacturers of baby carriages and children's wagons will soon advance prices. Representatives of the Toledo Metal Wheel Company and the Gendron Iron Wheel Company of Toledo, the American Rattan Company of St. Louis, and the Wilkinson Toy and Carriage Company of Troy, N. Y., held a secret meeting here Saturday, at which a 30 per cent. increase was agreed upon. Those interested deny any intentions of forming a combination, but say a uniform advance is necessitated by the increased price of iron.

American Art Study in Paris.

PARIS, Jan. 28.—The American National Institute, just founded in Paris for the study of art, has secured a new honorary committee, composed of many prominent French litterateurs and artists. The list of names includes MM. Jules Cambon, Heredia, Sully-Prudhomme, Massenet, Benjamin Constant, and Carolus-Duran.

B'NAI B'RITH LODGE MEETS.

The Biennial Session Is in Progress in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 28.—The Grand Lodge of Improved Order B'nai B'rith went into biennial conclave this morning at Masnherchor Hall. The sessions will continue to-morrow. The order was founded in 1887, and held annual conventions until 1898, from which time it was decided to hold biennial sessions.

The Grand Lodge officers are: Supreme President—Ralph Sachs, Baltimore; First Supreme Vice President—Solomon S. Schloss, Baltimore; Second Supreme Vice President—Simon Spardau, New York City; Supreme Guide—Herman Baumgarten, Washington; Supreme Secretary—Moses Kats, Baltimore; Supreme Treasurer—Kaufman Katz, Baltimore.

The session opened with the reading of the Supreme President's message, reports of the Secretary, Treasurer, Executive Committee, and Endowment Committee.

The report of the President showed that, although the condition of the order was not as flourishing as had been hoped for, there was promise of unprecedented progress in the coming two years; the membership had been reduced to about 1,500, the report said, but the time was not far distant when the rolls of the order would show 5,000 names.

A banquet was served late in the afternoon to the delegates and their families. Prominent representatives of kindred Jewish organizations were guests. Moses Moses of Baltimore, the venerable founder of the order, was also present.

Delegates representing all the lodges of the order are attending the convention from Baltimore, Washington, Chicago, Boston, and New York.

GOLD DEMOCRATS AND BRYAN.

S. P. Sheerin Thinks It Impossible for Them to Support Him.

S. P. Sheerin of Indianapolis, who was Secretary of the Democratic National Committee in the campaign of 1892, was at the Fifth Avenue Hotel last night. Mr. Sheerin retired from politics after the National Convention of 1896, and for the last four years has devoted his time exclusively to business. When asked if he believed that many Gold Democrats of prominence would follow W. Bourke Cockran's example and come out for Bryan, Mr. Sheerin said:

"Unquestionably many Gold Democrats would vote for Bryan if anti-imperialism were made the issue and free silver cut out. This, however, is almost an impossibility, and as there do not seem to be many chances of promoting harmony unless this is done, it appears to me that Gold Democrats will again be forced outside the breastworks. I'm out of politics, however, and my judgment may not be considered specially valuable."

TO DR. M'GLYNN'S MEMORY

Clergymen of Various Denominations Pay Tribute to the Priest.

Dr. Burtsell, Dr. Rainsford, Rabbi Wise, and Father Ducey Speak at the Academy of Music.

Despite the inclement weather the Academy of Music was fairly well filled last evening at the Father McGlynn memorial meeting, held under the auspices of the Rev. Dr. McGlynn Memorial Association. The exercises consisted of addresses by Roman Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish ministers, music rendered by an orchestra, and a trombone quartet, and vocal selections by Edward O'Mahony.

Sylvester L. Malone, President of the memorial association, acted as Chairman, and opened the proceedings with an address in which he paid a tribute to the memory of Father McGlynn.

He prefaced his remarks with the request that in view of the solemn nature of the meeting the audience would refrain from all applause or other demonstrations of feeling, but the request was disregarded, and some of the speakers when they advanced to the front of the platform were greeted with enthusiasm. Very frequently, too, their remarks were interrupted by applause.

The Rev. Dr. Richard L. Burtsell of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, Rondout, was the first speaker introduced by Chairman Malone. Dr. Burtsell said he met Father McGlynn in 1853 at the College of the Propaganda, in Rome, where they studied together, and there had never been any separation of heart between them to the day of his beloved friend's death. He dwelt at great length on Father McGlynn's learning, intelligence, wit, humor, and his marvelous eloquence, which, he said, was not confined to English, for he spoke Italian and Latin with equal elegance and fluency. Referring to Father McGlynn's deposition from and reinstatement to the priesthood he said:

"When he heard from the Papal delegate the admission that his teachings had not ne doctrines of the Catholic Church he felt repaid for all that he had endured. Ah, woe to the Church if ever the priest should be prohibited from going among the people and helping them to solve their problems, and woe to the State if ever the priest is not permitted to actively interest himself in the welfare of the State." [Applause.]

The Rev. Dr. W. S. Rainsford of St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church delivered a vigorous address that won him the frequently manifested sympathy of the audience.

"Though not all of us are members of this same branch of the Christian Church as Father McGlynn, nor all believers in the economic doctrines in which he thought he had found a panacea for humanity's ills," he said, "we meet together on the broad ground of fellowship to pay a tribute to a great, good, and brave man. What the age wants is brave men. It's mighty hard to find to-day men who will come out before they have gauged their company and say what is true. All honor to Dr. McGlynn for the profound Christian truth that made his life the power for good it was in the community. When a suitable monument shall have been raised to him, let the motto in all reverence be

"'For this cause was I born, for this cause came I into the world to bear witness to the truth.'

"It is the price men are prepared to pay for the truth that should be the standard by which we honor their memory. Father McGlynn gave up everything for what he believed to be the right. Placed between the alternative of remaining mute or losing all, his answer came: 'So help me God, I will let everything go but truth.' We are sorry not for the man who is gone, but for those who maligned him."

John McMackin, Commissioner of Labor Statistics, in a eulogy said: "The downtrodden hailed him as a new Moses. The rich, the privileged class, looked upon him as a revolutionist, an enemy of society, and hence the cry went forth 'Society must be saved,' and saved from what—the doing of God's justice on earth, the obeying of the command of the Master, 'Thou shalt not steal.'"

Father Ducey, the next speaker, observed that when Christ preached his Sermon on the Mount he told many truths that were not acceptable to some men of his day, and are not any more acceptable to some men of the present day.

"Father McGlynn's life," he continued, "was a constant homage to and defense of true manhood. His teachings were in keeping with all that the great fathers of the Church taught, and he was as great a light of the Church in his day as Ambrose, Augustin, Chrysostom, and others were in their time.

"People are not justified in believing that enforced poverty is a blessing because two slaves of avarice and covetousness recently made addresses in a Fifth Avenue church in which they spoke of the danger of inherited wealth and the blessings of poverty. Is not this blasphemy of the deepest dye? Christ never intended that any of His creatures should be degraded and made social outcasts by pauperism. Father McGlynn had a heart and an intellect, but, thank God, he lacked servility to any man."

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise said he had come there in the enforced absence of Rabbi Gottheil to testify to the reverence, affection, and love in which those of the Jewish faith held Father McGlynn. "We honor him for that he stood for the truth and defended the right," he said. "If all the world were made up of Father McGlynns there would be no persecution of the Jews such as prevails in Europe. [Applause.] Father McGlynn said of Henry George that he was a man sent of God, and in the same spirit we say that there was a man sent of God, and he was Father McGlynn."

Rabbi Wise told how twenty years ago Father McGlynn from his own depleted purse furnished the wherewithal to complete a synagogue in East Twenty-ninth Street that the Jews were building and found they could not finish for lack of funds.

"Father McGlynn," said the Rabbi, "thus enabled men of an alien faith to worship God in their synagogue according to their lights. That is why I say that he was not only a priest of the Roman Catholic Church but of that larger church in which all men worship and are bound together in the eyes of God the Father."

THIS WEEK IN CONGRESS.

Currency Bill Will Occupy Time of the Senate—Quay's Case Goes Over—No House Programme.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—Senators Bacon and Tillman have given notice of speeches during the present week upon the Philippine question, but beyond these notices no indication has been given of the probable course of events in the Senate during the week. The Currency bill continues to hold the right of way, and it is not improbable that it will be made the subject of more or less speechmaking.

It is also quite certain that during the early part of the week there will be a change in the elective offices in the Senate and that in accordance with the decision of the Republican caucus of last week Mr. Bennett will be installed as Secretary and Mr. Ransdell as Sergeant at Arms.

Senator Jones of Arkansas, will continue, in executive session, his effort to secure reconsideration of the Samoan treaty, but this motion will be resisted by the Republicans.

There is a tacit understanding that the Quay contest will not be taken up until after the disposition of the Currency bill.

There is no programme mapped out for the House this week. The Indian Appropriation bill has been reported and the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill is in preparation. It is expected that these bills will occupy the major portion of the week.

Insane Man Kills Wife and Children.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 28.—In an "Over the Rhine" tenement to-day Charles Bartruff, a tanner, murdered his wife, his son Carl, aged five, and his daughter, aged three, and then tried to set the house on fire by overturning the hot stove and piling furniture on it. The skulls of all the victims were crushed with a blunt instrument. Bartruff remained in the burning room until arrested by the police. It is asserted that he is insane.

Aged Woman Killed by a Fall.

Mrs. Anna M. Benning, seventy-five years old, of 157 Oakland Avenue, Jersey City, while descending the stairs yesterday missed her footing and fell from the second to the first floor. Her son, who went to her aid, found her unconscious. Dr. Martin, who was summoned, said Mrs. Benning had suffered a compound fracture of the skull. She died an hour later without recovering consciousness.

MRS. HETNER'S THREE WILLS.

Long Island City Woman's Grandchildren May Contest Any One Offered for Probate.

When the estate of Mary E. Hetner comes up for division and her will is offered for probate there will probably be a contest, as she appears to have had a habit of making wills. It is expected that some time during the week there will be a will offered for probate before Surrogate Daniel Noble.

Mrs. Hetner died on Thursday. She was eighty years of age and lived at 13 Borden Avenue, Long Island City. Her next of kin are Mrs. Rosa Krider, a sister living at Philadelphia, and George and Joseph Hetner, her grandchildren. George is blind and is a piano teacher. He lives at 302 Vernon Avenue, Long Island City. Joseph is a plumber and lives at 231 Nott Avenue.

George Hetner, son of Mrs. Hetner, made a comfortable fortune in the cigar and tobacco business in Long Island City. He died in 1891 and left an estate valued at about $14,000 in trust for his mother for her use during her lifetime, and also provided that upon her death his estate was to revert to his nephews, George and Joseph.

Some years ago Joseph Hetner borrowed $3,000 from his grandmother, and with it built a house, upon which she took a mortgage. About that time Mrs. Hetner made a will in which she bequeathed the estate between the brothers except for a legacy of $500 which she left to her sister. It was provided that from Joseph's share should be deducted the $3,000 and any interest due at the time of the settlement of the estate, thus making an equal division.

This will stood for some time and then she made a new one. She had given her sister $300 in cash and therefore left her out of the new will. She then provided for an equal division of the estate between the two men, but about the time the will was made she transferred the mortgage upon his house to Joseph. This cleared him of the debt and he therefore would divide equally with George the remainder of the estate.

Things stood in that way until Dec. 10 last, when ex-Judge L. N. Manley was summoned to Mrs. Hether and directed to make another will. The third will wiped Joseph out of participation entirely. It left everything to George. Neither brother appears to have known of the existence and provisions of this will.

Shortly before her death Mrs. Hetner presented to George a bag of diamonds. She knew she was going to die, and according to the story told by her attendant, she caused a box in which she kept her valuables to be brought to her and then took the diamonds and presented them to George. It appears to have been understood that these were to have gone to Mrs. Hetner's sister.

In case the third will is presented, Joseph will probably contest it on the ground that the testator was not mentally capable. In case George has to make the fight it will probably be on the ground that undue influence was used to cause Will No. 2 to be made and to have the mortgage canceled and annulled. The second will was drawn by Surrogate Noble some years ago.

DOUBTS SPANISH SPY'S STORY.

Secretary Long Thinks Little of the Latest Version of the Destruction of the Maine.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—Secretary of the Navy Long said to-night that he had not heard of the story about the destruction of the Maine, published to-day in The New York Herald upon the authority of an alleged spy of the Spanish Government, whose affidavits allege that the destruction of the vessel was brought about by arrangement and by the explosion of a submarine mine operated from Fuerza Battery.

"A great many stories of this sort have been mentioned to me from time to time," said Mr. Long, "but little attention has been given to them. If this latest one is of any importance it has not been brought to my attention. If Commander Wainwright has thought it worthy of attention he has not communicated the fact to me, and if I find that it is worthy of investigation I shall ask Commander Wainwright to tell me about it.

"Up to the present time I have had only the most indefinite accounts of this discovery. I first heard of it about ten days ago from a newspaper man, and I have not heard of it since. If it had been a serious story I believe I should have been informed of it."

TESTIMONIAL FROM FIREMEN.

Men Overcome in Fifty-ninth Street Would Reward Mrs. Madden.

The firemen who were overcome at the recent fire in West Fifty-ninth Street are getting up a testimonial for Mrs. J. Madden, the janitress of 312 and 314 West Fifty-ninth Street, next door to the scene of the fire. The firemen state that Mrs. Madden made many gallons of hot coffee and milk for them, which was distributed to the men in the burning building by Miss Minnie Swarts, the heroine of the fire, who refused a purse from Commissioner Scannell.

Firemen overcome by smoke were taken into Mrs. Madden's rooms. Here their boots were taken off and their feet rubbed with alcohol and dry socks put on them. What form the firemen's testimonial will take has not yet been decided upon. It is said that a purse to recompense Mrs. Madden for her considerable outlay will be presented.

MORE DELAY IN POISON TRIAL.

Juror Brown Will Not be Able to Attend Court To-day.

It will not be possible for the Molineux case to go on this morning, as Juror Manheim Brown, who has been ill with rheumatism, will not be well enough to attend. Dr. Sigmund Tynberg said late last night concerning his patient:

"While Mr. Brown has about recovered he will not attend court to-morrow morning. Owing to the uncertain state of the weather, I have advised him, as a precautionary measure, to remain at home. Should the weather be favorable, he will be in the jury box Tuesday."

COLOMBIAN REBELS TRICKED.

Fled When Told German Steamer Brought Government Troops.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Jan. 28.—From reports brought by the Hamburg steamer Volumnia it appears that the arrival of the vessel at Tumaco, Colombia, where she touched on the way up, had the effect of saving the place from capture by Colombian rebels. The latter had demanded the surrender of the town, and the Governor was at his wits' end. Just then the Volumnia was sighted.

The Governor then sent a defiant message to the revolutionists, and told them that the steamer off port was bringing 500 Government troops. The trick succeeded, and the rebels abandoned their purpose to capture Tumaco.

TO IMPROVE LONG BEACH.

Plan to Make an All-the-Year-Round Resort of the Place.

The Long Beach Association, of which Paul K. Ames is the receiver, holds an eighteen months' option to purchase from the town of Hempstead five miles of the beaches along the town's water front at $25,000, and may sell this to a corporation which is forming. It is said this company will have a million dollars capital. It will, it is said, take hold of this property and also buy up all the Long Beach leases, options, and improvements, including the hotel and cottages.

The purpose is to create an all-the-year-round resort. Long Beach is seven miles in length. The Long Beach Association's option includes five-sevenths of the island, a tract extending from East Rockaway Inlet to Point Lookout Life Saving Station, and comprises about 1,000 acres of beach land, with its five miles of ocean front.

Long Beach Channel, Inner Beach Lead, and other channels bound the property on the north. These interior waterways will be greatly improved. They will be dredged where it is necessary to secure a greater depth of water, the shore will be graveled where necessary, in order to create a beach, and docks and bulkheads will be built.

Streets about half a mile long extending from the interior waterway to the ocean are to be laid out and building sites sold. With each lot will go the privilege of a common ocean and inside water front. The company will also erect houses.

It is the intention of the syndicate to commence operations on the beach next September, the preliminary work being done during the Summer.

TOURIST, THIEVES' VICTIM

David E. McClure Killed by Chloral "Knock-Out" Dose.

A SCOTCHMAN WITH MEANS

He Had Been Beaten and Was Found by the Police Unconscious in Brooklyn.

David E. McClure, twenty-eight years old, who, it is believed, lived in Glasgow, Scotland, died yesterday morning in the Homeopathic Hospital, Brooklyn, from the effects of "knock-out" drops. He also showed evidences of having been beaten. It is believed by the police that he fell into the hands of thieves, who, after dosing and beating him, robbed him of his money and jewelry.

McClure occupied lodgings at the house of Mrs. H. Holland, at 51 Concord Street, Brooklyn. From what can be learned of him, it appears that he was in this country on a sight-seeing tour. Mrs. Holland understood from conversations she had with him that he had traveled a great deal in all parts of the world. He sailed from Scotland for New York on Nov. 27 last on the Anchor Line steamship Tainui. He told Mrs. Holland that on his arrival here he put up at a hotel in Manhattan, but got tired of paying $8 a day for board and moved over to the house in Brooklyn. That was six weeks ago.

McClure on Friday night last was arrested by the police of the Adams Street Station on a charge of intoxication. When arraigned in court he was discharged. He returned to his lodgings, and remained there, Mrs. Holland says, until about 9 o'clock Saturday night, when he went out.

Mrs. Holland at 2:30 o'clock yesterday morning, was summoned to the Homeopathic Hospital. There she found McClure, dying. He had sent for her, but was unconscious when she reached the hospital and died without regaining consciousness.

According to the police reports McClure was picked up on the street in the vicinity of Fulton Ferry at 1:30 o'clock yesterday morning. One side of his head was badly bruised, and he was in a delirious condition. In a lucid moment he told the police that he had been beaten and robbed by thieves. No further information could be obtained from him.

McClure brought a lot of baggage to his lodging house with him. His personal effects were of a character to indicate that he was a man of means. Mrs. Holland said that her lodger always appeared to be plentifully supplied with money; that he received remittances regularly from Scotland, and that he had opened an account at the Brooklyn Savings Bank. On Wednesday last, she said, he deposited $50 there.

From letters and papers found among McClure's effects it is believed that his home was at 6 Florentine Terrace, Hill Head, Glasgow, Scotland. On the supposition that McClure's near relatives live there, Mrs. Holland last evening cabled to that address the fact of his death, requesting instructions as to the disposal of the body.

So far as is known, McClure had no relatives or friends in this city.

It was at first thought that McClure's death was due to the beating he had undoubtedly received, but an autopsy which was performed last night developed the fact that the immediate cause of his death was chloral, given to him, as is believed, as "knockout" drops.

Detectives from the local Central Office and the Fulton Street Station were at work last night trying to locate the place where McClure received the fatal dose.

OUR GROWING EASTERN TRADE.

Gain of 256 Per Cent. in Exports and But 36 Per Cent. in Imports Within the Past Decade.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—A report on our Asiatic trade prepared by Frank H. Hitchcock, Chief of the Foreign Markets Section of the Agricultural Department, shows that there has been a great development of our trade with China and Japan during the past decade. Record figures were easily reached in the fiscal year 1899, when the value of the merchandise exchanged with these two countries, including the port of Hongkong, reached $87,305,688, against only $46,294,167 in 1889. The four years following 1889 witnessed a steady increase that finally culminated in 1893 with a record of $60,281,386, the highest up to that time. In the fiscal year 1894, during which our importations were greatly curtailed as a result of a prevailing financial depression, the trade dropped to $51,513,149, and thereafter rose steadily by leaps and bounds.

Of the $87,305,688 valuation placed upon our trade with Japan, China, and Hongkong during 1899, $47,815,035 represented the imports into the United States and $39,490,653 the exports from this country. The excess of imports over exports amounted to $8,324,382. In 1889 the imports were valued at $35,196,670 and the exports at $11,097,497, a difference of $24,099,173. These figures show that in the decade ended with 1899 there was a gain of $28,398,156, or 256 per cent. in exports, while the increase in imports amounted to only $12,618,365, or 36 per cent. During the last few years, in fact, the imports disclosed an actual falling off, the value for 1899 being $1,164,131 less than that for 1896, which was recorded at $48,979,166. Our exports, on the other hand, more than doubled during the three years succeeding 1896.

During the years 1889-1899 our imports from Japan advanced from $16,687,092 to $26,716,493, and the exports from $4,619,985 to $17,264,688. In the last few years there was a remarkable growth of exports. From $7,689,685 in 1896, the value of exported merchandise rose to $13,255,478 in 1897, and to $20,388,420 in 1898. The value for 1899, $17,264,688, although somewhat less than that for 1898, was larger than any previous record.

In our commerce with China during 1889-1899 there was a gain of $13,293,168. The increase occurred almost entirely in the export trade, which advanced from $2,791,128 in 1889 to $14,493,440 in 1899. Our imports for 1899, amounting to $18,619,268, were only slightly larger than in 1898, when a value of $17,028,412 was reported. The exports to China, like those to Japan, showed an exceptional growth in 1897, 1898, and in 1899.

Our trade with Hongkong, although less important than that credited directly to China, was almost doubled during 1889-90. Exports for 1899 were $7,732,525, as compared with only $3,896,334 for 1889. The imports were considerably smaller and showed marked fluctuations. In 1889 they were valued at $1,480,266, but these figures were not equaled again until 1895, when a value of $2,479,274 was recorded.

Our exports to the countries mentioned consisted chiefly of cotton, cotton goods, kerosene oil, wheat flour, and manufactures of iron and steel, the value of these five classes of articles exported aggregating in 1898 nearly 80 per cent. of the total exports to China, Japan, and Hongkong. Japan took nearly all the raw cotton, while cotton manufactures went quite as largely to China. All three took kerosene oil in large quantities. The exports of wheat flour almost trebled during the decade, exports for Japan actually rising from 19,677 barrels in 1889 to 161,654 barrels in 1898, while Hongkong the latter year took 139,053 barrels, against 378,634 in 1889. China's direct flour importations were small.

The gain in exports of iron and steel was very rapid in 1896, 1897, and 1898, most of the exports going to Japan, which took $3,195,152 worth in 1898, out of a total for the year of $3,713,867. For 1899 the iron and steel exports to the three places named were only $519,212. Generally speaking, it may be stated that the figures show that the gain in our Asiatic exports has been nearly all made in the last five years.

Aside from the five classes mentioned the chief exports have been paper, alcohol, tobacco, leather, lubricating oils, lumber, and scientific apparatus. Of the imports silk and tea made up 70 per cent. of the total, Japan sending most of the former and China most of the latter. Silk imports were $23,950,935 in 1898 and tea imports $8,896,836. In that year we imported $16,453,406 worth of raw silk and $2,068,648 worth of silk manufactures from Japan, while from China came $7,506,409 in raw silk and only $135,906 in silk manufactures.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CREED

The Rev. Dr. W. S. Crowe Says It Did Not Originate in Boston.

A PROBLEM IN ANCIENT ROME

The Preacher Formulates a Rule for Judging the Two Theories of Matter and Spirit.

Bad weather materially affected the attendance at the Church of the Eternal Hope, in West Eighty-first Street, last evening, when the Rev. Dr. W. S. Crowe lectured on "Christian Science." Those who were present, however, seemed to enjoy the manner in which he approached the new creed as applied to healing, and more than once faintly audible expressions of approval rippled through the church. He disavowed any intention other than to present both sides of his subject. At the very close, however, when asking that due attention be paid to the collection, he remarked: "You see, I believe in material things." Dr. Crowe said in part, as follows:

"Christian science, or mental science, in so far as they are one, as a philosophy is one phase of a philosophic problem that has dominated the ages. Romans were struggling with it long before Boston was founded. Practically the Christian Science explanation of a mighty problem has been given and opposed by the contrary solution in every age throughout the history of intelligence. Is mind a real thing and matter but an appearance, or is matter a real thing and mind but an appearance? With almost the regularity of a pendulum philosophy swung to one extreme or the other across the primitive fields of speculation.

"The rule by which to form what will nearly always be a safe conclusion when you are confronted by two theories of matter and spirit which contradict each other is to accept all that both theories affirm and reject all that both theories deny. The complete truth will be what both sides affirm, and the sum of error will be the denials of both. It is a kind of celestial instinct that when the human mind is in an affirmative mood it has truth for its companion.

"But I do not understand why a theorist must always deny something. Why can't he go on and tell what he knows and what he believes, and stop? They always will insist on saying that nothing else is true. Hobbes tells me as I look about this house that the house is real and I am a fiction. Berkeley tells me that I am here and the house is not—that I simply project my thoughts outward into the form of a house. That would be a cheap way to build a house. I cannot understand why any man should be without a house if that is the way to circumvent real estate agents. Kant says your soul and your body are both genuine, and that matter, spirit, and God are realities."

Referring to those who insist that mind and morality depend on perfect physical health the minister said: "The mighty souls of William of Orange and Luxembourg dragged their weak bodies over the earth and the earth trembled; Buckle never knew the joy of health, although he wrote out the history of human thought." To another class who hold that right thinking and pure emotions must give bodily health he said that every successful physician, however materialistic, practiced mental science to an extent, as was shown by their kindly falsehoods day after day when entering the sick room. "We all of us, when we are not theorizing, recognize the reality of both mind and matter," he exclaimed.

Another theory that diseases produce wrong thinking and impure emotions, Dr. Crowe declared was just as wrong as anything could possibly be. "If there ever was a man of lofty mind and pure thought who trod the rocks of Manhattan, it was Dr. Chapin," he said. "It simply will not do to say that he became impure before he became an invalid. If diseases prove the degradation of the soul, then health must prove the celestial quality of the soul. See where the logic will take you. What splendor of mind, what unerring wisdom, what fine grasp of spiritual and interior truth, what sanctity of life must belong to James Corbett, prize fighter and saloon keeper. An angel in disguise! It must be so, for they say that his health is simply perfect.

"A generation ago, when Darwinism was becoming popularized and the American people began to appreciate the sway of material forces and laws and to understand the facts of heredity and environment, and to lose faith in miracles and prophets, there came a great revolt in religious belief and a fast sinking down into materialism, until human life was regarded very much as the Orientals regard it and picture it, as a link in an endless chain which wends forth down through matter and up through faith. Confidence in spiritual realities a generation ago was befalling rapidly extinguished. The world could not go back to the age of miracles, and it could not deny the facts of material science. What was it to do? It could never again renew its confidence in spiritual realities unless it went forward into a spirit science or a mind science.

"It must come to understand that the expression of natural law is a subtle expression. It has two meanings. It is a law of the spirit as well as a law of matter. It must come to understand that the great word 'force' has two meanings. It means soul force as well as chemical force. I am glad to say that I am profoundly grateful to Christian Scientists and Mental Scientists and Theosophists and all other extremists who are teaching the modern world to believe in the power of the human soul. I speak of the facts of material science, but I part company with materialists when they deny the reality of spiritual things. My notion of it is that this is a double universe, material and spiritual, and that the two individual halves of it intersphere with constant action and reaction, and my mind is open and my heart is open and I want to know everything that scientists can teach me."

FRIEND OF LINCOLN TALKS.

J. H. Littlefield's Reminiscences in Plymouth Church—Beecher's Work.

John H. Littlefield entertained the congregation of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, last evening by narrating his personal recollections of Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Littlefield studied law under Lincoln, and practiced in his office during the year preceding his election to the Presidency. Mr. Littlefield was in Washington and in close personal touch with Lincoln during the whole of the latter's Administration.

"I consider it an honor to stand here," said Mr. Littlefield. "The two men I loved better than any other two men were Abraham Lincoln and Henry Ward Beecher. I knew Beecher well, and do not believe that justice has ever been done to his memory. He will be more reverenced fifty years hence. He it was who liberated theology. Abraham Lincoln, Gettysburg, the Monitor, and Henry Ward Beecher were the four forces which saved the Nation at the time of the rebellion."

Mr. Littlefield described Lincoln's personality, and related many interesting and amusing anecdotes of him. He told of a letter which Lincoln received from a young woman in Buffalo, in which she said:

"If you will allow your whiskers to grow I think I can get three votes for you, those of father and my two brothers. They say now that they will not vote for such a homely man as you are."

Referring to the religious side of Lincoln's life, Mr. Littlefield said that, as far as he knew, Lincoln did not attend a church in Springfield, but he believed him, nevertheless, to have been a most religious man.

You Can't Beat These Black Silks.

Faint-heartedness at the vital moment would have lost these values to you. Our buyer bought at the right time. He did not hesitate to place orders when raw silk was at the lowest ebb of the market. His merchant's prescience and sound judgment convinced him that prices would advance. Raw silk is now fluctuating between $6.25 and $7.00 per pound. But so long as our present stock lasts you may buy the finished product on the basis of raw silk at $4.50 a pound. That was its price when we bought these:

Pongee Silks, not a mongrel, all silk, peculiarly adapted for Summer dresses—nothing better to wear when traveling, 32 in., value 75c; our price . . . 49c

It's a brilliant, iridescent, beautiful miscellany of foreign and domestic productions—$1.19.

FATHER DUCEY'S BIRTHDAY.

Tells His Congregation He Will be Fifty-seven Next Sunday.

The Rev. Father Ducey, pastor of St. Leo's Church, informed his congregation yesterday that he would tell them something that he had not told them before during his twenty-odd years as pastor of the church. He said he would tell them when his next birthday would be. He said there would be the usual monthly envelope collection for the church on Sunday next and that the day would mark his fifty-seventh year of life.

"I will be fifty-seven years old on Sunday," said Father Ducey with a smile. "I will accept any donations offered to me as birthday gifts, and on the Sunday following I shall let you know what I shall do with the money. But don't forget that the envelope collection and my birthday come together."

Baseball Cup for Harvard "Scrubs."

This series will be continued under the same rules as usual, under the management of R. S. Hale, Capt. Reid, and H. H. Murdock, who is assistant manager of the nine. The effect of the series is to be to bring out as many men as possible, so that material can be chosen for the class and 'Varsity nines.

Traveling Salesman Stricken.

Col. Lawrence Rhoades, a traveling salesman from Providence, R. I., who has been staying the past week at the Metropolitan Hotel, was stricken with apoplexy late last night in his room. At 10:20 o'clock his condition became so serious that an ambulance was summoned, and he was removed to the New York Hospital. At a late hour last night he was still living. Col. Rhoades is fifty-eight years old.

RAINSTORM STRIKES THE CITY.

YOU don't care when we take our annual inventory, and we do not bother to tell you anything about it, as a rule. But this year we shall be stricter with ourselves, and the stockmen must be very sure not to hold on to a piece of goods at a price that would need reducing after February first—the inventory time.

And as the measuring and counting is well under way—getting ready for the final entry—we shall take all possible losses beforehand and sell off the broken lots to-day, to-morrow and Wednesday. Half the news will not get in the papers—because the lots as discovered will go on sale at once, and many will go out each day.

Some facts you will be interested in—

You have given the store a more prosperous year than ever—a greater volume of business, which we have been able to care for with less and less friction.

Our ideals are not reached—but you and we are working toward them. This is a very great co-operation—the building of a business for careful people; a store that shall value quality above all else; that has grown large enough to be the strongest single factor in many markets, and that consequently can give, and is giving,

The Really Lowest Prices Known to New York

Yet no store shall excel it as a style setter, nor show such a range of exclusive and elegant things along with its great stocks of every-day merchandise.

50c Cotton-and-Silk Foulards, 25c

Told of them last Monday—how two hundred and four styles of this really fine dress stuff had come to us, and should go to you, at half price. We had a hundred and nine thousand yards—sixty-two miles—a mass entirely too large to open and show at one time.

The last cases have just been opened, and this final display is maybe best of all.

We devote the Tenth-street aisle to the goods and to the comfort of you who come for them to-day.

This fabric is half silk, but is classed with the cottons because the silk is its decorative feature. Depend on it, we can get no more at the price—the mill-men are busy enough now selling it at full value. They don't let us use their trade-name for this lot we bought at half—but a rose by any other name would smell as sweet.

Tenth street side.

A Sale of Reception Lamps The owner wished to sell these quickly. He named a low figure. We were prompt and secured the lot. They're displayed in the main aisle, first floor, and in the basement, to-day. Not enough of them; hence, come promptly, if you'd get one.

Three groups, that are valued and priced thus—

The $6 to $8 kinds are $4

The $8.50 to $12 kinds are $6

The $12 to $15 kinds are $7.50

Main floor, Center aisle, and Basement.

Silks---Short Pieces---Half Prices

Do you know we have over eleven hundred pieces of silk that must be classed as "remnants" despite all our care?

The longest is eight yards. Then there are bits not over a yard long—first rate for trimmings, no doubt; but almost absolutely worthless to us.

Will you take these pieces to-day at half price?—starting at about 35c a yard (but priced by the piece)—

taffetas	satin brocades	Liberty satins
French poplins	surahs	Satin Duchesse

They will be ready at 10 o'clock.

A little group of elegant French Embroidered Silks is to be sold at $1 a yard, no matter if the fabrics did cost us two, three or four times as much.

Rotunda.

Handkerchiefs Half Prices. Or, approximately half price. What ever loss we take is simply in the interest of stock-straightening—the handkerchiefs are perfect; are of our regular stock—

Men's Extra-big Hemstitched Handkerchiefs—20c, 25c, 35c, 40c, 45c and 50c. Saturday they were 35c to $1.

Women's Plain Hemstitched Handkerchiefs—25c kind at 15c, 35c kind at 18c, 50c kind at 25c

There are about two hundred dozens in all—a mere bagatelle, measured by the whole business, but fine values for those who get a share.

Broadway.

New Costumes and Skirts

Fashions have changed. As noiselessly as the frost gathers on the window-pane, the eel-tight skirt has given place to less rigorous style—and a style that admits of safe variation.

The plait, widening as it runs down from the waist line; several plaits, widening in the same way, but lying very flat; a hand plait that seems to hold a transverse puckering of the skirt—take your choice.

But the cut is not half the battle in making a woman's tailored suit—it's the tailoring. And we are glad to have had most to do with raising the standard of it. The bodice or jacket is fashioned—worked into enduring good shape—by the tailors as they build it. No mere shaping of the cloth, and sewing it up, will give the effect.

Do not imagine that our authoritative position in matters of woman's dress has been gained by chance—very serious, intelligent hard work has won it. The costume chief spends well nigh half his time in Europe—is off for the Riviera as we write.

New Tailored Suits, cheviot, full silk lined, $18.

New Tailored Suits, cheviot and Venetian cloth—several styles; some introducing trimming, $26.

Others at prices running to $110.

Separate Skirts, $4 to $45.

Second Floor, Broadway.

Laces A third less than regular prices—less than our regular prices, which are apt to be least.

You'll need them for the summer dresses—you'll pay more if you wait; need them for the children's clothes and for under-garments that you make at home.

French Valenciennes Laces, 22c to 75c a dozen yards.

Platt Valenciennes Laces, 5 to 18c a yard.

Imitation Torchon Laces, 3c to 14c a yard.

Tenth street side.

Umbrella Jars Owari ware from Japan—blue-and-white pottery. By some miscalculation we bought too many. Will you take one at $1.50 instead of $2.50? We have two hundred.

Oriental Store, Basement.

Black Dress Goods---Bargains

Half price. Two-thirds price at most. Why? Stripes run wrong in many cases and we're ashamed to keep them.

Yet they are as good as brand new to the sensible woman. These are largely bayadere goods—cross stripe. This spring will demand that stripes run up-and-down. All you've got to do is to make the stuff up sidewise. The fabrics are wider than your dress skirt is long, in almost every case.

We can talk this way to you in this between-season time, but you'd not thank us for excuses or advice in April—you will want what alone will be here, new stuffs right from the loom.

Scotch Ginghams at Half Price

Not very many—ten thousands yards in all. But there is choice of seventy-four styles—quite a range of prettiness in medium colorings—and we can sell them at

12½c a yard

—although all are 25c ginghams, and we do not recognize over a dozen styles that were ever sold for less. Even they were 20c.

Both sides of the Broadway approach to the Rotunda are given to the selling.

25c Scotch Ginghams at 12½c.

Some Superior Shoes The Main Floor Shoe Store holds only shoes of assured excellence, in the best styles. And these are not priced fancifully. It's our effort, and we're successful generally, to keep prices on our high-grade shoes below those of equal quality elsewhere. And here are some instances:

For Men, shoes at $3.90. They may be had in black kidskin, box calf, enamel, patent leather, water-proof tan storm calf; all lengths and widths, and in the newest forms. We know that dozens of the best stores sell these at $5.

For women, shoes at $4. Choose of kidskin and box calf; all have welted soles with flexible insoles. An excellent value at $5

Fourth avenue and Ninth street.

Men's Sack Suits to Order Cheviots and many worsteds of which we have only a suit-length, are grouped for your easy choosing. The fabric you select will be made into a sack-coat suit and the price will be twenty dollars

—though regularly these fabrics were intended for $25 to $38 suits.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Muslin Underwear---Large Reductions

We all believe so many things in an easy indifferent way that amounts to nothing. We know that muslins and cambrics and embroideries are dearer—that, do our best, we shall pay in the ratio of $5.50 for goods that cost us $4.50 last time. In many cases the increase is still more. You believe that we know, but you do not believe actively, else this January sale—bigger than ever, as it is—would have been bigger still, or sooner over.

The very last of almost every special lot is on the counters and tables to-day. Wonder who will be lucky enough to get all they need from these heaps?

We've let the goods be their own decoration—festooned garments and hung them about in prettiest fashion. To-day, all these pieces, now soiled and mussed, are to be sold at reductions from the little prices of the month. So are lots that are broken in size. Here is the list—

TO PROVE A PROXY MARRIAGE.

Mrs. Mary Gray Mexia, Widow of a Mexican General, to Testify in the Contest of His Will.

Mrs. Mary Gray Mexia, a niece of Parke Godwin of this city, will testify to-day at Dallas, Texas, in the contest of the will of her husband, Gen. Enrique A. Mexia, a millionaire Mexican soldier and statesman. Mrs. Mexia, according to her own statement, was married to the General by proxy in this city on July 30, 1867. She is now sixty-three years old. The proxy ceremony was performed on account of the fact that Gen. Mexia was on active military service at Tampico and could not come to this city.

Since the General's death it has been alleged that he married at least two other women. One of his alleged wives is now dead, and another, according to Dallas dispatches, is living in this city. Her name is given as Mrs. Martha W. Weightman. The wife who died is said to have been Sarah R. Ramsey, widow of Col. Ramsey, United States Army. Gen. Mexia is supposed to have married her on Sept. 15, 1868, in Christ Church, Jersey City. Clarence M. Mexia, a son of this alleged marriage, is the one who started the present will contest.

Mrs. Mary Gray Mexia lived with her husband in this city and Paterson, N. J., and was generally supposed to be his only wife. The fact that her own marriage with the General was a proxy marriage has caused considerable surprise among her friends and relatives here. Her own statement is that on July 30, 1867, she went to the office of Edwin F. Corey, a Notary Public at 56 Wall Street, and a young man represented Gen. Mexia, while at Tampico a young woman was taking her place for the marriage ceremony. Dr. Navarro, the then Mexican Consul here, performed the ceremony.

Mr. Corey is now living at 30 West One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street. He can remember nothing about any such ceremony having been performed in his office. His son, George H. Corey of 200 West One Hundred and Thirtieth Street, now occupies the office. In looking over his father's records he found that on July 30, 1867, a Mrs. Mary C. Gray appeared at the office and acknowledged a power of attorney whereby she delegated certain powers to some person, not named in the records, to appear for her before some proper authority in Mexico and enter into a contract of marriage. As Mr. Corey had no power to perform the marriage ceremony, it is probable that Mrs. Mexia took the document, with that sent to her by Gen. Mexia, to Dr. Navarro, and he performed the ceremony. The Mexican Consulate in this city has no record of this act having been performed by Dr. Navarro.

Mr. Godwin, when seen at his home, 19 East Thirty-seventh Street, yesterday afternoon, said: "I am very much surprised to hear of my niece having been married to Gen. Mexia by proxy. She always went by the name of Mrs. Mexia, and there was no doubt in the minds of any of her relatives that she had been legally married to Gen. Mexia. She met Mexia in New Orleans in 1864, when he was a Colonel in the Mexican Army. I was in Europe at the time of her marriage.

"She is a singularly accomplished woman, very retiring and modest. I believe that her marriage was perfectly regular, and that there is a mistake about Gen. Mexia having married other women after he married her."

THREAT OF SUICIDE'S MOTHER.

Vows to Have Vengeance on the Man with Whom Her Daughter Left Her Home in Brooklyn.

A woman fairly well dressed and about thirty years old walked into the restaurant connected with the hotel of Henry Wulfers, at 148 East Fourteenth Street, shortly before 9 o'clock yesterday morning, seated herself at one of the tables, drew a bottle of carbolic acid from her pocket and swallowed the contents quickly. The first intimation that anything was wrong was the sound of the breaking of the bottle, which she threw on the floor after having disposed of its contents. Employes of the hotel ran to her and caught her as she was about to fall from her chair. They held her until Patrolman Winkelman of the Fifth Street Police Station had called an ambulance from Bellevue Hospital, to which institution she was taken. She died there an hour later.

Mrs. Eliza McKean of 161 South Eighth Street, Brooklyn, accompanied by two daughters, called at the Morgue last night and identified the woman's body as that of Mrs. Fannie Leslie, thirty years old, of 1,090 Broadway, Brooklyn, her daughter. The three women became hysterical when they saw the body, and the mother said that she had warned her daughter. "She has been murdered by the attentions of that villain," she cried.

Mrs. McKean said that her daughter had left home in company with an athlete well known in New York clubs. This was the last seen of her by the family. The elder of the two daughters begged her mother not to say anything more. "I will tell it all," replied the mother. "I will tell all about this villain." The daughters urged her not to talk any more, but she persisted and one of the daughters slapped her mother in the face.

Morgue Keeper Fayne finally quieted the women and the three left together, the mother vowing that she would have vengeance on the man, who, she said, had caused her daughter's death. Arrangements were made for the removal of the body.

THE HOWARD AUCTION SALE.

Mr. Smith Says Authenticity of Collection Has Been Proved.

C. E. Smith of the Knickerbocker Auction Company said yesterday that he had received a letter from R. B. Tippett & Brother, a Baltimore law firm, which removed all doubt as to the authenticity of the antique furniture and other articles which the company has sold in this city, advertising the collection as having been made by John Eager Howard of Revolutionary fame and taken from his homestead at Claremont, near Baltimore. Doubt was cast upon the alleged history of the collection by The Baltimore Sun, which caused Mr. Smith to employ the Baltimore law firm to make an investigation.

Mr. Smith said in the letter which he received from the lawyers the complete chain of title of the Howard homestead and the collection was given. "The lawyers found from a search of the records," he said, "that upon the death of John Eager Howard the property reverted to Mrs. Frances Key Howard, who sold it to Carroll Spence, formerly Minister to Turkey. From him the property was transferred to John B. Morris, and it next passed into the hands of the present owner, for whom we are conducting the sale. Every one of these transfers is a matter of public record, and there can be no doubt whatever of the authenticity of the collection."

Two Overcome by Escaping Gas.

Allen Washington, thirty years old, and Carlton F. German, twenty years old, both clerks and living in the same room at 41 Washington Square South, were overcome by gas in their room yesterday afternoon, and were taken to the New York Hospital. The two men have lived in the place, which is a furnished-room house, for only two weeks, and little is known of them by the other occupants. They are expected to recover. The gas escaped from the tubing of a gas stove, which is thought to have been disconnected accidentally.

Hoboken Has a $60,000 Fire.

Fire started in Frederick Verdon's iron foundry and machine shop, Hoboken, at 5 o'clock A. M. yesterday. The flames spread through the building, a four-story brick structure, and communicated to the three-story brick building adjoining, occupied by the Floyd Oilcloth Factory. Both were destroyed. Verdon estimated his loss at $50,000. The Floyd company places its loss at $10,000. Both are covered by insurance. The cause of the fire could not be learned.

It is illustrated by maps of Greater New York, the five boroughs, Long Island, and Prospect Park.

FAST WORK ON THE SPEEDWAY.

Mr. Croker's Gelding Chanty Shows Speed in Several Brushes—The Spectators Enthusiastic.

Several of the most spirited races witnessed on the Speedway this Winter took place yesterday morning. The roadbed was in excellent condition. Both sidewalks from Washington Bridge north were lined with spectators, who were as enthusiastic as though they were at a track meet, and warmly applauded the winners of the various contests.

There were several surprises during the morning, one of which was the speed shown by Richard Croker's gelding Chanty, driven by Trainer Currey. Although the animal was defeated one or twice, he showed great speed, especially at the finish. The pacer King Tom, driven by J. C. Hackett, showed his heels to some of the best horses on the road, and gave David B., 2:09¼, driven by J. Cornish, two hard races.

One of the first races of the morning was between Ambidexter, 2:11¼, driven by J. Wilbur, and Laura W., with Dr. H. H. Kane handling the ribbons. They started at the north end of the stretch on even terms. For a quarter they traveled about nose and nose, and then Ambidexter took the lead. Laura W. made several desperate efforts to recover the lost ground, and finally did so, but she was unable to hold her opponent, who passed her at the half, and won easily. Laura W. next fell a victim to the speed of Madison Chief, 2:17¼, driven by M. L. Reid.

Among the closest brushes of the day was one between Baylight, 2:33¼, driven by M. Radel, and Brandywine, 2:20¼, driven by A. Maynard. They covered a quarter in fast time without either gaining a nose. Nearing the half-mile post Baylight obtained a lead of half a length, but Brandywine, showing a remarkable burst of speed, soon had him again on even terms. When they were pulled up under Washington Bridge honors were about even. On the return trip Brandywine was matched against Chanty, but the latter had an easy victory, as Brandywine was somewhat winded. Sir Eld, 2:14¾, driven by A. M. Rose, also had a losing race with Chanty.

A very pretty race in which four horses participated resulted in a victory for Ambidexter. The four were Chanty, Swift, driven by J. Cockerill; Ambidexter, and Sir Eld. In the next race Chanty met Honor Bright, 2:28¼, and Ambidexter. The start was a fair one, but the first quarter was slow. Finally Chanty took the lead and held it to the finish, closely followed by Ambidexter.

The last and one of the best races of the morning was between Madison Chief and Laura W. From start to finish the pace was a furious one, first one horse leading and then the other, and when they were pulled up neither had an advantage, and the race was declared a dead heat.

Among those who watched the sport were Bernard Zahn, driving Dundess; Charles Weiland, driving his pacer Pansy Blossom; Elmer Stevens, behind the pacer Hazel Kirke; E. C. Burnett, driving a team of handsome blacks; J. McGuire, driving Gesner, 2:13¾; Dr. Flagg, driving Alice B.; Mr. and Mrs. James Canavan, behind a team; A. Newberger, driving Smilax, and A. Kerker, with Ateka Boy.

BOXING CLUB AT MOUNT KISCO.

Residents Indignant at the Invasion of the Pugilists.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT KISCO, N. Y., Jan. 28.—Aristocratic Mount Kisco is to be invaded by the pugilist. A number of local sporting men have formed the Mount Kisco Athletic Association, whose principal series of athletics is to be in the form of glove bouts. The announcement is made that all provisions of the Horton law have been complied with to make the corporation a bona-fide one.

The good people of the town are up in arms against the invasion of the pugilists, and threaten injunction proceedings if the show which is announced to be given by the club is successfully carried out and the town authorities grant the necessary license.

The opening boxing show of the club is scheduled for Feb. 13, but it will never take place if the church people and the opponents of such exhibitions are able to exert the necessary influence to prevent it. The sporting men laugh at the license fee of $100 which it is threatened to charge.

Wheeling Club May Disband.

The members of the Richmond County Wheelmen, with a clubhouse at Tompkinsville, S. I., have called a special meeting for Feb. 7 for the purpose of considering the advisability of disbanding. Lack of interest in the club and non-payment of dues by the majority of the members have endangered the operating expenses, and the majority of the members are in favor of disbanding the club while the treasury is still sufficient to meet all the club's obligations.

Plans for the Buildings on View at the Annual Meeting.

An Additional $500,000 Required to Cover Their Cost—Work of the Institution.

Prospects for the speedy erection of the magnificent new Mount Sinai Hospital, which is to cover the entire block bounded by Fifth and Madison Avenues, One Hundredth and One Hundred and First Streets, received the principal attention at the annual meeting, held at the Training School for Nurses, attached to the present hospital in Lexington Avenue, yesterday morning. Several large elevations of the new buildings were displayed and greatly admired. The attendance at the meeting was large.

President Isaac Wallach announced that the four remaining lots of the new site had been purchased last August, and that four apartment houses on them would be permitted to remain as a source of income until it was necessary to tear them down as the work progressed. He said the excavation was practically completed, and that specifications were being prepared, and that bids for the erection of the buildings would soon be asked for.

The reports of the Treasurer and the Finance Committee showed the following assets: Plot of ground for new hospital, (cost $531,682.04, less a mortgage of $80,000,) $451,682.04; invested in bonds and mortgages, $150,000; cash in hands of Treasurer, $4,831.52; building fund, (held in trust,) $43,174.88.

Mr. Wallach said that during the year 304 patients had been turned away because of lack of room, and added: "Our inability to provide for a large number of applicants is liable to occasion discontent among our constituents. The Directors are placed in an unpleasant position, and their duties made doubly onerous." He said that the board also found itself in an embarrassing position, owing to the marked advance in the cost of building materials and labor, and said that an additional $500,000 must be obtained to cover the cost of the new buildings. The large amount already raised had been obtained through the personal solicitation of the Directors, which, though a slow method, had been found better than circulars. Many had not yet been applied to. "I am sure you will not let the glory of our hospital be dimmed," he said. "We have our semi-centennial in February, 1902, and it cannot be better celebrated than by opening the new buildings."

In closing the meeting, after a vote of thanks to the officers, he said: "We are engaged in a great work, not alone for us, but for coming generations, to erect buildings in our community which will be a pride to the Jewish people, and second to no other institution of its kind in the West. We are willing to put in our time, but the community ought to give us the money, and we need but a little more. It is but a little to the citizens of this great city, and we feel satisfied that it will come in due time, and that when our work is completed, you will still say, as you have said this morning, that we have done well."

Mount Sinai has cared for 65,000 patients since its foundation. The statistics for the past year showed that 3,065 patients had been admitted to the hospital, of whom over 81 per cent. were free. There was an increase of 578 in the number of applicants over 1898. Four hundred and fifty-three accident cases had been treated, and the total number of patients in the hospital, dispensary, and district service was 36,734. Of the patients admitted, 1,786 had been discharged as cured, 691 were discharged as improved, 171 as not improved, 7 had been transferred to other institutions, and 408 had died. There were 2,098 operations, considerably more than in any previous year. The receipts had been $125,370.91, and the disbursements for the hospital and dispensary had been $122,130.04.

There were thirty deaths among the donors, patrons, and other members. President Wallach dwelt affectionately on the memory of Meyer Stern. As he said, "We owe duties to the dead as well as to the living," he broke down, and it was several minutes before he could continue his address. The present membership was shown to be: Donors, 169; patrons, 769; members, 2,949, and juniors, 17, a total of 3,904.

The following officers were re-elected: Isaac Wallach, President; Isaac Stern, Vice President; E. Asiel, Treasurer; L. M. Josephthal, Secretary, and Max Nathan, Herman Mendel, Kalman Haas, George Blumenthal, and Meyer H. Lehman, Directors.

STATE TRUST EXAMINATION.

Clearing House Association, After Investigation, Reports the Company Solvent.

An examination of the State Trust Company, against whose officers charges were made by Abram Kling to Gov. Roosevelt, has been made by the Clearing House Committee of the Clearing House Association. The Clearing House Association has reported to Gov. Roosevelt that the company is not only solvent, but has a large surplus.

The Clearing House Committee is empowered by the by-laws of the association to examine into the affairs of any of its members and such non-members as are represented in the association by an agent. The members of the committee are Frederick D. Tappen, President of the Gallatin National Bank; J. Edward Simmons, President of the Fourth National Bank; Henry W. Cannon, President of the Chase National Bank; Edward H. Perkins, Jr., President of the Importers and Traders' National Bank, and Edward E. Poor, President of the National Park Bank.

This is the third examination that has been made, the others having been by State Superintendent Kilburn and by ex-Adjt. Gen. Avery D. Andrews. It was undertaken at the request of Gov. Roosevelt and Superintendent Frederick D. Kilburn, in order that there might be no possible question as to the thorough soundness of the institution.

Frederick D. Tappen yesterday admitted that the committee's report was returned on Thursday last. "The Clearing House Committees," he said, "began the examination of the State Trust Company's affairs on Jan. 12. The result of this examination is now in the hands of the Superintendent of the State Banking Department. We were asked to find as to the solvency of the company at that date. We found that it was not only solvent, but possessed a large surplus. The examination was made at the instance of Gov. Roosevelt and of Superintendent Kilburn."

Mr. Tappen refused to say anything concerning the collateral for loans held by the company or to go into the details of the report, adding: "The members of the Clearing House Committee will make public no statement further than to say that they have examined the company and found that on Jan. 12 it was in good condition."

THE OVERDUE STEAMSHIPS.

State of Nebraska Not Reported—Ethiopia's Agents Not Alarmed.

The Allan Line steamer State of Nebraska, which left Glasgow Jan. 10 with twenty-six steerage passengers aboard, is now several days overdue, and her failure to arrive is causing some anxiety to her owners and agents, and the friends and relatives of those on board. The State of Nebraska is a twelve-day boat; it is now nineteen days since she left port.

Several friends and relatives of the passengers on board gathered at the pier at the foot of West Twenty-first Street yesterday and made anxious inquiries about the steamer. The agents of the line did their best to quiet their fears. The agents say they fear no catastrophe.

The Ethiopia of the Anchor Line is also a week overdue, but her agents say they are not worried because the weather on the Atlantic for a week past has been such as would retard west-bound steamers.

Fictsam from the Missing Merrimac.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—It has been learned that the British steamer Malin Head, Capt. McKee, which sailed from Ardressan for St. John, N. B., Jan. 23, picked up a piece of wood marked "Merrim." The board is supposed to be a part of one of the boats belonging to the missing British steamer Merrimac, which sailed from Quebec Oct. 27 for Belfast, in command of Capt. Shallis. Nothing has been heard of her since she left Canada.

The Jamestown Floated.

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 28.—Tugs succeeded in getting the Old Dominion steamship Jamestown off the flats at Lambert's Point early this morning. Inspectors say she is not damaged.

"LA TOSCA" SUNG IN ROME.

Puccini's Opera, Founded on Sardou's Play, Received with Great Favor—Success Is Pronounced.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Jan. 15.—After many postponements and delays, Maestro Giacomo Puccini's long-awaited music-drama "La Tosca" was given at the Costanzi Theatre last night in the presence of one of the greatest audiences which have ever filled that theatre. The work was enthusiastically received from beginning to end, amid a constantly increasing amount of attention and admiration. The success of Puccini's work is uncontested in every way.

At an early hour the spacious theatre began to fill with a seemingly unending crowd. The house was packed to its utmost capacity from top to bottom, every seat and every ticket for standing room having been sold days before. The many tiers of boxes offered a most brilliant display, and the whole theatre seemed filled with celebrities of every kind; the Court, the diplomatic circles, the artistic and literary world, the press, the army and navy, all were strongly represented. "First nights" equal to this one have seldom been seen in Rome.

The expectation and anxiety evinced by the audience was intense and was felt by every one in the house.

The librettists have kept the main points of Sardou's play well in mind, and the changes that are to be found in the new version have not only been made with the great French dramatist's consent, but with his assistance as well. The action is dramatic throughout to an extraordinary extent, and Puccini has set it to music worthy of it. In music and libretto alike there is a long crescendo of interest and dramatic power.

The same sense of harmony with the subject, which is one of the strongest points in the music of "La Bohème," is again apparent in "La Tosca," added to the same characteristic sense, the same open sincerity, and the same passionate depth of expression.

In his orchestration and general technical handling of his material, there is a marked advance between the Puccini of "Le Bohème," with his not infrequent roughness, and the Puccini of to-day, with his sure and more settled mastery, his greater ease, and smoothness.

The first act brought the composer to the footlights eight times, in response to the repeated calls for his appearance on the part of the audience. The tenor "aria" was encored, and brought out the first loud applause, which broke out again after the chorus of the priests and burst into a perfect ovation at the end of the powerful finale. The public would listen to no protestations, and the whole latter part of the act had to be repeated.

The Queen and her ladies-in-waiting arrived at the end of this tremendous demonstration of applause, and she was accorded a smaller ovation herself by the public, which had been warmed into a spirit of generous expansiveness.

The second act, with the impressive torture scene, in spite of its great difficulties, has been most cleverly and successfully treated. The beautiful prayer of "La Tosca," finely rendered by Signorina Darclée, was the signal for renewed applause, and was repeated, as well as the great culminating part of the act, the killing of Scarpia by La Tosca, one of the most powerful parts in the whole drama.

The third and last act was as fully appreciated as the others, and shows the composer in some of his best points. Cavaradossi's romance and his duo with La Tosca were both repeated, and the work closed amid a perfect storm of enthusiasm, Puccini being called out no less than eight times to bow his acknowledgments.

Naturally, as on all "first-night" performances, it has been impossible to gain more than a general idea of the whole work, and Puccini may rest assured that on future occasions the audience will be enabled to enjoy and appreciate much that escaped it on the first hearing. The Wagneresque importance given to the orchestral part is noticeable in the new work, which, all in all, is indeed an "event" of the greatest importance to the musical world.

The work was staged magnificently, and with an unusually deep artistic sense. The orchestra, under Mugnone, was all that could be desired, and the singers acquitted themselves worthily. Darclée especially showing herself to be an actress of no low order, as well as a singer, in her part of "La Tosca." The role of Cavaradossi was ably sung and acted by the tenor De Marchi, and Scarpia by Giraldoni.

The concourse of critics from every part of Europe, as well as of Italy, was remarkable, and their various reports and judgments will be looked for with interest.

TRIAL OF 400 BRIGANDS.

Special Court Being Built for the Proceedings in Sardinia.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Jan. 13.—The trial of the brigands and their "accomplices," captured or arrested during the energetic operations against these disturbers of the peace in Sardinia last year, is to take place at Saroari before very long, and bids fair to be handed down in history as unique among modern trials, as far as the numbers of the witnesses and accused are concerned. The latter number no less than 400, while the forces of the witnesses rise to over 900 for the prosecution and 1,000 for the defense!

Among the accused, either as being guilty of brigandage itself or as having favored and assisted the bandits, are many persons holding high positions in the island, such as Mayors of towns, Municipal Councilors, schoolmasters, landed proprietors, tradesmen, priests, &c. Several of the prisoners are of the gentler sex, and among these is a sister of the terrible bandits Serra-Sanna, who were killed in the Spring of last year by carabiniri in the mountains of Argoorio, near Morgogliai.

In consideration of the numbers of witnesses and accused, a special court is being temporarily erected at Sassan in which the lengthy trial will take place.

COLUMBIA EXHIBIT FOR PARIS.

Will Be Representative of Higher Education in America.

Columbia University has been requested to send an exhibit to the Paris Exposition. The space allotted to educational interests at the exposition is comparatively small, therefore the request was with the understanding that any exhibit which might be sent should not represent Columbia or any other particular university, but should be representative of the various branches of higher education in America. The space allotted to Columbia is ten feet of shelf room.

Into this will be folded a number of swinging brackets, consisting of fifteen frames each. Each of these frames will be filled with charts, photographs, and other matter illustrative of the different departments represented.

The Columbia library, as it is the only one to be represented, will send matter typical of American libraries in general. This part of the exhibit will consist of a large number of photographs and statistical charts and also a huge bound volume of architectural floor plans illustrated by engravings.

The remainder of the exhibit will represent the Schools of Law, Applied Science, Psychology, Manual Training, and the Teachers' College.

An Answer to Mr. Shearman.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I think it is only fair to say or let me say that Mr. Shearman is most egregiously mistaken in saying I was "not willing to answer any of his questions." I wrote what I thought a most complete answer, and in my heart I believe you thought so, too, for you declined to publish it as too long and because you had given a great deal of space to the subject, unless I would cut it down one-half. This, of course, was your absolute right, with which I find no fault whatever, although my answer was not more than a column of matter to Mr. Shearman's column and a half. So now I think I could answer his arraignment of Krüger's honesty so conclusively that I almost wonder that a gentleman of his ability should present such evidence or make such a comparison. ANTI-SALOON CRUSADE BEGUN.

Opening Services Held Here by a League Organized to Work on Political Lines.

The Anti-Saloon League began a crusade yesterday in New York. The northern part of the city was selected as the scene of the initial efforts, the plan being to cover the entire territory of the Greater New York, taking one district at a time. Nine services were held yesterday morning, two in the afternoon, and nine in the evening in churches and halls in the territory above Eighty-third Street. The objects of the movement and the methods to be pursued were outlined in an address delivered in the morning by the Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, State Superintendent of the league, at the Park Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church. He said, in part:

"We have four departments. The first is the department of agitation. Its work is to create and to foster a sentiment against the saloon.

"Another department is that of law and enforcement. Laws are not enforced against the saloon because there is no public sentiment calling for their rigid interpretation. We propose to cover this section of the State with a coterie that will create a public sentiment so strong that the laws against the sale of liquor will be enforced to the letter. We will make office holders understand that it is better and safer for them to do right than to do wrong. In Poughkeepsie we have driven eight or ten of the worst of the saloon keepers out of town. One of them, the very worst, has gone to Yonkers. We will drive him out of there. He may come to New York, but we will drive him from pillar to post—we will drive them all from pillar to post until we have driven them back to their native hell.

"The third department is legislation. The Raines law is bad. It is full of imperfect and vicious features. It permits every gin mill to become a hotel. These hotels are chambers of horrors. We want the Raines law put away and something cleaner and better substituted. What we want here is municipal local option by wards. Let every neighborhood in this city vote whether it will or will not tolerate saloons, and there will be a decrease in the number that will be startling.

"Another thing that this department wants to take care of is the hours of a saloon day. The crimes that are committed in direct consequence of the drinking of liquor are night crimes. The night hours are, therefore, the most dangerous ones. Shut up the saloons at night, and the number of crimes will diminish in proportions that will be alarming to the saloon keepers and satisfactory to those who are opposed to them.

"We will organize so that every town, village, and ward in the State will have its quota of antis. We will control the municipal elections through the primaries and caucuses, and we will send to Albany men who are pledged against the saloons. In this way we will get laws enacted that will bring about our object and inaugurate an era of peace and prosperity such as has never been known before.

"The other department is the financial department. We have a plan for getting funds that cannot fail. It is because of this plan that we have never been forced to give up a place where we have once started. Here are some cards. You have never seen any like them unless you have been to an Anti-Saloon League meeting. They call for subscriptions of so much a month. You may put down your name for any amount you want—from 25 cents to $25. We make a list of our subscribers, and a collector calls once a quarter to collect the amount that you have promised to pay per month."

Sunday Vigilance of the Police.

In accordance with instruction from the Chief of Police, the members of the force were vigilant yesterday in the enforcement of the provisions of the Sunday laws. A constant watch was kept on concert and music halls and on Raines law hotels. There were 21 excise arrests in the city, 16 in the Borough of Manhattan, 3 in the Borough of the Bronx, and 2 in the Borough of Brooklyn. On the previous Sunday there were 19 arrests.

Six Card Players Arrested.

Acting Capt. Hammond, in command of the Madison Street Police Station, personally patrolled his precinct last night with a squad of plain clothes men in a hunt for gamblers. He made several arrests. Barnett Brown of 259 Madison Street and two other men were taken out of that place. Cards and chips enough to fill a small basket were confiscated. Bernard Schwartz and two friends were arrested at 183 East Broadway. Their cards and 32 cents, the stakes, were seized.

IT PAYS.

It is reported of a canny Scotsman that he said of the old maxim that honesty is the best policy: "I ken it weel, for I have tried them baith." The people of the State of New York can echo the sentiment as to honesty and dishonesty in the public service, though much is left to be desired in their experiment with the former. So much of it as they have succeeded in putting in practice has unquestionably proved profitable.

Now comes the Canal Committee, of which Gen. GREENE is Chairman, and reads them a plain, emphatic, impressive lesson.

There is no more important matter in the future of the State than the share it can secure of the vast trade that seeks a channel to and fro across the continent and beyond its shores to the markets of the world. The committee, after the maturest investigation and the exercise of ability as great as can be commanded anywhere in the country, declare that this share of the world's trade can be had for New York by means of a waterway from the lakes to the sea at a cost of $60,000,000. They work out their calculations minutely and carefully and sustain their conclusions by facts and arguments of the highest authority, so that their plan is accepted with a profound feeling of hopefulness and confidence by the leaders of business in this city and throughout the State. But to the success of this plan the committee say that there is one absolute condition.

This condition is that the construction and administration of the canal they recommend shall be placed on the solid basis of the merit system, that appointments and promotions in the service shall be made for tested merit, that the tenure shall be free from the vicissitudes of political favoritism, and thus that the service shall be made a career for men of ability and training. This is precisely the thing that has been aimed at in all the legislation for the reform of the civil service in the State and in the Federal Government. It is the principle proposed in the earliest plans of the reform under Gen. GRANT, embodied in the National law of 1883 and in the law of this State the next year. And it is the principle imbedded in the Constitution of the State. The significance of the statement of the Canal Committee lies in the fact that it is unqualified and that it is put forward as the indispensable precedent to their plan. They say, in so many words, that it is of no use even to think of their plan unless this is decided and fixed in advance. In this way only can the work be done in a businesslike manner and be made capable of rendering the benefit that it ought to render. In short, honesty and intelligence are the price we must offer for the immense advantages that are open to us. If we will not pay it, all the money, time, and labor we may spend will be thrown away.

THE FUTURE OF SHIPBUILDING.

In his very interesting speech before the Lotos Club on Saturday evening, Mr. CARNEGIE made the prediction that the centre of the shipbuilding industry would be transferred to this country, and would be on the Atlantic Coast. He also quoted with approval the statement of the historian GREEN that the home of that interest might be on the Hudson. The same issue of the papers that contained the report of Mr. CARNEGIE'S speech also reported the conference of his former partner, Mr. FRICK, with a company of shipbuilders intending to establish large works at Camden, N. J.

It is to be noted that in his speech Mr. CARNEGIE did not base his sanguine expectations as to the development of this great industry on any stimulus to it from the pockets of the taxpayers. On the contrary, he regarded it solely from the point of view of an experienced business man, who makes his calculations as far as possible from ascertained and stable data, and does not like to include anything so uncertain in its source and in its operation as the subsidies which Congress may vote. He pointed out that we had the three most important advantages connected with the trade, raw material in abundance, skilled labor of surpassing efficiency, and a situation of the utmost convenience. We have already outstripped England in the production of steel and iron. We have carried our rivalry successfully into the markets of the world in the exports of many of the products of steel. Mr. CARNEGIE believes that we can do so in ships, which are, after all, only a manufacture of steel, as much as needles are or locomotives.

There is not a single element in the cost or distribution of the manufactures of steel which we are now selling at a profit in the markets formerly held securely by England that help us any more than the same elements would help us in the making and selling of steamships. Practically the only difference in the two sets of industries is that in shipbuilding our manufacturers lack the stimulus of competition in our own markets. In other matters the price of raw material at home and the improvements in processes due largely to the pressure of bad times for a number of years brought the cost of production to a point where the tariff was no protection against foreign competition, and our manufacturers were driven to do their best to find a market for their products and found it in all parts of the globe. But in shipbuilding there has been not merely protection but prohibition, and enterprise and energy have lagged accordingly. Now that the condition of the commerce of the world and the great advance in our own exports have created a demand for ships such as we have not had in many long years the builders are stirring themselves to take the chances offered to them.

This is the time seized by the subsidy hunters to demand that the taxpayer shall be forced to subscribe to their profits. With incredible fatuousness they base their demand largely on the pressing need of ships existing and progressive in all parts of the world. It is as if the farmers, finding an increasing demand for grain, should ask the State or the Nation to buy them plows and harrows and fertilizers to enable them to supply that demand at greater profit to themselves, or as if THE TIMES should ask the Treasury to furnish new presses to meet the requirements of its growing circulation. Whatever force there may have been in the plea for taxation in the interest of infant industries, surely there is none in the hardy demand of a few shipbuilders—it is not at all a universal demand—for money from the pockets of their fellow-citizens to help them increase the profits offered them by the swelling trade of the country.

GEN. BULLER'S SITUATION.

It is not surprising that the account given by Gen. BULLER of the withdrawal of his left wing under Gen. WARREN across the Tugela River is received in London with little satisfaction and some impatience and incredulity.

The one fact that is at all consoling, if it has been accurately reported, is that the withdrawal at the last was made in good order and without loss of men or stores. It is not, indeed, easy to understand why this was allowed by the Boers, unless in accordance with their apparently firm decision to act only on the defensive within the lines they have occupied. But it appears from the account of the battles on and about Spion Kop that the British were not influenced solely in abandoning that position by the want of water or by the difficulty of handling their artillery, but were literally driven from the hill by a sharp attack directly delivered on their front by the Boers, in which some 150 of their force surrendered.

It is intimated in the dispatches from London that Gen. BULLER'S entire force is back on the south side of the Tugela, but the definite report relates only to the force on the left wing under WARREN, which was withdrawn with BULLER'S approval, after the repulse at Spion Kop. But the improbability that the British can now advance again on the line already attempted is very great, and if they cannot, the fall of Ladysmith seems inevitable. Nor is it at all impossible that BULLER'S forces, lying, as they appear to lie, part on the north and part on the south of the Tugela, may be exposed to attack. The course of events for the next week will be watched in England with the intensest anxiety.

DR. PARKHURST REDIVIVUS.

Within the past few weeks Dr. PARKHURST has shown a marked tendency to re-enter the field of active political labor, from which he had for a long time almost completely absented himself. He has published in The Independent a strongly condemnatory article on the work of the Mazet committee. In this he scores the motives of both the majority and the minority members who were engaged, the one set in trying to make party capital of the iniquities of Tammany and the other set in trying to prevent this, and to make like capital from the assaults on the reputation of the City Government. In a recent sermon he painted in the blackest colors the condition of the city under Tammany, and he upbraided the so-called Christians of the town for their indifference to this condition and their refusal or neglect to stir a hand to remedy it. A little later he sent a telegram to Gov. ROOSEVELT, which he made public, apropos of the nomination for the Insurance Department, exhorting him to choose that day whom he would serve, the inference plainly being that the Governor was hesitating between GOD and Mammon.

Two things are to be noted in the action and words of the Doctor thus far. One is a great hatred of evil, with a corresponding zeal in contending with it, and the other is a singular lack of perspective as to the complex forces that decide the course of affairs in a great community like this. The former is entirely creditable, and might be useful if it were not interfered with by the latter. For instance, the Doctor is quite justified in his criticism of the motives of the members of the Mazet committee, and his denunciation of them would have much effect if it did not in the same article hold up Mr. Moss, his friend and former associate, as an exceptionally honest man, more or less deceived as to the real motives of his committee. We do not pretend to pass judgment on the honesty of Mr. Moss, but his outrageous "report," issued on the eve of the election last Fall for the plain purpose of promoting the election of MAZET in his district, proved him to be as blind and bigoted and unfair a partisan as any member of the committee. Again, the implication in the telegram of the Doctor to the Governor was practically an assertion of the sinfulness of differing from the author on a matter as to which the Governor was in a position to know all the facts, as the Doctor did not, and as to which his responsibility was direct and complete. Still again, the one count against Tammany in the Doctor's indictment on which he lays especial stress is its permitting the practice of evils the attempt to abolish which, made with Dr. PARKHURST'S approval and largely with the aid of his society, has, in the opinion of many competent observers, done more harm than good.

There is a general impression that Dr. PARKHURST is too strongly inclined to play the rôle of the Hebrew prophet, and to denounce evil and the doers of evil with all the precision and authority of one divinely instructed. That, in New York and at present, is a difficult and probably an impossible rôle. The definiteness of information is unattainable, and the authority is not acknowledged. "Thou art the man" is easy to say, but it is not easy to be sure of the fact, and it is still less easy to convince public opinion, by which the decrees of Providence, if at all, are carried out in a democracy, that the statement is correct.

There are, however, signs that the tendency that we have noted in the mind of Dr. PARKHURST is weakening, and that he is beginning to see with a wider and surer vision. His advocacy of the policy of permitting the saloons to be opened for a part of Sunday for the sale of fermented drink, and the arguments he uses for this policy, show a degree of practical sense extremely creditable and encouraging. We recognizes that there is no moral principle involved, and that the moderate use of drinks like beer on the Sabbath is consistent with the sincerest respect for the Christian religion and for the Protestant form of it, since it is practiced by people of undoubted sincerity in this regard. He sees that the rights of people holding such views are entitled to consideration. He acknowledges the evil that comes from the neglect to enforce the law, and the greater evil that comes from the sale of exemption from the enforcement of the law. With a shrewdness worthy of a politician and not in the least unworthy of a clergyman engaged in public affairs, he perceives that a change such as he suggests would sever one strong tie that has bound large numbers of our people to Tammany, and make easier the overthrow of that singularly pernicious organization. This is sound, and backed by the untiring moral earnestness of Dr. PARKHURST, may do great good.

AN OBJECT LESSON IN COLONIZATION.

The recent report of the Colonial Committee of the French Chamber not only gives an illuminating view of the actual working of the French colonial system, but is filled with unhappy indications of its ultimate effect upon the republic maintaining it, and the colonists who are shackled to its principles. Wonder at its present deplorable aspect becomes amazement when we view the plans that have been conceived for the remedy of its defects.

The fundamental idea of French colonization is very simple. It was devised to provide France with what she could not produce herself, and to secure a monopoly market for French commodities. These ends, it was believed, and is still believed, can only be attained through a policy of centralization and protection. In other words, Frenchmen have sought to apply to their territories beyond sea the same principles that RICHELIEU conceived for the centralization of France herself. And it seems incredible to most French minds that the success of LOUIS XIII.'s wise adviser is not repeated.

Aside from the enormous expenditures which are charged up to the Ministries of War and Marine, and which we are invited to believe are merely the results of passing exigencies, let us see what is the state of the colonial system as viewed solely from the Ministry for the Colonies. In the first place, to maintain the policy an enormous corps of Colonial officials has been found necessary, both in Paris and throughout the colonies. While the British Colonial Office in Downing Street requires seventy-nine officials for the forty-six British colonies, the Ministry in Paris supports 231 officials to look after the affairs of seventeen colonies. One example will suffice to show the extent of officialdom in the French dependencies themselves. Guadaloupe, with a population of only 167,000, has within her territory 1,152 officials of the Colonial Ministry. Of course, the support of this enormous corps might be justified by financial results. But such is not the case.

During the last ten years the contributions of the French colonies to the Colonial exchequer have amounted to $12,500,000, while the Colonial budgets for the same period (exclusive of subsidies and other expenditures which have been made as baits to trade, industry, and emigration) have reached the extraordinary total of $164,400,000. The difference is divided between the home taxpayer and the colonial taxpayer, 44 per cent. to the former and 56 per cent. to the latter. No wonder that the Colonial Committee of the Chamber is conscious of the fact that something must be done, and it is but natural that the first thought should be to devise some "reform" by which the 44 per cent. of the deficit, which is made up from the pockets of the taxpayers of the mother country, may be materially reduced.

To begin, the committee expatiates upon the admirable qualities of "autonomie," and with a benevolence that is wholly Latin suggests that certain of the expenditures that are at present paid by the Ministry be transferred to the several colonial governments, to be met in ways most convenient for those governments. At the same time it implores the colonists to look beyond the mere "financial side" and rest assured that this experiment in "autonomie," if proved successful, will shortly be followed by more important concessions to the beneficent principle hereby introduced. It adjures the colonists to remember the privileges that they enjoy under the protection of a wise and charitable Government, and it admonishes them to cultivate the spirit of patriotism, which alone can pave the way to their future prosperity. As the local Legislatures of French colonies have hitherto been unable even to provide funds for the construction of necessary roads and the establishment of an adequate postal service, it is impossible to say how they can bear the increased expenditures. But that is a question for them to settle. They have that privilege. A taste of the blessings of "autonomie" has been offered them.

For more than fifteen years France has been attempting to sustain her colonies for her special benefit. To maintain the principles of centralization and protection she has expended vast sums, not only through the Colonial Ministry, but through the Ministries of Marine and War. She has subsidized industries; she has offered every inducement for French families to become colonists; all without avail. In all her foreign dominions native industry has been narrowed to meet the demands of the French market, and native enterprise has been dwarfed for the sole purpose of preserving a monopoly of French products. Native life, character, and energy have been stunted or ruthlessly destroyed. And now to perpetuate the obnoxious system, she invokes the word "autonomie" to delude her colonists as to the weight of a further burden inflicted.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—An editorial article in the current number of The Medical Record begins with the following statement: "The announcement made in several British lay journals that Prof. METCHNIKOFF of the Pasteur Institute has discovered the means of almost indefinitely prolonging life, will be received by the medical profession with feelings akin to disgust." This is certainly a most astounding confession. Perhaps the rest of the article shows that its author did not intend that his words should be taken literally, and that the disgust of the medical profession is due, not to the arrival of news which, if true, means the immediate attainment of the end toward which all doctors are supposed by laymen to be striving, but to a belief that this story is so obviously false as to be beneath the consideration of the learned. The introduction was so startling, however, that we didn't have the courage to read any further. It seemed a safer course to remain in uncertainty as to the nature of what came next, for that not only avoided the imperiling of our confidence that the remainder of the article does straighten out satisfactorily the sentence quoted—a confidence which is very precious to us—but it left time for pondering on the emotions with which the late M. JEAN BAPTISTE POQUELIN would have perused The Record's rash confession, and on the use he might have made of it in his business.

—A paragraph in this column the other day credited to The Troy Times some sensible remarks on the exemption of college property from taxation that had in reality made their first appearance in The Troy Press. Realization of the blunder came next day, as it always does in such cases, and the comments that The Press would make on it were awaited, not exactly with apprehension, but with a resentful and therefore unpleasant certainty that our involuntary injustice would be denounced either with contemptuous scorn, as evidence of our unpardonable stupidity, or else with hot anger, as proving the limitlessness of our malice. For it is a journalistic habit lamentably common to inflict one or the other of these punishments on a tripping contemporary whenever opportunity offers, and of course they offer more frequently than now and then. Yesterday the inevitable correction arrived, and was it fierce, was it scornful, did it find offense where none was intended, did it twist a mishap into a crime, did it do any of the expected things? Not one of them! Except for the not entirely kind statement that "THE NEW YORK TIMES is barking at the wrong door," The Press is delightfully gentle and good natured. "In the office of our New York namesake," it says, "the word 'Times' flows naturally to the pen. But, while on both sides of the water the journals named 'Times' are the leaders in the newspaper world, there are others of one sort and another. And it was one of the 'others' in Troy that made the remarks which have evoked the comment of THE NEW YORK TIMES." Now, isn't that nice? Isn't it a model of courtesy and fraternal consideration? We can hardly regret having made a mistake that elicited so unusual and so admirable a rejoinder. We trust that The Troy Press will accept these presents as a mark of our profound appreciation of its generosity.

—Certain public-spirited citizens of North Carolina, having noted with apprehension the speed with which the forests are disappearing from the mountains of the State, are making efforts to awaken general interest in the matter and to arouse action by which the work of destruction may be stopped before irretrievable harm is done. Their fears and their intentions are alike commendable, but we cannot see why they should seek for the establishment of a National forest reserve and not of one planned, controlled, and paid for by the State of North Carolina. It is true, as the authors of the pamphlets and other literature on the subject which we have received assert with great emphasis, that the Federal Government has set apart land for such purposes in the West, and has expended a good deal of money in improving and protecting the so-called parks, but there the conditions and circumstances were not what they are in North Carolina. The Government owned the land, for one thing, and for another the benefits conferred were much more distinctly public benefits than they would be in a region nearer the present centres of population. If North Carolina has come to a realizing sense of the value of forests she has reached a point at which not many of her sister States have yet arrived, and may well be proud of herself. But such elevation and wisdom should involve the development of an independent spirit, and a disinclination to ask help in a matter to which she could attend unaided. New York has a forest preserve, small but steadily growing in both size and value, and she paid for every acre of it out of her own pocket. It is open to all the world on fairly equal terms, so that its pleasures and profits are far from confined to the residents of New York State. North Carolina ought to have a similar preserve—and she ought to get it in the same way.

—Deep as were the emotions of Mr BRIGHAM H. ROBERTS when by the emphatic request of Congress he closed his brief career as a would-be member of that body, he did not seek to regain his calmness in seclusion, nor did he hasten to betake himself to the more appreciative communities of Utah. Instead he lingered in the capital, and on Friday evening he occupied a prominent seat in the Lafayette Opera House, and seemed rather to enjoy than to resent the not entirely respectful attention he received. "He was attired in full dress," according to one observer, "and succeeded pretty well in the effort to appear unconscious of the attention his presence excited, but he could not help seeing the hundreds of opera glasses leveled at him from all sides of the house, or catching now and then the echoes of the very audible comments." Continuing, the same authority narrates: "In the nearly two months Mr. ROBERTS has been in Washington he has shown not the slightest aversion to the notoriety which he has created, and the prominence with which he exhibited himself at the Opera House would indicate that he enjoys it. While he was having a good time, it did not look as if the two other occupants of the box were in any particular state of felicitation. The box was one of those reserved for the sale of single seats, and the neighbors of the Mormon were one of the highest officers of the regular army and his wife. The discipline and the self-possession induced by army influences and surroundings stood them in pretty fair stead, but not enough not to show they would sooner have been in some other part of the theatre. One thing is sure, the officer's wife will not for many a day to come escape the chaffing of her feminine friends over the incident."

THE TAX ON MORTGAGES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Clarke's letter and your editorial on the tax question are very interesting. The abolition of the equalization muddle is to be desired, but the method of abolishing it proposed by the State Tax Commission is very undesirable. It is proposed to tax mortgages held by savings banks, thereby discouraging saving by the poor, and in the case of mortgages where the tax can be shifted, to compel owners of mortgaged real estate to pay the State tax, while propertly owners who are free from debt will pay no State tax.

Would it not be a much better plan to raise State taxes by a tax on the total public revenues of counties, and leave the question as to how local revenues shall be raised to local option? To the latter plan it may be objected that it would compel a larger per capita tax to be paid by the cities than by the rural districts, on account of the larger city revenues.

The same objection in greater degree can be raised against the plan of the State Tax Commission, as the stocks of banks and trust companies and the great bulk of the mortgages are held by people living in cities.

WITH LOVE—FROM MOTHER.

Holman F. Day in Lewiston Journal.

There's a letter on the bottom of the pile,
Its envelope a faded, sallow brown,
It has traveled to the city many a mile,
And the postmark names a little unknown town.

But the hurried man of business pushes all the others by,
And on the scrawly characters he turns a glistening eye.
He forgets the cares of commerce and his anxious schemes for gain,
The while he reads what mother writes from up in Maine.

There are quirks and scratchy quavers of the pen
Where it struggled in the fingers old and bent,
There are places that he has to read again
And ponder on to find what mother meant.

There are letters on his table that inclose some bouncing checks;
There are letters giving promises of profits on his "specs,"
But he tosses all the litter by, forgets the golden rain,
Until he reads what mother writes from up in Maine.

At last he finds "with love—we all are well,"
And softly lays the homely letter down
And dashes at his headlong tasks pellmell,
—Once more the busy, anxious man of town.

But whenever in his duties as the rushing moments fly
That faded little envelope smiles up to meet his eye,
He turns again to labor with a stronger, truer brain,
From thinking on what mother wrote from up in Maine.

Through all the day he dictates brisk replies,
To his amanuensis at his side.
—The curt and stern demand and business lies
—The doubting man cajoled, and threat defied.

And then at dusk when all are gone he drops his worldly mask
And takes his pen and lovingly performs a welcome task;
For never shall the clicking type or shorthand scrawl profane
The message to the dear old home up there in Maine.

The penmanship is rounded schoolboy style,
For mother's eyes are getting dim, she wrote;
And, as he sits and writes there, all the while
A bit of homesick feeling grips his throat.

For all the city friendships here with Tom and Dick and Jim
And all the ties of later years grow very, very dim;
While boyhood's loves in manhood's heart rise deep and pure and plain,
Called forth by mother's homely words from up in Maine.

IN DOUBT ABOUT PUERTO RICO.

Republicans Differ as to the Best Thing to Do in the Matter of Tariff Regulations.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The difference of opinion among Republicans about the course to be pursued in dealing with the people of Puerto Rico is admitted by members of the Cabinet as being rather embarrassing.

The President has recommended free trade for Puerto Rico, to give the people every advantage that can be enjoyed by the people of Florida or New York to be obtained by free commercial communication between parts of the United States. Senator Platt of Connecticut, usually a supporter of the Administration, has submitted an amendment to the bill providing a form of government for Puerto Rico, by which the island is to pay 80 per cent. of the customs duties demanded from other foreign countries. This is not what Puerto Rico expected, but it is better than nothing, and in a degree is an admission that Puerto Rico should not be taxed as severely as strictly foreign countries.

The Democrats, instead of taking the open and direct stand that Puerto Rico should have all possible encouragement, have assumed that the best results can be accomplished by adhering to Constitutional interpretations and insisting that if the island of Puerto Rico is to be treated as a part of the United States, the other possessions acquired by reason of the war with Spain are to enjoy the like liberty.

The disappointment to Puerto Rico, which it is asserted, will be very deep, does not seem to affect the Republicans. It is very well known that the islanders need encouragement; that they have very loyally devoted themselves to acts assuring the United States of their acquiescence in the annexation of Puerto Rico, and that they have looked for such treatment from their new friends as would increase trade beyond any former record.

COLLEGE BOYS ON PHILIPPINES.

Subject of a Debate to be Held Between Columbia and Chicago.

Arrangements have been completed for a debate to be held between Columbia University and the University of Chicago. The question to be debated is: "Resolved, That the United States Government is not justified in taking control of the Philippines." Chicago has chosen the negative side of the question.

This debate is the last of a series of three held between Chicago and Columbia, and as the score at present stands a tie, each of the two universities will put forth an unusual effort to win it.

The speakers chosen to represent Columbia are E. U. Wood, 1902, law, of North Dakota; M. J. France of New York and B. M. L. Ernst of Alabama with E. A. Cardozo of New York as alternate. France and Ernst were members of last year's team.

WARSHIPS TO GO TO CHINA.

Austrian Diplomats Take a Serious View of the Situation.

VIENNA, Jan. 28.—A serious view is taken in diplomatic circles here of the situation in China. The Neue Freie Presse thinks that other powers will follow the example of France and send warships to protect their subjects.

The Austro-Hungarian cruiser Xenta will arrive at Hongkong in a few days and will be at the disposal of the Austro-Hungarian Minister, Baron de Wahlborn, at Peking.

Bavarian Prince Decorates Dr. Nansen

BERLIN, Jan. 28.—The Prince Regent of Bavaria has conferred the Order of St. Michael, First Class, on Dr. Nansen, the explorer.

BRYAN AND THE POPULISTS.

Alleged Plan to Pre-empt the Nebraskan in the Interests of the Populist Party.

AUSTIN, Tex., Jan. 28.—The Populists of Texas publicly announce that W. J. Bryan will accept the Populist nomination for President if it is tendered him. A circular letter outlining the plan of action for the coming campaign was issued to-day by Chairman J. H. Foster, who says the propositions he outlines come direct from the national Populist headquarters. The circular letter is addressed to all County Chairmen, and reads as follows:

"You are no doubt aware of the fact that if the Bryan Democracy, when they meet in National Convention, reaffirm the Chicago platform of 1896, with a direct legislation plank as an issue—and it seems probable that they will—and nominate W. J. Bryan and some irreproachable Southern man, such action will be the death of our party. Should the Democracy do this, it will be only a repetition of their policy, plans, and, like their advocacy of 16 to 1, short lived. In view of such action on the part of this new-born Democracy, it is the duty of every Populist who loves the principles he advocates to lend his aid to thwart the destruction, if his party.

"A plan has been suggested and is being discussed all over the Nation. The details of this plan are, in part:

"That when our National Convention assembles it reaffirm the Omaha platform, with direct legislation as the paramount issue, nominate W. J. Bryan (and the assurance has been given by Mr. Bryan's friends that he will accept the nomination) and some Southern Populist;

"That the free silver Republicans will indorse the platform and its candidates;

"That Mr. Bryan's friends will go before the National Democratic Convention with a demand for the indorsement of the action of the Populist Convention, and it is argued that they will not refuse. In the event that they do so, Mr. Bryan may refuse the nomination at the hands of the Democracy.

"This action of itself will, by the Democrats, signal their utter defeat, and also that of the Populists, but defeat will lie at the doors of the Democrats."

BRYAN OFF FOR PROVIDENCE.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—Col. William J. Bryan attended divine service this morning at the First Presbyterian Church, on Four and a Half Street, of which the Rev. Donald McLeod is pastor. After the service he went to see William M. Springer, who Mr. Bryan says was "my guardian when I was in Congress." He dined with Mr. Springer.

In the afternoon Mr. Bryan received a number of callers and took tea with O. O. Stealey of The Louisville Courier-Journal. After leaving Mr. Stealey, on his way back to the Metropolitan Hotel he dropped in at the Ebbitt House, where he encountered a number of old friends and spent much time in conversation. Most of the evening was spent in attending to his correspondence. He took the 11:50 o'clock train for Providence.

MISS NETHERSOLE STILL ILL.

Another Week's Postponement of the Opening of Her Engagement.

The opening of the engagement of Miss Olga Nethersole in "Sapho" at Wallack's Theatre, which was first announced for last Monday, has been postponed for another week. The first performance is now announced to be given next Monday evening. This postponement was due to the following opinion received yesterday by Manager Moss from Dr. H. Holbrook Curtis, in which Dr. Charles Phelps concurred:

"I have been asked to give my opinion as to the possibility of Miss Nethersole's being able to give a performance to-morrow (Monday) evening at your theatre. In consideration of that fact that the bronchitis from which she has been suffering for a week has been followed by a great constitutional disturbance, attended by fever and severe prostration, I must therefore say that it would be extremely dangerous for her to attempt to play before Monday, Feb. 5."

The management of the theatre announces that the seats purchased for the opening night originally selected, Jan. 22, will be available for next Monday night. Seats for other performances will be exchanged or the money refunded on application at the theatre.

CONCERT AT THE METROPOLITAN.

Money Refunded to Those Who Had Paid to Hear Mme. Calve.

The rain and Mme. Calvé's rheumatism did not prevent the regular concert audience from gathering last night at the Metropolitan Opera House. In consequence of the withdrawal of Mme. Calvé from the programme the management refunded to a long line of ticketholders the excess they had paid for the especial privilege of hearing her. Suzanne Adams, Mme. Schumann-Heink, and MM. Salignac and Plançon were the soloists.

Suzanne Adams sang the Polonaise from "Mignon" and Delibes's "Les Filles de Cadix," and was compelled to repeat each one. M. Salignac was down for only two arias, "Manon" (Massenet) and "Martha," (Flotow), but he was obliged to sing another selection on each appearance. Mme. Schumann-Heink contributed the Gluck aria "Orpheus," and in the second part, "Ich liebe Dich" (Louis Saar) and "Drei Lieder aus Dicterliebe" (Schumann. The hearty recall that followed elicited her rendition of the Brindisi from "Lucrezia Borgia." M. Plançon was heard in Weber's "Der Freischütz" and a couple of French songs, followed by "The Two Grenadiers." The "William Tell" overture by the orchestra brought the programme to a close.

IN FOREIGN LANDS.

THE CZAR IS SAID TO BE AFFRONTED AT THE TONE OF THE FRENCH PRESS.—Some of the Paris papers are discussing the fact that in the recent imperial rescript issued by the Czar no reference was made to the dual alliance. The Nationalist press asserts that the omission was intended as a direct snub to the Waldeck-Rousseau Ministry. The Government journals reply that, as the dual alliance, is founded upon a rock, a reference to it in the rescript would not only have been superfluous, but would have tended to irritate Germany, which is now rapidly assuming a friendly tone toward both France and Russia.

It is believed in diplomatic circles in Paris that the name of France was omitted by the Czar for the reason that the Russian Government has not been particularly pleased by the overtures which have so openly been made to Germany in the French press and it is pointed out that Russia would like to maintain the balance of power between France and Germany, remaining on good terms with both, and that the advances made in France toward a rapprochement with her eastern neighbor have quite naturally given some offense in St. Petersburg. Comte de Mouy, a well-known retired diplomatist, has declared, nevertheless, that the surprise created by the Czar's action was perfectly justified. "Although," he added, "this is only my personal opinion, I cannot help thinking that if France, which is, above all things, a chivalrous nation, were to return to a sentimental policy, Russia would content herself with looking on as she did during the Fashoda crisis."

MORE REPRESSIVE MEASURES FOR FINLAND.—The Russian administration in Finland has just introduced further restrictive and repressive measures for dealing with the Finnish press. A fine of 500 marks is to be imposed for any attempt to elude a prohibition to publish. The right is given the Governor General to demand a change of the responsible publishers on pain of suppression of the journal. A consultative committee on press affairs, which is to include a censor's bureau, composed of six members, has also been appointed by the Governor General. Moreover, the Finnish journals may not publish imperial decisions until they have appeared in the Government organs, nor the doings of scientific societies, conferences, public speeches, nor commercial affairs without having first obtained the consent of the Governor General.

THE QUARREL BETWEEN THE SULTAN AND THE KHEDIVE OF EGYPT.—For some time past rumors have come from Cairo to the London press that the relations between the Khedive of Egypt and his nominal master, the Sultan of Turkey, had become intensely strained. It seems that the trouble began when Ghazi Ahmed Mukhatar Pasha, the Turkish High Commissioner in Egypt, wrote to the Sultan a frank letter regarding the necessity of certain reforms in Turkey, and was promptly dismissed for his impertinence.

When the Khedive, Abbas Pasha, heard of the dismissal, he caused it to be intimated to the Sultan that there was really no cause for punishing Mukhatar Pasha, as he had only expressed the views of all the Mohammedans in Egypt, who, without distinction, were most anxious to see reforms introduced throughout the empire. The Khedive's message closed with the remark that, in his opinion, the best way of raising the prestige of Islam in Europe would be to take the advice offered by the High Commissioner. Since this outspoken message, it is said, the relations between the Sultan and the Khedive have become so strained that the former is contemplating deposing Abbas Pasha. It is believed in Cairo, however, that Great Britain would not permit such interference with the Egyptian Government.

FOR A NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA.—The scheme of establishing a strong central bank in India, which was recently introduced in the Legislative Council in Calcutta, has now been adopted as part of the programme of the Indian Government, notwithstanding the opposition manifested by the managers of the exchange banks, who assert that their interests are being sacrificed to some financial Moloch in London. It is the general belief among Calcutta financiers that Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty will also see the establishment of the gold standard, followed by a comprehensive measure which would give India the full advantage, through access to London, of the new currency and remedy a situation that is seriously antagonistic to the development of the country.

Clinton Dawkins, the financial member of the Legislative Council, recently made a report in which he pointed out that the amalgamation of the Presidency banks was most desirable in the interest of the general development of Indian railway construction and municipal enterprises. Replying to the objections made by the managers of the exchange banks, he said that the present shareholders of the Presidency banks would have a prior right to subscribe to new capital.

Should the amalgamated bank be established, it is generally understood in financial circles that the note issue will be entirely transferred to it.

M. DEROULEDE A CANDIDATE FOR THE PRESIDENCY OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.—M. Paul Déroulède, the leader of the Nationalists, who was recently sentenced by the Senatorial High Court of France to ten years' banishment, has informed his friends in and out of the Chamber that he has acceded to the demands of the Nationalists and will consider himself a candidate for the Presidency "whenever the voice of the people of France shall call him." He has also issued a manifesto from his place of exile in San Sebastian repudiating any amnesty which would not restore his civic rights. Moreover, he implores his constituents to do nothing except at the Senatorial and municipal elections until the close of the exhibition, thus vouchsafing the republic a truce till next November.

In the course of a signed interview recently published in Paris M. Déroulède said: "As to the choice of San Sebastian, it in no way indicates what will be the route of my return. I am here in a post of waiting, of labor, and of patience. When the success of the exhibition shall have been exhausted, and all the benefit that the nation can derive from it has been obtained, amnestied or not, I shall attempt for my country the supreme effort which I owe to it, and at the proper moment I shall reenter France by the means and the route of my choice and with the trusted companions who will seem to me the best fitted to insure the triumph of the republic of the people."

In another manifesto addressed to his Angoulême constituents he reviews the failure of his recent effort to establish "a government of the people in France," and adds: "I ask you to intrust my post of combat to the most glorious, eloquent, and ardent of my champions during the last struggle—my fraternal friend, François Coppée."

FOR NATIONAL CATHEDRAL

Bishop Satterlee Pleads for Its Establishment in Washington.

Declares that Government Will Be Asked No Favors—An Influence Against Corruption.

Bishop Satterlee of Washington preached in Trinity Church yesterday morning in support of his plea for the establishment of a National cathedral in the capital.

"While the Roman Catholics," he said, "have established great Catholic universities, the Methodist Methodist universities, and the Baptists Columbian University, the Episcopal Church, the last in the field, moves toward the establishment of a National cathedral in the National capital as a witness before the whole country of Christian unity with an Anglican basis.

"This is no new idea. Major Lenfant, the architect for Gen. Washington, projected in laying out the Federal city a State church, to belong to no denomination. The Patent Office stands on the site he selected for such a church. The church was not built. Such a State church could never be built in a country where Church and State are not one and the sects are so divided. The Episcopal cathedral was thought of twenty-five years ago, and about ten years later a charter was granted and land bought. It proved inadequate for a building to stand for centuries, with ever-growing work, and the cathedral Trustees purchased Mount St. Albans, one of the most commanding sites in the whole District of Columbia. The first cathedral service was that of the unveiling of the Peace Cross at the termination of the Spanish-American war, and on that site to-day, beside the little free church of St. Albans, are the Peace Cross and the grave of the Rev. Dr. Claggett, the first Bishop of any branch of the Christian Church ever consecrated on American soil."

Bishop Satterlee went on to say that the Episcopal Church is peculiarly fitted to build a National cathedral, because it combines in itself Protestant and Catholic tendencies, and is, he asserted, the lineal descendant and successor of the primitive Church as it was in the first four centuries before Church and State were ever heard of, and before "the mediaeval novelties of Roman Catholicism" had appeared.

"It stands," he said, "for the principle of irrevocable separation of Church and State, as it did in the earlier days, and for primitive Christian worship in a language understood by the people. The Church, to be free, as the ancient Apostolic world was, must be untrammeled herself by any political influence.

"The National cathedral will have no favors to ask or receive from the Government, no proselytizing work to do. The lives of her officers will be an epistle seen and read of all men. It will constitute a tremendous moral and spiritual power. The cathedral preachers from the pulpit of a free church in a free State can boldly rebuke vice and political corruption and hold up the mirror of Christ's pure Gospel to those who neglect the responsibility their country has laid upon them or upon those who forget that public office is a public trust."

Bishop Satterlee spoke of the work necessary before the cathedral can be an accomplished fact, with all the pomp and power needed for the proper carrying out of its projected influence, and then made an appeal for aid for the school started in connection with the projected cathedral.

"Mrs. Phoebe A. Hearst," he continued, "has generously given a building for a cathedral school for girls, in which the highest and best kind of education is to be afforded. This school is complete, and the school will be opened in the Autumn, but before that is done there is a debt of $150,000 upon the cathedral land that should be cleared off. We hope that the whole amount will be raised this Winter."

Bishop Satterlee told of many women who had told him they are Roman Catholics because of the influences of the convent schools at which they were educated, and said that when the Episcopal school is working he hoped never again to hear such a statement from a woman whose family had been confirmed in the Episcopal Church.

Bishop Satterlee purposes delivering an address in all the cities of the Union in furtherance of the plan of the establishment of the cathedral.

BISHOP LITTLEJOHN CELEBRATES

Thirty-first Anniversary of His Elevation to the Bishopric.

Bishop A. N. Littlejohn of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Long Island yesterday celebrated the thirty-first anniversary of his elevation to the Bishopric at the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City. He preached at the morning service, but made no reference to the event.

A special musical service had been arranged by Dr. William Woodcock, the musical director of the cathedral. The full vested choir sang. At the service the Bishop was assisted by Dean Samuel Cox and Canons Lord and Bryan.

During the afternoon many of the members of the cathedral congregation and other residents of Garden City called on the Bishop and extended their congratulations. The Bishop is now over seventy-five years of age, and is the third oldest Bishop in point of service in this country. He is outranked only by Bishops Morris of Oregon and Tuttle of Missouri.

SWEDENBORG AND HIS MISSION.

Doctrine Named for Him the Rev. Mr. Smith Calls Christianity.

"Emanuel Swedenborg, the Man and His Mission," was the subject of the Rev. Julian K. Smyth's discourse last night at the New Jerusalem Church. The speaker dwelt upon the scientific attainments of the Swedish seer and then outlined his work in theology. In conclusion Mr. Smyth protested against the misrepresentations current regarding the "Swedenborgians"—the name which the world had fastened upon them as a religious body and which was offensive to them. He denied they were followers of Swedenborg, whom they regarded only as an instrument in God's hands for making known the truth.

"As for Swedenborg being substituted," he said, "either as a man or as an authority, for our blessed Saviour, if there is one truth that is vital to the new Church it is that there is but one God and Saviour, and that the Lord Jesus Christ in His Divine Humanity is He. Swedenborg's writings are fairly loaded down with Scripture testimony on this point.

"No herald ever sank his personality more thoroughly in his mission than Swedenborg. 'Our Saviour,' he wrote in a letter toward the close of his life, 'even as to His humanity is God.' * * * This doctrine they call 'Swedenborgianism,' but for my part I call it genuine Christianity."

MAY BE MADE A CARDINAL.

Archbishop Corrigan Is Going to Rome After Easter.

It was stated yesterday in Catholic circles in this city that Archbishop Corrigan is going to Rome after Easter. The Archbishop, it was said, is then to make his visit ad limina to the Pope. This visit, during which an account of the affairs of his diocese is given, must be made to the Pope by Archbishops and Bishops in charge of Episcopal Sees every ten years.

During his stay in Rome the Archbishop will participate in ceremonies in honor of the Holy Year. Before his departure the Archbishop will consecrate the new chapel at St. Joseph's Seminary, Dunwoodie, Yonkers.

The news that Archbishop Corrigan is going to Rome has revived talk of the possibility of his being made a Cardinal. The Syracuse Catholic Sun declares that it is stated on the best authority that Archbishop Corrigan will soon be raised to the Cardinalate.

To Succeed Dr. Babcock in Baltimore.

CORTLANDT, N. Y., Jan. 28.—At the close of the sermon in the Presbyterian Church here this morning, the Rev. John Timothy Stone sent in his resignation, to take effect March 1, to accept a call to the Brown Memorial Church of Baltimore, to succeed the Rev. Dr. Maltby D. Babcock. There were about 1,000 persons present at the service, and they were much affected when appprised of their pastor's intention.

A. G. Vanderbilt Looking for a House.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Jan. 28.—Albert G. Vanderbilt was joined this morning by Robert L. Gerry, at the Muenchinger-King cottage, and before noon they went out on a second inspection of the cottage owned by Paul A. Andrews, at Narragansett and Bellevue Avenues, which, it is understood, will be occupied by Mr. Vanderbilt next Summer.

AN ANSWER TO REVIVALISTS.

Dr. Eaton Preaches on "Brooklyn Mediaeval Theology" and Defends Unitarianism.

"Brooklyn Mediaeval Theology" was the subject of the sermon preached by the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Eaton at the Church of the Divine Paternity yesterday morning. Dr. Eaton took as his text the twenty-first verse of the seventh chapter of Matthew: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of Heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in Heaven." The sermon was a reply to arguments against Unitarianism made recently at the revival meetings in Brooklyn.

Brooklyn, Dr. Eaton said, was a city known for the depth of its religious convictions and the breadth of its mentality. The city has had among its noted ministers such men as Henry Ward Beecher and Father Malone, and need not blush for its religious freedom and progress; but it had lately been touched by mediaeval theology. While he did not doubt the sincerity of the preachers of that school, yet their dogmas defamed God, dented Christianity, and disgraced humanity.

"'All Unitarians are sinners, and all sinners are Unitarians,' makes a clever epigram," said Dr. Eaton, "but let us try some others and change that of the Brooklyn ministers. Let us say that all Presbyterians are sinners and all sinners are Presbyterians, or all Baptists are sinners, and all sinners are Baptists. They all make equally good epigrams, but the only thing wrong about them is that none of them is true. These teachers undoubtedly have a right to their own opinion, and are no doubt honest, but who shall guarantee their infallibility? If their doctrine of the Trinity and the atonement of Christ is right, whose doctrine am I to believe?

"'Luther did not make faith synonymous with intelligence. Prof. Mitchell of the Methodist Theological Seminary says that belief in the Deity of Jesus Christ is not essential to salvation. According to the Brooklyn revivalists, this is rank heresy; but John Wesley, the father of Methodism, is guilty of the same heresy. This doctrine is not made by Christ a test of discipleship.

"'Mediaeval theology is that salvation is an escape from hell. We are saved just so far as we embody in our lives the Beatitudes and the Golden Rule, and are Christ-like in our lives. The mediaeval theology places Plato, Socrates, Emerson, Garrison and Abraham Lincoln in hell. If such is the case, hell must become a far more interesting place than heaven. Taylor was wiser than Dr. Dixon. In speaking of Emerson, he said that if Emerson were in hell, he would purify the atmosphere and convert hell itself.

"One is saved only in living the Christ-like life. As a man sows in this world, so shall he reap. It is not possible to shift the responsibility of our acts to the shoulders of Jesus Christ. More than all, its effect is to make true revivals impossible. An honest and earnest man can have nothing to do with these conceptions."

REVIVAL NOTICE NOT READ.

Applause in Plymouth Church for a Criticism of the Movement.

That Plymouth Church is not in sympathy with the spirit of the revival which is being held in Brooklyn was evidenced yesterday morning, when the Rev. Horace Porter announced from the pulpit that because of the illiberality shown by the leaders of the revival he would decline to read a printed notice of the meetings to be held this week. This notice had been sent to Mr. Porter with the request that it be read to the congregation. Mr. Porter's announcement was greeted with general applause.

"If this revival," said Mr. Porter, "is indeed, as seems to be indicated by the leaders, not one against vice and crime, which is rampant, but directed against one particular class, I shall, in the absence of Dr. Hillis, take the responsibility of declining to read this notice. This class in question has been eminent for the nobility of its character and the largeness of its charity. If these leaders will turn from their deliberate effort against one class to a general regeneration of the wicked, they will find no heartier support than from the people of Plymouth Church."

GEN. MERCIER IS ELECTED.

Is One of Three Successful Nationalist Candidates in the French Senatorial Contest.

PARIS, Jan. 29.—The election of ninety-nine Senators yesterday resulted in a practical rout for the Nationalists, only three out of their thirty candidates being elected.

The Nationalists made a great show of military men, including Gens. Mercier, Lambert, Prax, Rebillot, Pothier, Cluseret, and La Veuve, and Cols. Ravant and Monteil. Admiral Gallibert was also a Nationalist candidate. Of these Generals Mercier and Lambert alone succeeded, both commanding large majorities. Mercier was the principal Nationalist candidate.

The defeat of their whole list including Gens. Prax and La Veuve in the Department of Charente, is tantamount to a rebuff to M. Cavaignac, former Minister of War, who had backed the list. He immediately resigned the Presidency of the General Council of the department, which had opposed his nominees.

On the first balloting the elections were decisive in eighty-seven cases, the results being divided as follows: Republicans, 54; Liberal Republicans, 5; Radicals, 15; Socialists, 6; Nationalists, 3; and Monarchists, 4.

In twelve cases second ballotings were necessary. The final result modified the figures of the first balloting, so that the Senators elected yesterday show the following party divisions: Republicans, 61; Liberal Republicans, 6; Radicals, 18; Socialists, 7; Monarchists, 4, and Nationalists, 3.

The general result leaves the composition of the Senate virtually unchanged. The Figaro says:

"We have gained nothing and lost nothing. If to-morrow a Ministry came before the Senate tending toward either unintelligent reaction or Socialist adventure, the Senate would repeat its treatment of the Ministry of M. Bourgeois and would force a resignation."

The Nationalist press is elated at the success of Gen. Mercier and the defeat of the Dreyfusard publicist, M. Reus. The Dreyfusard papers alone express their regret at the latter's rejection because he took a leading part throughout the Dreyfusard campaign.

There was a scene of excitement outside the Hotel de Ville when M. Rane's defeat and Gen. Mercier's election were announced almost simultaneously, the news being greeted with cries and counter-cries of "Vive Mercier," "Vive la République," and "Conspuez Rane," but there were no disorders.

Gen. Mercier was Minister of War when Dreyfus was arrested and tried in 1894. Eighteen months ago, when it became evident that the case would probably be reopened, it was charged by the Dreyfusards that Mercier had secured the conviction of Dreyfus in order to protect himself from the attacks of the radical and clerical press led by L'Intransigeant and La Libre Parole.

The evidence given a year ago before the Cour de Cassation, and later repeated at the Rennes court-martial, clearly showed that Mercier, when Minister of War, had permitted the introduction of evidence before the first court-martial, the existence of which both Dreyfus and his counsel were ignorant. Moreover, it was shown that the most important piece of the evidence thus illegally introduced, did not refer to the prisoner, and that Mercier had deliberately lied to his colleagues in the Ministry concerning it. On account of these revelations a bill was introduced in the Chamber to bring the ex-Minister of War before the Senatorial High Court. The bill was laid aside and has not since been called up.

Owing to the position that Mercier had assumed at the court-martial as the defender of "honor of the army," he was invited by the Nationalists to stand as a candidate for Senatorial honors. During the last month he has made several speeches, the burden of which has been that France was in peril and that only he could save her.

Woman Killed by Coal Gas.

HAZLETON, Penn., Jan. 28.—Gas escaping from a defective stove in the home of Stephen Kandolf of Honeybrook, while all members of the family and six boarders were fast asleep early this morning, caused the death of Mrs. Kandolf, aged thirty-nine years, and almost suffocated all who were in the house. The gas was detected by two boarders who returned home after 3 o'clock this morning, and who thereupon awakened the household. Mr. Kandolf and two of the boarders are in a serious condition, but will probably recover.

General Manager of Plant System.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Jan. 28.—It is announced that on Feb. 1 Capt. W. B. Denham, Division Superintendent at Gainesville, Fla., will succeed Bradford Dunham, who has resigned, as General Manager of the Plant system.

ANGLOPHOBES IN PARIS

Open Antagonism to the British Becomes Less Evident.

RUSSIA'S ATTITUDE THE CAUSE

Malato's Dreyfusard Play Produced—Count d'Assailly, Accused of Murder, Is Acquitted.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—The anti-English feeling has not been so rampant here during the past few days as it was at the beginning of the Boer war. The principal reason of this is that the French temperament easily tires of any one point of view, but there is also another consideration which has its importance. Russia, the sole friend which France has in the world, has declined to take any steps which might tend to divert the attention of the British Government from its enormous task in Africa.

A far-seeing diplomatist, with whom I had some conversation yesterday, enunciated the startling theory that when the Boer war was terminated it is quite possible that a very thorough understanding might be come to between England and Russia.

Russia has watched closely the attitude of Germany toward England since the outbreak of the war. In spite of the apparent friendliness of the German Emperor, the irreconcilable hostility of the German people is visible to all. Only the most persistent optimist could hope that England could ever forgive the German people for its recent attitude, or that any real good feeling can subsist again between these two countries. Anybody who knows Germany knows that the English and the German character are opposed to one another at nearly every point. There is not this fundamental antagonism of sentiment between the Englishman and the Russian. The United States has an old friendship for Russia, and is now on very friendly terms with Great Britain.

France seems to have some inkling of this change of front on the part of Russia toward England. It was noticeable that in the recent letter addressed by the Czar to Count Mouravieff he made no mention of France. Politicians here are a little sore about this omission, but they have accepted it as a warning, for which it was probably intended. France is certain to follow Russia's lead whatever it may be, and should it take the direction which my diplomatic friend thought likely, Germany would find herself very effectually isolated. Neither Italy nor Austria could be of much practical service to her, and in the presence of such a coalition the Triple Alliance might find its foundations shaken to the very bottom.

An echo of the Bourgogne disaster is a decision of the Court of Appeal reversing the verdict of a lower court which awarded 100,000 francs damages against the French company to which the ill-fated liner belonged. The Court of Appeal has come to the conclusion that the accident in which so many people lost their lives could not possibly have been avoided, and paid a tribute of the highest admiration to Capt. Deloncle, who, it will be remembered, was last seen before the boat went down, swinging like a madman to the rope of the foghorn. A leading decision of this kind will not tend to increase the popularity of the French Transatlantic service.

M. Malato's Dreyfusard drama "Barbapoux" was produced with great success last Saturday at the Théatre du Peuple. In the neighborhood of the Place de la République in a side street conveniently near to the local police station is the House of the People. It contains the Peoples' Theatre. "Barbapoux," which was the "clou" of the evening's programme, was preceded by a lecture by M. Cyvoct formerly of New Caledonia, on the new development to be given to popular dramatic art. He said that the Boers had proved the inability of trained Generals to compete in military strategy with the most ordinary grocer. There was no reason, therefore, that a simple citizen should not act as well as Mounet Sully or Réjane, in spite of inexperience.

M. Urbain Gohier, the well-known journalist who conducted such a vigorous campaign against the General Staff during the Dreyfus case, will also shortly make his début as a playwright. His first play, entitled "Le Resort," is a most powerful and daring work, dealing with the Revolution from a novel point of view. Some of the scenes are so realistic that the work will be given privately. The prèmiere, which will be quite a sensational event, is announced for the end of the month, at the Nouveau Theatre, and the piece will only be played for a few nights.

M. d'Harcourt is one of the best conductors in France, and now that Lamoureux is dead he is about the only man who can fill the void. With the permission of the curé of Ste. Eustache, he has arranged a series of grand oratorios, the first of which, Handel's "Messiah," was given yesterday. The performance was faultless and the church was packed.

A somewhat violent argument has arisen in connection with these concerts, as to whether a church is a proper place for them to be held. In France a curé's church is his castle, and he can do in it pretty well what he likes. But the Archbishop of Paris is an autocrat who does not allow his authority to be disputed. Whether he could have actually prevented these performances being given is rather difficult to say. He claims the right to do so, but a curé is an awkward customer to tackle. So Cardinal Richard contented himself with writing a reproachful letter on the subject to the curé and giving orders that special precautions be taken to prevent the concert from interfering with the ordinary services.

The artistic and literary club known as the Cercle de la Rue Volney has just opened its annual exhibition of paintings and sculptures. One hundred and forty-three painters and fourteen sculptors—all members of the club—have sent in work. Among the members I noticed canvases by Bouguereau, Bonnat, Carolus-Duran, Henner, and Benjamin Constant. The latter has sent a large portrait of an aged lady, dressed in black, sitting in an arm chair and with her hands clasped about her knees. The execution of the work is admirable. It is sure to receive great attention in the coming Salon, where, in due course, it will be hung. Bouguereau sends "Une jeune Mère," a big picture representing a young woman in light attire, holding a baby in her arms. Bonnat shows a portrait of Mlle. M., an excellent piece of work. Carolus-Duran sends a sketch representing two female figures bathing in the fountain of a park. Henner has a young Alsatian woman, and Jules Lefebre a Velléda.

The exhibitions of the Cercle de la Rue Volney being as it were, percursors to the annual exhibitions of the Salon des Beaux Arts, many of the pictures will go from the former to the latter place.

In the Central Criminal Court of Justice the trial of Count d'Assailly—a case which has been arousing considerable interest—was brought to a termination yesterday. The story, as unfolded to the Court, is as follows: Count d'Assailly is man of fifty-five. As a young man he passed with success the various examinations in the military schools of Saint Cyr and later on as an officer served with distinction in the Franco-Prussian war of 1870. The war over, the Count left the army and, coming in for considerable fortune, led a life of ease and dissipation. In 1887 he married. Then years later and at the age of fifty-four, the Count fell violently in love with a demi-mondaine. After spending all his money the moment for separation came, and the Count, although married, could not support the idea of bidding a final good-bye to the young woman in question.

The Count played a final game of poker with her, in which he rose a heavy loser, and then shot the girl through the head. He fled from the house and was picked up in the gutter, insensible from drink, by the waiter of a neighboring café. The girl recovered, or the Count might have been guillotined. As it was, his mother and the girl's mother met, there was an exchange of condolences and congratulations, in which a check for 12,000 francs was carefully wrapped up.

The Countess d'Assailly, the prisoner's wife, begged the jury to give her her husband back. This they did, for they promptly acquitted him, and the Count, in a transport of gratitude, kissed his counsel.

Turpentine Producers to Combine.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Jan. 28.—The Southern Naval Stores Company has applied to the Superior Court here for a charter. The capital is to be $300,000, with the privilege of increasing to $2,000,000. It is proposed to bring the producers of turpentine in Georgia, Alabama, and Florida into the company, which will succeed the Savannah Naval Stores Company. The main office is to be in this city, with branches at New York, Jacksonville, Fernandina, and other places.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

There is a New Jersey clergyman with a well-deserved reputation as a sportsman, who was one of the early frequenters of the Richardson and Rangeley Lake regions, in Maine. His tall, athletic figure has always been seen at the Sportsman's Shows at the Garden, and the Maine guides have always been glad to welcome him, as they knew and admired his skill. Three years ago he found a new friend in Campbell McNab, a Canadian guide, with whom he hunted and fished in the River du Loup country. "McNab will not be here this Spring," said he to a friend on a commuters' train, who had also had the benefit of McNab's skill as a guide in some of his outings. The friendly commuter was surprised, and said there must be some mistake, as the Canadian had promised to be here. "I have received a letter from Mr. X. of Quebec, telling me that in some sort of a quarrel with his Indians McNab had been murdered," said the dominie, "and I feel as if I had lost a valued friend, for I took the greatest liking to that man. He must have had some sort of a romantic history behind him. He was one of the best educated men I have met in my travels, for, besides knowing all there was to know about the woods and waters of his section of Canada, he had a fund of book learning that was away beyond that of the average man. I suppose he was another case of a younger son gone wrong, or something of that sort, for I remember that he gave me one of the hardest arguments I ever had in my life on a theological point, on which he was as well posted as I was, I am sure. By the camp fire I have been charmed with his talk about authors, their lives, and their motives. Poetry he was thoroughly conversant with, and back of the roughness of his exterior there was a gentleness and manliness that seemed to tell of good birth and breeding. Well, a good hunter, a charming man, and a perfect companion is gone, and I am very sorry, for it had been my intention to hunt him up this Fall for a final season in the woods. But now I think I shall go back to Maine once more and try some of the old-time guides that are still to be found at Phillips."

A couple of weeks ago it was pointed out in this column that the flag of the Grant Monument Association, which flies from the pole given by the Daughters of the American Revolution, was so thoroughly whipped cut and ragged as to be a disgrace to the location and the city. This week a new flag with all the stripes and stars that belong to an American flag was flown, and had a windy baptism. It is a very welcome improvement.

One of the Fulton Market fish dealers just back from a trip to the East has found a speculative Maine fisherman who expects to reap a good profit as a result of his foresight. Lobsters, he knew, as did every one else in Maine, were a scarce article in the market, and one that was always salable. When the catch was at its best he bought all the lobsters he could get with his capital. He got about 25,000. These he has impounded in "cars," holding them for the demand in the New York market in the Spring. As the lobsters are of good size, he will be able to supply a demand that it is very hard to meet. He will place no price on his stock now, preferring to carry his speculation to the end.

When he ordered the bottle of low-priced claret with his luncheon he repeated the same old joke about it being California wine with a French label. But the man who was his guest happened to be in the wine trade in a way, and he prepared once more to explode the joke. "That's the foolish sort of talk you can hear all over the country," said he, "and it really is foolish when you know the facts. French clarets, unless they come from some vineyard of repute, when they are known as 'chateau wines,' sell at the presses for about 50 cents a gallon in our money. It would cost a Frenchman more than double that to import New York, St. Louis, or California wines of the cheapest grades. Now, it happens that there has been a heavy crop of foreign wines for several years past, and there has been no reason for its importation, except for blending purposes. That is indulged in to a certain extent because the American wines have considerable more body than do the French wines. The American wine is added to French wines, of the costlier classes at that, and not to the commoner grades, such as are ordinarily sold at the restaurants. I do not say that some of the dealers are above putting French labels on California wines and selling it as imported, but there is less necessity for that now than ever before. Connoisseurs in wines have begun to use American vintages in place of French, unless they can get French wines that they know to be the real thing, bottled by French handlers, who would not stoop to deception. With the incentive for the deception lacking, does it seem probable that the wine we are drinking at so moderate a price should be other than exactly what it pretends to be, when it costs the importer less than he would pay for California wine. And you can get better California wine for less money if you only knew how and where to order it."

Pioneers in the menhaden fisheries which have grown to be so great an industry in this country, and incidentally, so some claim, wholesale destroyers of food fish of the sea, were the Church Brothers of Providence. One of the men connected with the concern tells of an experiment making at this time in the Gulf of Mexico, which, if it proves successful, will keep the industry running all the year round, instead of during the six months which is now devoted to operating in Northern waters. The American Fisheries Company, which is the Fish Oil Trust, has sent four steamers to the Gulf, where the menhaden are supposed to spend the Winter months, and which it is also suspected is the spawning ground of the bony fish, or menhaden. "If the fish prove to be residents of the Gulf, as we expect," said this menhaden expert, "it will completely revolutionize our business and open up a field that was never before explored. But if you say anything about the matter, please make it very plain that we are not going there after mullet, sea trout, squeteague, shad, or any other food fishes. We do not want that sort of fish at all, as they are no good for our purposes. What we want are the bony fish, whitefish, or menhaden, as they are variously called, which are all oil and bone, and utterly unfit for food."

A party of horsemen were chatting about the prospects of the coming season at the Hoffman House last evening, when one of them remarked: "The most significant evidence to me that the coming season will be an exceptionally good one, is the fact that one of the best-informed men in the business recently offered the widow of Col. Kip $165 per share for the entire block of stock that the Colonel held in the Coney Island Jockey Club. She refused the offer on the advice of W. K. Vanderbilt, the new President of the club, who told her agent that she had better hold it for at least $200, as the stock was well worth that sum."

"Speaking about foxes," said J. E. Bain of Poughkeepsie, "I think the residents of Connecticut and Massachusetts are playing it rather low down on the Supervisors of our county (Dutchess.) We pay a bounty of $1 a head for every fox snout turned in as a means of getting rid of the nuisances. They are coming in so thickly that our folks have come to believe that the people of neighboring States and counties are raising foxes and turning in the heads for us to pay for. No one has ever seen so many live foxes in our section as we now see pelts at $1 each."

To the visitor at the Aquarium who came from the country originally and had fished in the muddy streams in his boyhood days for bullheads, a most attractive feature of the big glass tanks are the two big catfish from the muddy waters of the Mississippi, at St. Louis. They have places of honor on the seaward side of the big building, and their tank is constantly surrounded by men, who are almost sure to ask with a laugh: "Did you ever catch such a big bullhead as that?" The fish are about four feet long, and weigh about seventy-five pounds each. So they are not large ones of their kind, for the Mississippi River catfish sometimes runs close to 200 pounds in weight. This pair were dug out of the mud to be sent here last December as a present to the city. Their appetites are not so ferocious as the size of their mouths would indicate, which is perhaps due to the fact that this is their hibernating season, and they have not yet got thoroughly used to the change in their surroundings and habits.

Judging from the outbreak of Chinese restaurants all over town, the city has gone "chop-suey" mad. Two new ones were opened in the Tenderloin district last week, according to the police, and both of them are restaurants where Chinese dishes are served, and not masks for something worse. Jaded appetites of "men-about-town" who affect absinthe frappé, brandy, and strong cigars, may take to the curious compounds that the Chinese cooks serve, but the money comes from the stranger in town. They take in one of these institutions without going down town to the Chinese quarter, so that they may talk about it when they get back home as one of the "elephants" to be met with in gay New York.

GRAND JURY CALLS WISHART.

Clergyman Who Gravely Accuses the Police of Trenton Must Substantiate His Charges.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 28.—The Rev. Alfred W. Wishart of the Central Baptist Church, who, in a sermon a week ago, severely arraigned the Police Department of this city, charging that gambling, prize fighting, Sunday liquor selling, and improper exhibitions were being conducted in Trenton, has received a subpoena to appear before the Mercer County Grand Jury tomorrow to substantiate his assertions. Dr. Wishart stated that the Chief of Police was being restrained in his duty by powerful influences, and that money was being paid for police protection.

The Grand Jury has taken hold of the matter at the instance of Mayor Briggs, who went before it and said that Dr. Wishart's charges were of such a nature that they should either be substantiated or the Police Department exonerated.

Dr. Wishart made no reference to the matter in his sermon to-night.

WILL BE A PURE BEER BILL.

Assemblyman Burnett Says a Proper Measure Would Be Approved by Gov. Roosevelt.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—Assemblyman Jean L. Burnett of Ontario County, a member of the Public Health Committee, said to-day there was little doubt in his mind that the proposition to regulate by statute the making and disposition of fermented liquors in this State would be brought to the notice of the Legislature during the Winter.

"While on this subject," said Assemblyman Burnett, "I am reminded to say that a great deal of misapprehension appears to exist as to the outcome of the pure beer agitation in the Legislature last year. The impression seems to be widespread that the bill passed both houses, but was not approved by the Governor. It is fair to Gov. Roosevelt that the facts should be understood by the public at large, who certainly favor the passage of a pure beer act.

"The Public Health Committee's bill passed the Assembly, was reported from the Senate committee, but never came to a final vote in the upper house. The Coggeshall bill, which was termed by some a pure beer bill, simply provided that no substitute for hops should be used in the making of beer, and was all right as far as it went. It passed both houses, but failed of Executive approval for the reason that the present public health law covers the point. While I have no authority to quote Gov. Roosevelt, I am satisfied that he would indorse a practical measure dealing with this subject if it should come to him."

When asked if he intended to present a pure beer bill at the present session, Mr. Burnett said: "As to that I do not care to say. Rest assured, however, that such a measure will be introduced, and vigorously championed. It makes no difference who offers it, so long as it is practically drawn."

ATTACKED MOTHER AND SISTER.

Man Thought to Be Insane from Cigarette Smoking Tries Murder.

BOUND BROOK, N. J., Jan. 28.—John Dagel, supposed to be insane from cigarette smoking, last night attempted to murder his mother and sister. Seizing a knife he first attacked his sister, who escaped from him unharmed. He then turned upon his mother and inflicted several long but not deep gashes on her face and body. The sister summoned help, and the young man was overpowered and taken to jail. A commission will inquire into his sanity.

Dagel is twenty-three years old, and for a number of years has been a heavy cigarette smoker. He is said to have frequently smoked from 125 to 150 in a day.

Eleventh Annual Convention and Banquet of the Organization.

The eleventh annual convention and banquet of the Chi Sigma Chi Fraternity was held at Marsh's, 104 West Thirty-fourth Street, last Saturday. Matters pertaining to the business of the fraternity were discussed and acted upon until 6:30 P. M., after which a recess was taken until 8:30, when the banquet was served.

Several speeches were made and toasts responded to during the evening. The announcement was made that the fraternity will meet next year, in January, in this city. At the conclusion of the last toast, "Good Night," the convention adjourned, the members all agreeing that they had had a pleasant evening and a good time.

Those present were Wm. Conklin, T. B. Connery, C. L. Talty, F. S. Hoeckley, H. A. Thomson, F. K. Lord, C. H. Caldwell, W. L. Brooks, H. B. Aschoff, S. B. Munson, E. R. Palmer, A. D. Griffith, H. D. MASON MAKES A STATEMENT.

Senator Says He Did Not Know He Was in the Tippecanoe Club.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—Senator Mason of Illinois in a signed statement concerning the published report that he had been requested to withdraw from the Old Tippecanoe Club of Chicago said to-night:

"I notice by the paper that I was expelled from the Tippecanoe Republican Club in Chicago. I never applied for membership. I heard through the press that charges against me had been preferred by Col. (?) McWhorter, that I did not agree with the President on the Philippine and Boer questions.

The Senator then makes a personal attack upon the integrity of Col. McWhorter, and adds:

"This (the reference being to a personal and not political matter) is the only communication as to any charges against my Republicanism, directly or indirectly, I have ever had with Col. (?) McWhorter, Chairman of the Committee on Political Action of the Old Tippecanoe Club of Chicago. Had I known that I was a member of the club and that McWhorter was Chairman of any important committee, I should have resigned. Meantime I am for liberty and self-government in Cuba, Philippine Islands, South Africa, and Chicago, McWhorter or no McWhorter."

MONTAUK CLUBHOUSE ROBBED.

EAST HAMPTON, L. I., Jan. 28.—A stranger who gave his name as Allen E. Johnston of Brooklyn was arrested on board a train at Patchogue last night. He was taken before Justice Hiram Sheritt, at this place, and charged with grand larceny by Phineas Dickinson, caretaker of the Montauk Association's clubhouse, near the site of Camp Wickoff, at Montauk.

It is alleged that Johnston obtained admittance to the unoccupied club building by claiming to represent the Crescent Club of Brooklyn, which he said was negotiating for a lease of the property with De Forest Brothers of 30 Broad Street, New York City. After being shown the premises he returned to Dickinson's house and then returned alone to the clubhouse on a pretext of taking the outside measurements.

It is alleged he ransacked the premises and secured about seventy pounds of silverware. He took the westbound train on Saturday afternoon, and the robbery was afterward discovered by Dickinson, who telegraphed the Southampton and Patchogue authorities.

Say Fredonia Fire Was Incendiary.

FREDONIA, N. Y., Jan. 28.—Owing to rumors that the recent fire in this place that caused the loss of two lives and some $200,000 worth of property was of incendiary origin, an investigation has been started by Coroner Charles Blood. It is understood that the insurance companies intrested are withholding the payment of claims until the investigation has been held.

Ex-Volunteer Officer Arrested.

JOHNSON CITY, Tenn., Jan. 28.—"Ike" T. Jobe, formerly a Captain in the Sixth United States Immunes, who is accused of fraudulently selling Government transportation orders to ticket scalpers and of an illegal use of Government penalty envelopes, was captured near here to-day. If Jobe fails to give a bond of $3,000 he will be placed in Knoxville jail to await transfer to Columbus, Ohio.

INSANITY AMONG CRIMINALS.

ALBANY, Jan. 28.—In his annual report to be submitted to the Legislature to-morrow State Superintendent of Prisons Collins devotes some space to the increase in the number of insane criminals. He says there are now confined at Matteawan nearly 200 more than the hospital was designed to accommodate, it having been built to house 550 patients, while 719 are now crowded into it. Mr. Collins says:

"In view of the character of this excessive population, the condition of the institution is one of great discomfort, and the cause of much concern that compels the most constant watchfulness by the administration.

"The overpopulation of the institution is a very urgent demand for the earliest practicable completion of the new hospital at Dannemora, so as to afford the necessary relief at Matteawan which can be obtained in no other way."

The east wing, kitchen, and dining room of the Dannemore institution are complete, excepting doors and floors and the plastering of the interior walls. For this work no funds are available. On account of the advance in the price of plumbing materials, all bids received for plumbing and draining the buildings exceeded the appropriation of $10,000 made by the last Legislature for the purpose. Nothing can be done in plumbing and draining until a further appropriation be made.

A pecular fact is that the Elmira Reformatory sent within five as many insane to the prison as all of the State prisons put together, and fifteen more than all the penitentiaries. Forty were sent from Elmira and forty-five from the three State prisons.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Major Thomas A. Brander.

Major Thomas A. Brander, Past Grand Commander of the Virginia Grand Camp of Confederate Veterans, and who was known throughout the South for his prominence in all Confederate reunions, died at Richmond yesterday, aged sixty years.

At the outbreak of the civil war young Brander joined the famous F Company, First Virginia Regiment, which was ordered to Harper's Ferry at the time of the capture of John Brown, and was sent to Charleston at the time of Brown's execution. He entered the Confederate Army as a private in 1861. His promotion was rapid, and within a year he was made Captain in the Provisional Army of Virginia. In the latter part of 1861 he assisted in raising the Letcher Battery, and was commissioned First Lieutenant by Gov. Letcher.

At the battle of Chancellorsville, May, 1862, he was promoted to the Captaincy of the battery for bravery. Capt. Brander was badly wounded at the first battle of Fredericksburg, December, 1862. He served as Captain till 1865, when he was made Major of artillery, serving until the surrender at Appomattox. He took part in nearly all of the battles of the Army of Northern Virginia.

Major Brander held the honorary rank of Major-General, commanding the Virginia Division, United Confederate Veterans.

Alanson Borden.

Alanson Borden, ex-Mayor of New Bedford, and for many years Judge of the Third District Court of Bristol County, died at that place yesterday, aged seventy-seven years. He was born in Tiverton, R. I., in 1823, was educated in New York State, admitted to the bar in 1850, and was made Judge in 1864. He served as representative to the Massachusetts Legislature in 1859 60, and as Assistant Assessor under the internal revenue law in 1864. As Mayor of New Bedford in 1877 Judge Borden will be long remembered, being on a platform of the enforcement of the no-license law. After election Mayor Borden lived up to his platform. Judge Borden had been married three times, surviving his last wife two years. He leaves two children, his son being William A. Borden of New Haven, Conn.

The Rev. William W. Fessenden.

The Rev. William W. Fessenden died at his home, 339 Washington Avenue, Brooklyn, on Saturday. He was born in Brattleborough, Vt., eighty-eight years ago, and was a nephew of Gov. Holbrook of that State. He was ordained a minister at the Clinton Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, twenty years ago. Since that time he had devoted himself to mission work at his own expense. Part of the time his work was prosecuted under the direction of the City Mission and T large decrease in the notes of the Bank of Russia in 1897 was largely due to the fact that the monetary reform plan, by making the gold imperial equal to 15 rubles instead of 10, reduced the liability for the notes (then at a discount) by one-third, and that this and the subsequent large accumulations of gold brought about the present favorable situation of the bank. In Austria, while there has been an increase of notes, the ratio has been maintained above 50 per cent. for three years, but gold has not been paid out freely for notes.

Comparing England and the United States, Mr. Muhlman says that the Bank of England regulates its own discount rate as well as that of the rest of the financial world by the relation between the cash in its banking, and not its note issue department. On account of the liabilities to depositors in the New York associated banks, they are also required to consider their cash reserves as against their deposits, 25 per cent. being the tacitly fixed minimum, and not cash being practically equal to gold, since the notes included therein are convertible at once into gold at the Treasury.

These tables of the Bank of England, the New York banks, and the United States Treasury are offered in support of his statement by Mr. Muhlman:

UNITED STATES TREASURY.

End of	Notes.	Gold.	Ratio.
1896	466	137	29.4
1897	453	161	35.5
1899	435	240	55.2

From these figures Mr. Muhlman deduces that the sharp advance in the London discount rate at the end of 1899 was justified, but the only institution in Europe that could spare gold was the Bank of Russia. It is reported that the Bank of Germany actually gained some $23,000,000 from Russia soon after the close of 1899, but the demands were naturally directed to this country.

NEW ENGLAND PROSPERITY.

Discussing business conditions, A. J. Miller of Providence, Vice President of Whitehead Brothers' Company, says:

"General business conditions have not been so good in New England in years. Our State is a perfect hive of industry, and mills that have not been in operation in years are now running full blast. In textiles the manufacturers of our State are doing a great business, and it is a fact that some of our cotton mills are so filled with orders that they are running nights—a condition of things that has not prevailed in years.

"The manufacturers of locomotives and steam engines are also very busy, while the makers of jewelry, especially of the cheaper kind, which the working people buy when they have money, are especially active.

"In our own line—steel and iron products—I may say that our sales last year exceeded our sales in any year of business. As for the outlook, it is most promising."

TO REGULATE PRICES.

Meetings of the leading manufacturers of nuts, bolts, and screws were held in this city last week for the purpose of discussing plans to regulate prices. It was intimated that a consolidation of the various interests was in contemplation, but an official of one of the companies, discussing the matter, said:

"No consolidation is in view—certainly not at present, in the peculiar condition of the money market and the doubtful view which some people are at present inclined to take of consolidations. We shall be content at present if we can assure to ourselves fair and stable prices for our products. Any increase that may be made will be a necessary one, due to the increase of our raw material."

MORE EQUIPMENT.

Among the orders for new equipment placed last week by various railroads are the following:

Columbia Southern, 50 box cars; Gulf and Ship Island, 200 flat cars; Mobile and Ohio, 500 freight cars; Duluth, Messabee and Northern, 10 caboose cars; Colorado and Southern, 250 coal cars; Monterey and Mexican Gulf, 100 box cars; Pecos Valley and Northeastern, 300 stock cars; Bangor and Portland, 25 gondola cars; Hocking Valley, 1,000 coal cars; New York, Ontario and Western, 5 drawing-room cars; Atchison, 200 furniture and 10 chair cars; Pittsburg and Western, 6 locomotives; Mobile and Ohio, 10 locomotives, and Iowa Central, 15 locomotives.

THE GERMAN MONEY MARKET.

BERLIN, Jan. 28.—An official of the Reichsbank, who was interviewed to-day regarding the financial situation, said:

"In deciding to reduce the rate only ½ per cent. the bank was influenced by the large volume of discounts, which are 160,000,000 marks above those of last year, by the heavy money demands of domestic business, and by the unfavorable foreign exchange rates. Moreover, Great Britain will raise a big war loan, and we understand that Russia will make another effort to raise a loan.

"The present rate of private discount is abnormal, not representing the actual condition of the money market, but caused by an artificial maneuvre made to prepare the market for municipal loans, a large volume of which has been waiting for more favorable conditions. Many cities wish money for electric lighting and traction plants; but the bank considers it advisable to restrict this borrowing to the limits of what is really necessary.

"A further rate reduction, however, is probable about Feb. 7. The gold movement this month has been very slight; several millions have gone to England upon Russian account, and there has been an insignificant export to Holland."

The speculation last week was chiefly in coalers, which were very firm, owing to the increasing coal famine. Iron shares were also strong. The Government has ordered 9,304 freight cars. Owing to the rise of foreign ores and ocean freights, German miners will raise the price of ore 2 or 3 marks per ton for 1901 delivery. The coke syndicate is getting 24 marks for 1901, as against 16 for the present. The Japanese Government has sent 200 tons of coal to Germany to experiment in coking.

Lehigh Valley Elevator Burned.

PERTH AMBOY, Jan. 28.—Fire was discovered in the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company's grain elevator at this place early this morning. The local Fire Department and two of the company's tugs responded. It was impossible to check the flames, and the entire structure was consumed. The New Haven schooner Alice B. Phillips caught fire, and was damaged to the extent of $3,000. The total loss is estimated at $25,000. The origin of the fire is not known.

LEHIGH VALLEY PURCHASE.

Reported Acquirement of the Newark Park House Property.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 28.—The Park House property, at the corner of Park Place and North Canal Street, which has been owned for over a quarter of a century by the William Walter Phelps estate, has been sold to a corporation represented by State Senator Thomas N. McCarter, Jr. What corporation Mr. McCarter represents he declines to tell, but it is believed to be the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company.

The railroad company owns the Morris Canal, which runs parallel with North Canal Street directly opposite the hotel property. It is believed that it is the intention of the company to utilize the bed of the canal, which runs from Jersey City to Mauch Chunk, for railroad purposes, as it has ceased to be profitable as a freight waterway. If that realy be the intention, the Park House property will make an admirable site for a station, as it would practically front on Broad Street within two blocks of Market Street, the principal square in the city. All the company would have to do is tunnel about forty feet under Canal Street for passengers to reach the cars.

If this change should come to pass, it is believed the Pennsylvania Railroad would also have use of the spur, which could be laid from its tracks at Market Street Bridge to Broad Street, and thus give it a station at the latter street where up-town passengers could board trains, instead of having to go to Market Street Station, as at present.

Receiver for New York Trolley Road.

SARATOGA, Jan. 28.—Justice Houghton, in the Supreme Court, yesterday appointed Fred H. Beach receiver of the Ballston Terminal Railroad, a twelve-mile county trolley line owned in Philadelphia, and bonded for $250,000. The application for a receiver was made by David Taompson, a judgment creditor of Ballston Lake.

WAR AMONG THE TEACHERS

Demands of Brooklyn High School Delegates Make Trouble.

Arrangement of Salary Schedule Upset—Queens Borough Teachers Dissatisfied—School Bill Muddle.

Public school teachers eagerly discussed yesterday a report to the effect that at the meeting of the conference committee at the City College last Wednesday there was a lively difference of opinion and a sharp exchange of words.

For some time an effort has been made to get the teachers' associations in the five boroughs to come to an agreement as to a uniform salary schedule, the idea being to have a bill introduced at Albany embodying the rates agreed upon. It was found difficult to prepare a schedule that was satisfactory to all the associations, owing to the differences in grade that exist in the various boroughs. On the afternoon of Jan. 20, however, after a three hours' conference at Public School No. 1, on Henry Street, an agreement apparently satisfactory to all the associations was devised. There were present at this meeting eleven delegates, seven women and four men, representing the different tea c hers' associations in Manhattan and the Bronx; six delegates, three men and three women, representing the Brooklyn associations; two male delegates from Richmond, and one male delegate from Queens. It was announced at the close of the meeting, which was private, that the salaries of all the different grades of teachers in the elementary schools had been arranged, and that at another meeting in the City College last Wednesday the salaries of Principals, Vice Principals, first assistants, and heads of departments would be considered. It was said that this would be done quickly, as very little, if any, change in the salaries of these teachers was contemplated.

Dr. W. L. Ettinger, who is President of the New York City Teachers' Association, was not present at Wednesday's meeting. It was learned next day that he had gone to Albany with Mr. Walmsley and Miss Granger, two prominent Brooklyn teachers, to look after school affairs there.

There were eighteen delegates at Wednesday's meeting. Matters progressed quietly. It is said, until representatives from the Brooklyn High Schools' Association appeared on the scene and demanded that a certain schedule of salaries for them be made out. This demand, it is said, led to some heated talk, and the meeting came to a sudden end, amid some disorder.

It is also alleged that the Queens Borough teachers are annoyed because, as they claim, they have not been properly represented at the conferences.

It semed to be the general impression among teachers yesterday that there would be no school legislation at Albany this Winter. It is alleged that all or nearly all of the members of the Senate Cities Committee have each a school bill, and that, as each appears determined to pass his own bill, the result will be that none of the bills will become law.

BOOKKEEPING IN THE SCHOOLS.

Principal Stitt's Novel Plan to Teach Practical Methods.

Principal Edward W. Stitt of Public School No. 89, Lenox Avenue and One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Street, has hit upon a novel plan for teaching his pupils practical methods of bookkeeping. He has addressed a circular to many of the principal business houses in the city saying:

"Will you please send me a few problems of the kind which ordinarily occur in your business? I would like to have first stated the actual problem and then your way of solving the same. I am trying to discover how the business method of solving problems varies from that usually taught in the schools, in an effort to secure, if possible, a uniformity of method and a harmony between the schoolroom practice and the experience of the world.

"Wherever your method varies from the one you were taught in school a slight explanation of your new plan will greatly facilitate the comparison of your letter with those from other houses. I trust you may interest yourself in this matter and spare a minute from your valuable time to mark this request with your 'O. K. Answer,' so that it may receive the careful attention of your bookkeeper or cashier. Any further remarks or suggestions which from your long business experience you think may be of value will be fully appreciated."

Principal Stitt's plan has the cordial indorsement of President Little, Commissioners Kittel and O'Brien, Superintendent Jasper, Prof. Edward R. Shaw of the School of Pedagogy, R. H. Macy & Co., and John Wanamaker.

"It's a plan to teach the pupils practical in place of theoretical bookkeeping," said Commissioner O'Brien yesterday. "Principal Stitt talked it over with me, and it met with my hearty approval. It's an excellent idea."

The tenth German Charity Ball, given under the auspices of the Bachelors' Society of the German Liederkranz, Arion, and Beethoven Maennerchor, will take place at the Metropolitan Opera House on Thursday, Feb. 1. In the past nine years over $80,000 has been distributed to the various German charities as the net results of these balls. Among the prominent boxholders are George Ehret, Jacob Ruppert, Oswald Ottendorfer, Henry Villard, and Adam Weber. The ball will be opened by Robert C. Kammerer, President, and Mrs. William Forster.

Stabbing in Long Island City.

James Vogel of 69 Borden Avenue is in St. John's Hospital in Long Island City suffering from what may prove to be fatal wounds. He was stabbed in the back during a quarrel yesterday by Richard Krisse, with whom he boarded. Krisse claims the stabbing was done in self-defense. The stories of the men as to what led up to the quarrel disagree.

WAR ON "GREEN GOODS" MEN.

Post Office Officials to Disseminate Plain Warning—Congress May Repeal Law Which Holds Victims.

In all the large cities of the country gangs of "green goods" swindlers are operating successfully at present, and on account of the renewed activity of this class of rogues the United States Government authorities are considering steps which will, it is expected, put a stop to the business. The Federal statutes, although severe and covering all forms of swindling operated by means of the mails, are in a measure nullified by the fact that they make the unsophisticated dupe of the "green goods" men equally liable as a principal in the swindling transaction. For fear of punishment the "Come-ons," as they are called, after being robbed fail to complain to the authorities for fear of being sent to prison for contracting to buy counterfeit money.

Fourth Assistant Postmaster General J. L. Bristow and W. E. Cochrane, Chief of the Post Office Inspectors in Washington, have undertaken to fight the "green goods" men outside the courts. They have conferred with Chief Post Office Inspector J. D. King of this city on the subject and also with M. C. Forness, who is the Chief Post Office Inspector in Philadelphia. They have decided that publicity will be a powerful aid to the law and that posters describing "green goods" displayed at all the Post Offices in the United States will prevent the swindlers from finding victims. They may also, in the country, distribute leaflets describing the methods employed by the swindlers. This draft of a poster may be accepted at a conference which Assistant Postmaster General Bristow is to hold this week with the Chief Post Office Inspectors in Philadelphia:

"Beware of confidence men known to the authorities everywhere in the United States as 'green goods' operators, who send circulars through the mails offering to sell counterfeit paper money printed from plates which they say have been stolen from the Treasury Department in Washington. There are no such plates in existence, and the money which they exhibit as examples of alleged counterfeits are really genuine United States bills. These swindlers have no counterfeit money to dispose of, but by cunning schemes induce people to believe that they have, and then defraud them.

"The confidence men, all shrewd rogues, have many ways of playing their fraudulent tricks. A great many of them substitute dummy valises for the one containing the money which they exhibit to their dupes as the 'stuff.' Others make the change of valises when they undertake to express them to the home of the defrauded buyer. Still others of these rogues—desperadoes of the most pronounced type—lure their victims into a room and by force or the display of weapons rob them.

"It is a crime against the United States statutes to engage to either buy or sell counterfeit money, and also for confidence men to send circulars advertising counterfeit money—which they do not possess—through the mails. If you get such circulars turn them over to the Postmaster in your town.

"You are likewise cautioned against what may seem to you to be newspaper clippings telling of arrests of counterfeiters and the stealing of plates for printing paper money from the Bureau of Printing and Engraving in Washington, which usually accompany the 'green goods' circulars. These items are gotten up and printed by the confidence men so as to lead you to believe that they are true and were culled from the newspapers."

It is probable that at this session of Congress that part of the law which makes the "green goods" swindlers' dupe liable to imprisonment will be repealed.

BURMESE STOWAWAY'S TALE.

Experienced in Love's Sorrows and Travel, Though a Boy.

One of the most interesting persons at the Barge Office yesterday was Peter Bacon, seventeen years old, who, despite his rather prosaic name, is a full-blooded Burmese, with a luxuriant crop of black curly hair and fine eyes. He speaks English and several other languages fluently.

Bacon came here as a stowaway on the steamer Bucentaur, which arrived from Port Said on Saturday. Although so young, he has seen much of the world. He was for several years a wild animal trainer for a traveling menagerie and circus, but recently he fell in love with an equestrienne in the circus, who laughed at his suit. At Port Said his sorrow caused him to leave the circus and come to America to try and forget. He stowed himself away on the Bucentaur, and now he will be a prisoner until he or some good Samaritan pays his fine.

TO WELCOME MAUD GONNE.

La Normandie Disappoints Big Crowd on the Starr.

If the French Line steamship La Normandie, from Havre, on which Miss Maud Gonne, the "Irish Joan of Arc," is a passenger, had arrived yesterday afternoon the other passengers on the vessel might have imagined that the young woman was an American heroine. From 10 o'clock in the morning until 7 o'clock in the evening a crowd of enthusiastic persons cruised around the lower bay ready to give her a notable reception. They were under the leadership of the Maud Gonne Reception Committee, and consisted of men and women well known in Irish-American circles.

The steamer George B. Starr, flying Transvaal, Orange Free State, and American flags in about equal proportion, left the Barge Office pier at 10 o'clock, and dropped down the bay to await the big steamer. Among those on board were Patrick O'Brien, Thomas Brennan, Charles Burke, Edward Cary, C. C. Gladstone, John O'Connor, Miss E. M. Griffin, Miss Kate Hanbury, and Miss Maloney. The George B. Starr, after cruising about the Horseshoe for a time, steamed back to the Quarantine dock and tied up. The big band of music on board gave popular American and Irish airs, and the welcomers broached the cargo of refreshments, and, despite the bad weather, made a sort of picnic of the occasion.

The liner did not arrive, and the party reluctantly returned to the city, arriving at 7 o'clock last night. The George B. Starr will not make another trip to-day, but Miss Gonne will be received by the welcoming committee on the pier.

Former Real Estate Man Dead.

George Marshall, seventy years old, was found dead yesterday afternoon in his room in the lodging house at 47 Bowery. Gas was escaping in a small quantity from one jet. It is thought death was caused by a stroke of apoplexy which occurred just as the old man was turning out the gas before getting into bed. Mr. Marshall was employed at different times by real estate dealers. In former years he was in that business.

French Chefs' Exhibition and Ball.

Each of the prominent French chefs of the city is now at work devising some wonderful exhibit for the display and contest which precedes the French Cooks' Ball. The latter is to be held at Madison Square Garden on the night of Feb. 6, and the exhibition will be on view from 2 until 6 o'clock on the same afternoon. The proceeds of the exhibition and ball go to the Société Culinaire Philanthropique.

POLICEMAN CHASES RUNAWAY.

Frightened Horse Causes Lively Stir in Brooklyn Streets.

A runaway horse belonging to the grocery firm of Stemmermann & Rademacher at Broadway and Lewis Avenue, Brooklyn, caused considerable excitement yesterday morning before it was caught by a policeman.

The animal, harnessed to a wagon, was left standing in front of the firm's store on the Lewis Avenue side. The hissing of steam from an elevated train and the clanging of a trolley car bell frightened the horse and it ran away. It dashed along Lewis Avenue, and at Myrtle Avenue it just grazed two cars going in opposite directions. At Vernon Avenue two men, while trying to get out of the way, fell. The animal turned into Vernon Avenue and was pursued by Policeman Poplers, who captured it in front of the Vernon Avenue Police Station at Tompkins Avenue. The wagon was badly wrecked, and the horse slightly cut.

ST. LOUIS'S STORMY VOYAGE.

Passengers Alarmed by Wind and Wave—Ship Behaved Well.

The American Liner St. Louis, from Southampton, reached her dock at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, thirty hours overdue. The St. Louis reported a most tempestuous voyage, during almost the entire length of which she encountered tremendous head seas and fierce westerly gales. Such was the violence of wind and sea that Capt. Passow was compelled to order the engines run at half speed Saturday afternoon and night and yesterday forenoon.

The passengers were compelled to remain in the saloon and staterooms throughout the whole of the voyage, and at times when gigantic waves hurled themselves against the bows there was some excitement. Rumors among the passengers that one of the bow plates had been loosened and that the rolling and pitching of the ship had caused a slight displacement of the engine foundations, were laughingly denied by Chief Officer Taylor, who said:

"Although we had a very rough passage, the vessel behaved splendidly, and not the slightest damage was sustained."

OUR LONDON CABLE.

DOUBT IN THE MONEY MARKET.

Coming Demands of the Government the Key to the Situation—Diminished Trade Helps to Maintain Low Rates—Condition of Banks and Railroads.

Cable Correspondence.

Copyright 1900, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—Have we got to the bottom? That is the question of most interest in the money market. I am disposed to think we have, for after the bank rate was reduced to 4 per cent. on Thursday, the open market began to harden. On Wednesday three months' bank bills could now and then be discounted at a fraction under 3 per cent.; Saturday the rate was passing firm at 3¼. Short loans have not risen above per cent., but they are sure to follow discounts if the denudation of balances continues. There, however, is the doubtful point.

In the last fortnight the open market has lost upward of £4,000,000 through the collection of revenue and the repayments yesterday, but next week the Government, which has flooded the market with £4,000,000 in new credit procured from the bank, will in the ordinary course release large amounts and thus restore the money taken away, or part of it. It is consequently probable that the market may ease down again, and, as all the Continental markets are falling, a period of low rates might be considered assured.

The Bank of Germany's note circulation is now about £2,000,000 within the amount for which it has to pay the Government 5 per cent., and therefore it will probably come down to 5 per cent. soon. The Bank of France is back almost at the normal level, and your market seems to promise cheapness for a considerable period. Why, then, should not London rates further recede?

The recent dearness has stifled speculation, so much so that the Pennsylvania Railroad's issue of new shares was the only fresh public demand on capital made this week. Six per cent. has been like the Canadian Winter to the beaver, and general business has suffered as if from a stroke of paralysis. The fair inference, therefore, is that we are at the beginning of a period of stagnation and that the bank rate may even go lower.

I am not going to prophesy, but think a further reduction improbable, were it for no other reason than that the Government must soon be a heavy borrower and that foreign demands on the bank's stock of bullion are sure to revive ominously if the discount rate is allowed to go below 3 per cent. Even this rate is too low for safety, as witness the fact that all the other markets are now above us. But the truth is, guessing is barred by ignorance of the Government demands.

Report gives various amounts as about to be asked for next week by Parliament, the lowest £15,000,000, a sum altogether inadequate. Take it at that, and its collection and disbursement must have a powerful influence in first curtailing and then expanding the credit supplies of the market as the money is collected and paid out. If the payments involve exports of gold, stringency is certain again to appear. Further, India must soon come for a loan, and the Cape has been obliged to raise £600,000 already to avoid a default. It will be necessary to fund this and to provide for other colonies considerable sums, so as to keep the wolf from the door, and all this means either gold exported or intercepted.

On the best supposition, therefore, the London money market cannot remain comfortably easy for more than a week or two at a time. It stands to be shot at from all over the world.

The greatest help in the maintenance of low rates lies in the shocking destruction not only of speculative business on the Stock Exchange, but of trade enterprise in all directions. Although the 6 per cent. rate has gone like a bad dream, its consequences are with us still and will presently appear in diminished trade returns, factories running on half time or shut down, and general complaint. On the industrial side I think the reaction has made some progress and that we shall see a reduction in the use of banking credit in this direction alone which might under ordinary circumstances suffice to fix cheapness on the money market for months. All, however, depends on the Government, even the coal scarcity, which is becoming more and more acute and driving manufacturers to despair.

Our banks did well the last half of the year—much better than in the first month of the new year. Most of them have distributed higher dividends and in other directions strengthened their position with the public. It is otherwise with our railways. What between the steady increase of capital charges and the equally steady growth of working expenses, their common stocks are destined to suffer a slow, relentless diminution in dividends as the years pass. But our companies do not imitate the example of the best among the American ones and liberally screen themselves against future adversity by stopping capital outlay and providing for improvements from revenue. The universal motto is to pay dividends up to the hilt and let the future look after itself.

Interest in the trading in the market for outside securities during the past week was confined to a very few issues which were particularly prominent in an otherwise dull market. At the beginning of the week the amount of daily transactions was very small, and the market was dull, with a tendency, so far as it showed any tendency, toward lower prices. It was most irregular at the middle of the week, and then on the last two days assumed new strength and in a number of issues closing prices showed substantial improvement over the figures of the previous Saturday. The net gains amounting to 1 point or more were more numerous than the declines, and most of the stocks that were fairly active showed some improvement in price. Very little disposition was shown to take any active part in the market, which was, so to speak, left to itself. There was a certain amount of forced selling and a little buying of stock by persons attracted by the relatively low prices prevailing in a number of issues, but the public generally seemed to be waiting. Until the Stock Exchange market takes a more decided course and becomes more active, it does not seem probable that trading in the outside market will assume large proportions.

Little of a disquieting nature appears—on the contrary, practically all the news that comes to hand is of a favorable character. Where apprehension has been felt, such reports as were had tended to lessen fear as to the condition of the properties concerned, while stocks that were viewed with favor were pretty generally the subject of good news when any news at all was had. Few items of news of importance affecting curb stocks came to hand during the week, and relatively few rumors were heard. Some of the latter had to do with the local gas situation, and these attracted most attention at the close of the week.

That developments of much importance affecting the status of the several city gas companies are under way was the impression conveyed by the sharp advances which occurred in both issues of New Amsterdam Gas on Friday and Saturday. Following the announcement by that company that its charge for gas had been again reduced, this time to 65 cents, the rate charged by the Consolidated Company, a sharp decline occurred in the stock and the disposition appeared to be to let the stock go. The cut, it was said, meant that the gas war had not at all abated and showed that there was no prospect of an early settlement of the long-standing contest. The next day, however, large buying orders appeared in the market, and the price of both the common and preferred stocks rose considerably. That of the common went from 22 to 26⅝, and this issue closed at 26 bid, showing a net gain of 4 points. The preferred stock sold up to 49 and showed a net gain of 1½ points. This buying was accompanied by rumors to the effect that Consolidated Gas interests were making an effort to secure control of the New Amsterdam Gas Company by purchases of stock in the open market. Not much foundation appeared for this report, and it was not generally credited.

Interest in the stock appeared to be in a speculative following of the market movement, rather than in changes that had taken place and that the several companies stood about as they had several months ago. Nothing has yet occurred to show that the position of the New Amsterdam Company is other than it has been practically from the beginning of the fight, although the friends of the stock maintain that developments favorable to the New Amsterdam Company are near at hand. Those inclined to lessen the worth of these stocks point to the fact that the New Amsterdam Company's capitalization is proportionally very much larger than those of the other companies, and that in any consolidation practically the only one of the New Amsterdam issues that would be considered would be the bonds, which they say fully represent the value of the company's property, or nearly so. On the other hand it is maintained that the strategic position of this company adds very considerably to the value of its property and that there is no reason why the stock of the company should be ignored. As far as appears, the gas situation in so far as the New Amsterdam Gas Company is concerned remains unchanged. In some quarters it is believed that the strength of the New Amsterdam stock at the close of the week was the result of mere manipulation.

Rubber Goods was prominent among the industrials and made a net gain of 2½ points in the common and a fractional net gain in the preferred stock. Late in the week it was announced that after much litigation an agreement had been reached in regard to the Tillinghast patents covering the manufacture of rubber tires between the Diamond and Goodyear Companies and the owners of the patents. A three-quarters interest in the Tillinghast patents is held by the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, and it is believed that the earnings of that company will be very considerably increased as a result of the agreement which has just been reached. The result of the agreement will be a large advance in the price of tires, and it will also determine the amount of royalties to be paid by the companies manufacturing tires under the Tillinghast patents. The increase in the earnings of the Rubber Goods Company from these two sources will, it is estimated, amount to about $500,000 a year.

Standard Oil was prominent throughout the week. It advanced steadily and with practically no reactions from 498 to 520. Just at the close it dropped back to 518, and ended the week there, with a net gain of 20 points. Rumors of very large extra dividends to be declared in the near future accompanied the advance in the stock, and these reports were again strengthened by continued buying by insiders.

None of the copper stocks were active. Amalgamated Copper sold in small amount around 83, and closed at 82¾ bid, a net loss of a quarter of a point. British Columbia Copper declined 1½ points, to 9, and closed at 9 bid. Superior and Boston, which was recently put on the curb, remained at ⅛ bid, but there was little or no trading in the stock. The company owns some 300 acres of ore land south of Lake Superior, formerly owned by the Fond du Lac Company. It is said that a good deal of preliminary work has been done, but the company is not yet producing ore.

The electric stocks were all somewhat weak. Vehicle common went off to 40 and lost 3 points net. The preferred suffered a net loss of 16 points, closing at 55 bid. All the transportation stocks were lower, as was also Electric Axle.

THE MANCHESTER MARKET.

MANCHESTER, Jan. 28.—The cotton manufacturing industry continues in a very favorable position. Last week's actual business was possibly smaller than that of the two weeks previous, but engagements throughout are so heavy and extended as to secure profitable employment of all available machinery for a long time. In a word, it is a case of digesting a palatable dinner.

Meanwhile a small routine business is going on, large Eastern offers being turned down for better limits. Yarns closed fully 1-16 higher on the week. Exporters' yarns and fine goods attained remarkably high prices. The margin is still splendid; but the continued furious rise is beginning to excite apprehension.

Rouen reports an active trade, with rising prices. The German spinners have been booking large orders, and prices with them are again 2 pfennigs higher.

Bank of Spain's Report.

MADRID, Jan. 26.—The Bank of Spain's report for the week ended yesterday showed the following: Gold in hand, no change; silver in hand, increase 2,911,000 pesetas; notes in circulation, increase 126,000 pesetas.

LEGISLATURE.—The Governor last night sent in the name of Francis Hendricks to succeed Louis F. Payn as State Superintendent of Insurance. Senator Sullivan introduced a bill which opens the crusade against bucket shops. A bill was offered providing for a new park in the Thirty-first Ward, Brooklyn. Another measure offered provides for a jury of thirteen men in criminal cases. A Senate bill provides for gas in New York at a maximum price of 75 cents. Assemblyman Witter's anti-oleomargarine resolution was passed. Mr. Minton withdrew his resolution against Italian labor on the rapid transit tunnel.—Page 8.

CONGRESS.—Secretary Gage yesterday replied to the Senate resolution of Jan. 23, calling for information as to his dealings with officers of the National City Bank. Secretary Gage's action in the sale of the New York Custom House was again attacked by the Democrats in the House yesterday. Senator Mason took exception in a speech yesterday to a recently published interview with the British Consul at New Orleans. Senator Tillman spoke against the retention of the Philippines. It is believed that Senator Scott of West Virginia will not lose his seat because of the contest made against him. FOREIGN.—Gen. Buller reports that in the fight at Spion Kop Jan. 24 his forces lost among the officers 20 killed, 22 wounded, and 20 missing. Lord Dundonald, it is announced, is safe south of the Tugela River. The British Parliament meets today, but it is said the reference to the war in the Queen's speech will be colorless. Buller's defeat is greeted with satisfaction by the German press. It is intimated that the attempt to relieve Ladysmith may be abandoned, and that Lord Roberts may concentrate his forces on a central attack on the Orange Free State. The deposition of the Chinese Emperor is creating great dissatisfaction among the Chinese officials in the Yang-tse Valley. FOUR BOILERS EXPLODE.

One Man Killed and Nine Others Seriously Hurt—Others May Be in the Debris.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 29.—The steel department of Philipps, Nimick & Co.'s rolling mill was completely wrecked to-day and a dozen men were injured by an explosion of a battery of four large boilers. All the injured men were quickly removed from the ruins. Five were mutilated almost beyond recognition and one or two more deaths may result. The injured were taken to a temporary hospital and local physicians were summoned to relieve their suffering. Simon Holland, a fireman, died at Homeopathic Hospital soon after being removed from the debris. Nine others were hurt and it is thought that others of the workmen are in the ruins.

The explosion was one of the most terrific that ever occurred in a Pittsburg mill. The roof of the boiler room was completely lifted from the building and the flying iron and steel fell in all directions. Heavy beams and portions of the masonry were thrown from the foundations. The men were crushed to the ground on the spot where they were attending to the rolls, and those beside the boilers were scalded by the escaping steam. The families of the workmen who live in the neighborhood realized the extent of the accident the moment the thunder of the explosion was heard, and women and children rushed at once to the mill, crying for their loved ones, who were believed to be buried beneath the ruins.

The cause of the explosion cannot be known until a thorough investigation is made. No estimate of the property loss could be made to-day.

BRITAIN DEMANDS A LARGER ARMY

Press and Public Insist on Reinforcing Roberts.

NEW CAMPAIGN EXPECTED

Central Advance Into the Free State May Be Made.

It Is Now Admitted that All Attempts to Relieve Ladysmith Must End in Complete Failure.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—Press and public alike, while depressed over the defeat of Gen. Buller, unite in insisting that more troops must be sent to South Africa.

Public suspense, apparently, will terminate only when Lord Roberts gives the word for the forward movement into the Free State, which, according to the most cheerful view, he will be unable to do for a fortnight.

Whether he will permit Gen. Buller to make another attempt to relieve Ladysmith is quite outside the knowledge even of those closely connected with the War Office. With the troops due to arrive next month he may think himself strong enough to try two large operations. Combining the forces under Gens. Methuen, French, and Gatacre, and adding to them the arriving troops, Lord Roberts would have 70,000 for the invasion of the Free State, with 40,000 to 50,000 guarding communications, and 40,000 trying to rescue Ladysmith.

The public burns with impatience that something should be done, but there is nothing to do but to wait on the preparations. Oceans of ink are poured out in advice. Orators are at work in the provinces telling the people that Great Britain has "set her teeth in grim determination to see it through."

The Government's declarations in Parliament, the counter-suggestions of those outside the Government, and the consequent discussion in the press and on the platform will immediately enthrall public interest.

MORE MEN ON THE WAY.

Twenty thousand two hundred and twenty-two men and 155 guns are at sea. Eleven thousand infantry and 9,000 cavalry, including 5,000 Yeomen, are practically ready to embark. Therefore the Government, without doing more, can place at the disposal of Lord Roberts 40,000 additional men and 155 guns.

The further purposes of the War Office are supposed to embrace somewhere in the neighborhood of 50,000 more men. As the indication is that candidates will be rather scarce, the War Office will issue orders for those reservists who were found unfit at the previous mobilization examinations to report for further examination. Applicants for cavalry service are still freely offering as yeomanry.

COST OF THE WAR IN MEN.

Gen. Buller's operation has cost 912 men so far officially reported within ten days.

Applying to the 206 Spion Kop casualties reported to-day the rule of proportion, the losses of officers indicate probably 500 casualties yet to come. The total casualties of the war, compiled from official reports, are 9,523, nearly a division. Of these 2,486 are killed, 4,811 wounded, and the rest prisoners.

The aggregate British home troops in South Africa number 116,000, the Natalians 7,158, and Cape Colonials 21,000.

GEN. BULLER CRITICISED.

The newspapers here are not disposed to offer any apologies for Gen. Buller's defeat. The St. James's Gazette says:

"The meaning of the retreat is obvious. We have had to recognize that we cannot force our way through the enemy's lines to Ladysmith. Why, we do not know. If the Boer position is impregnable it ought never to have been attacked. If it is capable of being taken we were repulsed because the leadership was bad, and it is idle to attempt to conceal that the latter is far from incredible. To start out declaring there must be no turning back is eminently foolish.

"When swagger and rant prevail there is commonly plentiful lack of judgment and true resolution. It requires serious effort not to yield to the gloomy conviction that the intellectual and moral qualities which make for success have been replaced on our staff by words! words! words! The remedy for South Africa is not to add to the numbers but to put the troops where their force can come into play."

MUST FACE FACTS.

The Westminster Gazette invites the country to cast aside all delusions and recognize the fact that progress for the present is stopped in Natal, and that safety lies in concentration. "Gen. White's force, as an effective aid, must be written off, and probably most of Gen. Buller's army has left the Tugela. The Boers have been given time to prepare against an advance through the Free State, and we have not sufficient strength at present to undertake this advance with any safety. These are ugly facts, but those who disguise them are again misleading the public. The plain truth is that we will have to make a new army somehow from somewhere. We need at least 100,000 more men—50,000 to reinforce the Cape and 50,000 in reserve."

The Globe says:

"It would be a mistake to minimize the serious character of the situation in Natal. We have made a great effort from which great results were expected and have failed. The situation as it stands to-day points, but points with greatly augmented force, the same moral as did our previous mishaps. It is, that the war must be pressed on with redoubled energy.

FEARS PUT ASIDE.

"Our resources are not exhausted, but rather it may be said we are only just discovering how practically limitless they are. The country, we are sure, is in no mood of giving way to fears which are as groundless as they are unworthy. It has made up its mind to see this conflict through. Every check we receive in the field will only stiffen the determination of the people at home and in the colonies to achieve the end at whatever cost."

The Pall Mall Gazette comments in much the same tone, and adds:

"Even if Ladysmith falls, Spion Kop is not Majuba in the most vital sense. It will not end the war. There will be no muddling compound of 'magnanimity' and cowardice this time. The war will end when Gen. Roberts dictates the terms at Pretoria. To that end the empire's mind is made up."

The Evening Standard, commenting on the supposed natural advantages on the side of the Boers, says:

"This country also had and has great advantages, but, between the War Office, the Admiralty, and the Generals, they have been mostly nullified."

The St. James's Gazette this afternoon returns to scathing criticism of the language of Gen. Buller's reports. It says:

"Gen. Buller's reflection on the terror he put into the foe reminds us of things we have heard about Chinese Mandarins."

SPION KOP A BOER TRAP

Gen. Warren's Forces Were Decimated by a Murderous Fire from an Unseen Enemy.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—A special dispatch from Frere Camp, dated Friday, Jan. 26, 9:10 P. M., says:

"I have just ridden in here, having left Gen. Buller's forces in the new positions south of the Tugela to which they retired in consequence of the reverse at Spion Kop.

"The fighting, both before and after the occupation of the mountain, was of a desperate character. Spion Kop is a precipitous mountain, overtopping the whole line of kopjes along the Upper Tugela. On the eastern side the mountain faces Mount Alice and Potgieter's Drift, standing at right angles to the Boer central position and Lyttleton's advanced position. The southern point descends in abrupt steps to the lower line of kopjes. On the western side, opposite the right outposts of Warren's force, it is inaccessibly steep until the point where the nek joins the kop to the main range. Then there is a gentle slope, which allows easy access to the summit.

"The nek was strongly held by the Boers, who also occupied a heavy spur parallel with the kop, where the enemy was concealed in no fewer than thirty-five rifle pits and was thus enabled to bring to bear upon our men a damaging cross fire, the only possible point for a British attack being the southern side, with virtually sheer precipices on the left and right.

"A narrow footpath, admitting men in single file only to the summit, opens into a perfectly flat tableland, probably of 30,000 square yards' area, upon which the Boers had hastily commenced to make a transverse trench. Our men were able to occupy the further end of this tableland, where the ridge descended to another flat, which was again succeeded by a round, stony eminence held by the Boers in great strength.

"The ridge held by our men was faced by a number of strong little kopjes at all angles, whence the Boers sent a concentrated fire from their rifles, supported by a Maxim-Nordenfeldt and a big long-range gun. What with the rifles, the machine guns, and the big gun, the summit was converted into a perfect hell. The shells exploded continually in our ranks; and the rifle fire, from an absolutely unseen enemy, was perfectly appalling.

"Reinforcements were hurried up by Gen. Warren; but they had to cross a stretch of flat ground which was literally torn up by the flying lead of the enemy. The unfinished trench on the summit gave very questionable shelter, as the enemy's machine guns were so accurately ranged upon the place that often sixteen shells fell in the trench in a single minute.

"Mortal men could not permanently hold such a position. Our gallant fellows held it tenaciously for twenty-four hours, and then, taking advantage of the dark night, abandoned it to the enemy."

BIOGRAPHY OF THE GOVERNOR.

German Journalist Comes to This Country to Collect Data for the Book.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio, Jan. 29.—People in Germany are taking a great deal of interest in Gov. Roosevelt of New York, and the first life of the commander of the Rough Riders is to be written by a German journalist.

Recently Prof. Carl F. R. Hochdoerfer of Wittenberg College, this city, received a letter from a friend in Germany who is connected with the Berlin Tageblatt. The latter asked for some information regarding the life of Gov. Roosevelt, saying the German people are much interested in his career. Prof. Hochdoerfer forwarded all the data he could obtain in a limited time to his friend in Berlin. Impressed by the career of the Governor, the German journalist has come to this country to collect material for a biography.

The work is to be published in both English and German, and is also to appear in the Tageblatt.

PROFIT IN RICE GROWING.

Louisiana Planters Can Make Enough from One Crop to Pay for Their Land.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Jan. 29.—The profits made by the Louisiana rice growers have been phenomenal this season. H. J. Sanders, a prominent planter of the Crowley district, said:

"I have here the statement of the returns we have received from the sale of rice raised on something less than fourteen acres of land, and the figures are interesting. The rice taken from this plot of ground was 271 sacks, and the gross returns were $1,287.09. Out of that milling charges of $220.59 were deducted, giving us a net return of $1,066.50. The cost of cultivating the land and gathering the crop was $10 per acre, or a total cost of $140. This leaves us a net profit of $926.50.

"Our total crop was 8,000 sacks, and the returns were practically the same on the entire lot. When it is considered that the price of rice lands in the Crowley district is only about $30 per acre, it is readily seen that there is money in raising Louisiana rice. Brought down to the profit per acre, we received, over and above all cost, about $66. Last year our crop was almost as good as that of this year, but the unprecedentedly severe storms entailed a loss of about 50 per cent., consequently our profit was about half of what it was this season."

W. W. Duson, another extensive planter, said:

"No one outside the Crowley district has any idea of the vast wealth producing properties of the land there. The price per acre is so much below the real worth of the land that one good crop may easily be made to pay for the property, and if the planter has planted extensively, make him independent as well. This state of affairs cannot last long, however, and it is only a matter of time until land values there increase two or three fold."

LARGE TRUST DEED FILED.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 29.—This afternoon the Birmingham Realty Company filed a deed of trust to the Union Trust Company of New York, which has become security for $550,000 of prior-lien bonds and $550,000 of mortgage bonds issued by the Realty Company. The Realty Company was recently incorporated, and succeeded the Elyton Company, whose properties it acquired upon the court sale and reorganization of the latter company.

MUST REMAIN A WIDOWER.

Otherwise Rachel Henschel's Husband Forfeits His Wife's Estate.

RIVERHEAD, L. I., Jan. 29.—Rachel Henschel of Amityville made provision in her will, which has been admitted to probate by Surrogate Patty, that her husband shall remain a widower. She bequeaths the entire estate, including her liquor business at Amityville, to him, but makes the following conditions:

"That he forever remains her widower, that he properly maintains and educates her two minor sons, Moses M. Henschel and David Henschel; sends them to college to learn the profession they choose, and that he successfully manages and cares for her business and estate."

If he marries or otherwise fails to carry out the provisions of the will the business is to be sold and the proceeds to be divided among her children.

MARRIED FIFTY YEARS.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Jan. 29.—Veteran Capt. Horace C. Lanphear, formerly of the Norwich Line Sound steamers, and Mrs. Lanphear to-day celebrated their golden wedding at their comfortable house in Waterford. The couple's many friends from New London, New York, and Boston, and from as far away as Philadelphia, were present or else sent some token of their regard. The festivities commenced at 6 and kept up until midnight. The couple's wedding occurred Jan. 28, 1850, and consequently the anniversary was on Sunday, but the celebration was deferred until to-day.

Fully 200 invitations were sent out and nearly that number was present. Capt. Lanphear's connection with one of the most popular lines on the Sound has brought him in close touch in his life with nearly all the officials of the different lines now operating on the Sound and he has an extended acquaintance in other walks of life, and they were either present or sent congratulations in some form or other. The presents were many and valuable and comprised silver dishes, knives and forks, spoons, and $20 and $10 gold pieces. All the silverware was plated with gold.

Capt. Lanphear was in command of the Sound steamer City of New York when she rescued over 200 of the drowning passengers of the ill-fated Narragansett, which was run into by her sister steamer Stonington in 1879.

During the church services at the Waterford Baptist Church on Sunday morning there was an interruption when Pastor Wolf called Deacon and Mrs. Henry Smith to the pulpit. It was the couple's golden wedding anniversary, and the pastor spoke felicitously of the occasion and asked the entire congregation to arise and congratulate them. The people marched around the church, shaking hands with Mr. and Mrs. Smith, and the church services were forgotten for the time being for the more happier event. It was an unusual proceeding, but testified to the universal esteem in which Mr. and Mrs. Smith are held in the community. Mr. Smith is a prosperous farmer.

KLING'S ATTORNEY ARRAIGNS KILBURN

Writes a Letter Regarding State Trust Company Affairs.

DEMANDS COPY OF REPORT

Kilburn Says the Communication Is a "Tissue of Falsehoods," and Refuses the Report.

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—Charles P. Bacon, attorney for Abram Kling in his action against the State Trust Company, to-day addressed another letter to State Superintendent of Banks Kilburn, reiterating his charges of misconduct on the part of the Directors, and demanding a copy of the report of Gen. Andrews. Mr. Kilburn has replied to the communication, saying, "It is simply a tissue of falsehoods." Mr. Bacon writes:

"I have received no word from you in reply to my letter of the 23d. If you are an honest man, I cannot understand your silence. In that letter I endeavored to show you that crimes had been committed by the officers and Directors of the State Trust Company."

"In an open public statement made by Mr. Johnson, President of the State Trust Company, and by Mr. Whitney, one of the leading spirits in its Board of Directors, they have admitted that Directors were interested in large loans made by the company. Mr. Johnson, in stating that the $2,000,000 loan to Shea, the office boy, had been paid off, said that he regretted that there was not more such business to do, and said that every trust company pursued the same method. Can this, then, be and you will not act? If so, why? Is it because your feelings are hurt because I gave to Gov. Roosevelt the original petition of Mr. Kling asking for an examination of the affairs of the company? I had my reasons for doing so. These are some of them:

"When the present Directors gained possession of a majority of the stock a little over a year ago, they wanted, of course, a new President, who would act under their instructions. It is well known that for a couple of weeks the two names considered available were those of Mr. Johnson and yourself. Why they chose Johnson instead of you I don't know, unless it be that they thought you could serve them better in your present official position. If so, it seems to me that they have reasoned well. Less than three months ago you made your annual examination of the affairs of that company, and you discovered nothing wrong.

"When the Produce Exchange Trust Company closed its doors last December, attention in banking circles was immediately directed toward the State Trust Company. What happened? Did you come to New York and examine the State Trust Company and see if its reports were true?

"That you came to New York is true. But instead of making an examination of the affairs of the company, you called the reporters of the press around you and gave out a public statement, saying that you had recently examined every trust company in New York and they were in the soundest possible condition. These are some of the reasons which prompted me to go to the Governor with Mr. Kling's petition instead of going to yourself.

"It is a well-known fact that Thomas F. Ryan, one of the leading spirits of the State Trust Company and of the Metropolitan Traction Company, on the night before election, gave to Senator Platt $60,000 to be used to elect the State ticket of the party to which you belong. I thought that this fact might influence you in your official action. I did not think it would affect Gov. Roosevelt. So, if your feelings are hurt, I have no apologies to offer.

"I have demanded of you, and I demand again, a copy of the report of Gen. Andrews giving the results of his examination of the affairs of the company on the morning of Jan. 12. I have a right to do this.

"Will you give me a copy of Gen. Andrews's report?"

To this letter Mr. Kilburn made this reply:

"I have received another letter from Mr. Bacon. The letter, however, like the former one, was evidently written for publication and not with the expectation by the writer that it would be answered. It is simply a tissue of falsehoods, so far as it impugns my motives, and Mr. Bacon well knew it to be such when he wrote it. I am indignant at having to say that no consideration of any kind, save the interests of the public service, have ever influenced me in my public career.

"I have never heard a suggestion that Mr. Ryan had made a contribution of any sum to aid in the election of the Republican ticket, and if he had, which I do not believe, no one would have dared to suggest that such contribution influenced my official action.

"I never even heard a suggestion that my name was being considered in connection with the Presidency of the State Trust Company. I have not given, nor intend to give, Mr. Bacon a copy of Gen. Andrews's report.

"The solvency and absolute soundness of the company are beyond all question. I will soon make a report to the Governor, who will doubtless take such action as he deems best."

Gov. Roosevelt said that the Attorney General was looking over the reports on the company's affairs to see whether there was any infringement of the law. As to the company's solvency, he said that the report of the New York Clearing House Committee, verifying that of Superintendent of Banks Kilburn, left no doubt as to the fact.

It is learned from an absolutely reliable authority that the Clearing House Committee acted upon the request of Superintendent Kilburn, who, in the face of adverse criticism, desired to be sure that he had made no error in his findings. He consulted the Governor about it, and was advised that while not necessary it would be a wise proceeding. The finding of the committee was a clear vindication of his report.

Gov. Roosevelt said that he would have considered any charges against the company's methods coming from reputable sources, but he would not take into consideration any letter or charges sent first to newspapers or used publicly for purposes of oppression.

MADE A BIG PROFIT.

Directors of the American Steel and Wire Company Declare a 7 Per Cent. Dividend.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 29.—At the end of an all-day session Directors of the American Steel and Wire Company announced a dividend of 7 per cent. on the common stock, payable in quarterly installments of 1¾ per cent. on the second days of April, January, October, 1900, and January, 1901.

The balance sheet shows net profits for the year of $13,362,529. After writing off $1,000,000 to depreciation and $200,000 to a bad debt reserve and paying three dividends on the preferred there is left a balance of $10,062,529. Deducting $700,000 for one more preferred dividend, which is due, there is left $9,362,529 applicable to dividends on the common stock, which is equal to 18.72 per cent. on the $50,000,000 outstanding.

American Steel and Wire common was somewhat firm in the market. The dividend announcement was held until after the New York Stock Exchange closed. A dividend was generally expected and guesses placed the amount at both 6 and 8 per cent. It is said the company will retire some of its preferred stock.

GOV. TAYLOR WILL WAIT.

Will Not Sign Blackburn's Commission as Senator Until the Governorship Is Settled.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 29.—It is not likely that United States Senator-elect Blackburn will receive any commission from Gov. Taylor until the present Gubernatorial contest has been finally settled. Gov. Taylor, it is stated on excellent authority, will assume the position that if it is decided he is illegally the Governor of Kentucky, the legislators, who elected Blackburn, and who were declared elected at the same election at which he was a candidate for Governor, were also illegally elected, and have not, therefore, the power to choose a Senator.

The beginning of the end of the contest was at hand to-day, this being the last day for the taking of evidence. To-morrow arguments will commence. The decision of the Contest Board is looked for in about one week after the conclusion of the arguments.

Delta Chi Fraternity House at Cornell Destroyed by Fire—The Inmates Jump to Save Themselves.

ITHACA, Jan. 29.—As a result of the fire which destroyed the Delta Chi Fraternity Lodge of Cornell University, on Huestis Street, this morning, seven of fifteen members who slept on the third floor were badly injured in their efforts to escape by jumping to the ground. All dropped a distance of 25 or 30 feet, and in doing so all were more or less bruised, while two or three sustained serious injuries. All members of the fraternity are law students. The most seriously injured were:

CONGDON, R. E., 1902; foot broken.
DOWNS, THOMAS, 1902, Albany, N. Y.; spine and leg injured.
LONERGAN, J. F., 1902, Albany, N. Y.; broken nose, compound fracture of the thigh, and broken arm.
McCREA, W. M., Salt Lake City, Utah; burned, and back slightly injured.
RHODES, R. V., 1901, Troy, N. Y.; heel crushed.
TOOTHILL, R. D., 1902, Auburn, N. Y.; injured jaw.

The building was a brick structure, and the fire was kept well inside the walls. The janitor, who slept on the basement floor, is ignorant of the cause of the fire. The house and contents were valued at $10,000. The building was well insured, though members of the fraternity lost all their clothes and room fixings.

SULLIVAN AGAINST FOOTBALL.

Assemblyman Will Try to Have the Game Prohibited by Law.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—Assemblyman Sullivan of New York said to-night that he had collected statistics which proved that more persons had been seriously injured and killed in football contests than in boxing bouts.

Mr. Sullivan intends to offer an amendment to the Lewis bill to repeal the Horton boxing law which would prohibit the playing of football games in this State. He said that if the friends of Mr. Lewis's bill are sincere in their desire to put an end to brutality in athletic games they will support his amendment.

The Assemblyman added that the statistics he had collected showed that thirty-nine persons had been killed in football games within two years, while two persons died as a result of engaging in boxing bouts.

EIGHT THOUSAND CRY SYMPATHY FOR BOERS

Enthusiastic Mass Meeting at the Grand Central Palace.

ORATORS LASH GREAT BRITAIN

Congressmen De Armond and Cochran, Mayor Perry of Grand Rapids, and R. B. Roosevelt Raise Storms of Cheers and Hisses.

An immense mass meeting, attended by over 8,000 people, was held in the Grand Central Palace last night, under the auspices of the New York Committee to Aid the United Republics of South Africa, and the great throng expressed in no uncertain terms its sympathy for the Boers. Every available inch of the hall was packed, even to the three galleries, and there was present a large proportion of women, who lent their voices to the general acclaim every time a piece of Transvaal or Orange Free State bunting was displayed or the names of the leaders of the South African republics were mentioned.

On the stage was a representative gathering of citizens from every walk of life. There were Congressmen, State legislators, city officials, business men, bankers, brokers, lawyers, Judges, and George Francis Train, who wore as a boutonnière a gigantic mass of flowers combining the red, white, blue, and green of the Transvaal's colors. The hall was laboriately decorated with the American colors interspersed with the colors of the Boers and of the Orange Free State.

As the members of the committee and their guests marched in to seats on the platform the Seventy-first Regiment Band, under Fanciulli, struck up the Boer national anthem, and as its strains died away some one in the galleries broke out a Transvaal flag, and the cheers that burst from 10,000 throats shook the great building. Every mention of Joubert, Krueger, Cronje, and Steyn was received with vociferous approbation, while, on the other hand, the every mention of the names of Chamberlain, Balfour, and Salisbury met with a perfect storm of hisses.

AGAINST A BRITISH ALLIANCE.

Incidentally the meeting put itself on record as against any British alliance with America, and when Congressman De Armond of Missouri, after an impassioned speech, thundered "We want no British alliance" the immense audience rose to its feet and, waving flags and handkerchiefs, yelled its approbation of the sentiment.

There was also great applause for some peculiar sentiments. Ex-Judge Van Hoesen in his opening address spoke feelingly of the widows and orphans in the far-off Transvaal. "But there'll be more in England before this is over;" shouted some one in the hall, and as the speaker bowed his acknowledgment of the sentiment a terrific storm of applause shook the house.

Again when Congressman Cochran of Missouri said he was one of the old-fashioned people who still believed there is a God of battles, and that he had prayed to Him that, even if the war did not end as it seemed that it ought to, the speaker might yet live to see the price of crape rise in the English market, the crowd applauded the sentiment to the echo. Mr. Cochran also called Great Britain "the pirate power" and "the gold thief nation," which epithets were also applauded by the assemblage.

Ex-Judge George M. Van Hoesen was unanimously chosen Chairman of the meeting, and on taking the chair said that for the night all political and religious differences were sunk by the persons who were present as the members of one great household to give aid and succor to an afflicted people who were passing through the fires of an unholy persecution.

JUDGE VAN HOESEN'S SPEECH.

"A cruel and unnecessary war has been forced on them by the British Ministry," [hisses,] said Judge Van Hoesen, "a war condemned by Sir Edwin Clarke as a crime against civilization, a war deplored and denounced by the best and wisest of England's public men—by Morley, Brice, and Harcourt—[cheers]—who did their utmost to avert it, but were unable to prevent the British South Africa Company and Chamberlain [groans and hisses] in their aggressions.

"We did not predict success, [cries of "Yes, we do!"] but we hope and pray that the Boers may come out victors in the struggle. [Great cheering.] We know that Leonidas could not save the day at Thermopylae, and we know that the forces of the Boers may be exhausted. [cries of "No, never!"] but we also know that come what may, courage, manhood, and patriotism have not per all peoples. There is no special language that can ally us with tyranny against liberty and right.

MAN'S DIVINE BIRTHRIGHT.

"If liberty can be crushed in the Transvaal encouragement is given to tyrants to crush it elsewhere. Even our liberties will not be so secure if liberty can be stricken down anywhere on earth. In sympathizing with and aiding the Boers we are therefore to a certain extent not only helping them, but also ourselves. Liberty is the divine birthright of man, take it from him and you rob him of that which is worth as much to him as life itself.

"What excuse is there for the attempt to crush this brave people? Has it ever been made plain? In far-off Africa they have raised the standard of liberty, and none but an insensate tyrant would seek to haul it down. It is for us, then, to bid them godspeed and confusion to their enemies. [Cheers and applause.]

"I hope the day is not far off when the voice of the American Nation will be raised in protest against this unholy war. Why should we not say, we who have bought our liberty with the blood of patriots, why should we not say to England or to any other country that we are on the side of liberty, and that we will do all in our power to further that holy cause?

"There has been talk about a friendly understanding and a friendly footing with England. [Groans and hisses.] No, my friends, the only understanding we need is that of independence of strength and geographical position. We want the independence of the valor of our people. [Cheers.] Entangling alliances will not make us more free nor will they give us the chance to introduce in another country those democratic principles of ours that are so hateful to our friends. [Cheers.]

AMERICA ENGLAND'S RIVAL.

"No British alliance for us! [Great and long-continued cheering and applause.] In every crucial test of our existence and history England has been our enemy, and to-day we are her rival. At Halifax, at Vancouver, and at other places near our coast she is erecting great fortresses, what for no one knows, but her guns are pointed at us, while she hopes that in these namby-pamby days she will be able to wheedle us into an alliance, so that she can draw our teeth. We want no entangling alliances, and especially none with a nation that has for centuries crushed freedom whenever she could in every quarter of the globe." [Great cheering and applause.]

The Chairman then introduced Thomas W. Pittman, who read a set of resolutions in ten parts, which were unanimously adopted amid great acclaim. Several of the provisions were as follows:

That every nation has a right to form and regulate its own laws and institutions to suit itself, limited only by the obligation not to impair the rights of any other nation.

That the much-vaunted English civilization has failed to produce a better soldier than the Boer, a more willing tiller of the soil, a man more vigorous, a Christian more devout, a patriot more unselfish, a citizen better able to protect his home.

That the South African Republic deserves to be free. It would be a crime to grind such a people beneath the heel of any conqueror. That the Boer regards English domination with horror, is proved by his repeated abandonment of his home, his long and weary treks, his gallant fight, his awful sacrifices. It is folly to tell him that when he loses independence and liberty he will find his master a kind one.

That we request the President to see to it that the feeling of the American people with respect to this most wicked war is made known to the British Ministry; and we further request him not to wait till both combatants ask him to act as arbitrator, but to proffer his services.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, and to every Senator and Representative in Congress.

WHAT JUSTICE O'BRIEN SAYS.

A great number of letters were received by the committee indorsing its work and promising support. A number of these were read amid great enthusiasm. One received from Justice O'Brien of the Court of Appeals said:

"Whatever the result of the struggle, the world will be better for the lesson it teaches, and that is that the new idea of making war upon a weak nation by a strong one, upon the pretense of promoting civilization, must be attended with some perils and in the end the prize may not be worth the struggle.

"There are thousands of clear-headed Englishmen who find it difficult to believe that their Government, which has so long supported the tottering fabric of the Turkish Empire, is maintaining an odious, despotic war upon the simple Dutch farmers of the Transvaal.

"The new idea that any people with an independent Government, but attached to peculiar ways of their own and not alive to all the demands of modern progress, must be put down in order to make room for what is supposed to be a better civilization, is a dangerous one and we all protest against it."

One of the notable letters was from the Rev. Dr. H. Pereira Mendes of the Synagogue Shearith Israel, and inclosed a parody on Rudyard Kipling's famous poem "The Absent-Minded Beggar." "What my own sentiments are about this war," says the writer, "you can judge from the inclosed, which I wrote a few days ago in the intensity of my indignation against war between two peoples who read the same Bible and who believe in the same God:"

AN ABSENT-MINDED HUMAN.

The poem follows:

When you've shouted Rule Britannia, when you've sung "God Save the Queen!"
When you've fought to smash Transvaalyan and Free Stater,
Will not tell me how much better, wiser, nobler it had been
If Great Britain had been just a little greater?

He's an absent-minded human if he cannot understand
That the price of peace need not always be war;
Peace with honor" was a saying which once rang throughout the land,
And the nations ought, like men, to honor law.

"Great Fight, grand fight," put it in English plain—
It means that mothers, widows, orphans, grue-some price must pay,
It means that fathers, husbands, sweethearts, brothers, sons are slain,
And how many more are wounded sore, O say, say, say!

What if Boer would forbid your sons to use the English tongue,
Or "to shape the statute, share the pow'r or vote?"
There's a melody which prophet's voice for centuries hath sung:
"Aroitrations in the place of wars" the note.

He's an absent-minded human, is the Boer, it is true,
Reads the Bible just to suit himself, you say;
"Love thy neighbor as thyself"—if not Catholic or Jew;
"Love the stranger"—if high taxes he will pay.

Great news, grand news, fresh from the seat of war,
Fifty thousand widows, orphans weep for many a day;
Bonnie men slain, and as for wounded—thrice as many more,
"Glory" do ye call it all! O say, say, say!

Let Great Britain be greater yet, and raise men above the brute
By inviting nations all to form a court,
To decide by arbitration international dispute
Where a justly founded verdict shall be sought.
He's an absent-minded human if he says he cannot see
That moral force must surely win the day,
If the nations swear to join to thrash the one that won't agree
To accept the court's decision and obey.

Great thing, grand thing, glorious thing is war;
Bonnie men slain, or trench-diseased, or maimed for many a day.
Broken hearts and shattered loves, widows, and orphans galore,
Don't you think that war should cease, O say, say, say!

RECORDER GOFF'S LETTER.

Other letters were from Gov. Thomas of Colorado, James K. McGuire, Mayor of Syracuse; Congressman Cummings, Congressman Ridgely, Congressman W. L. Jones, and Prof. E. D. Warfield of Lafayette College. A letter from Recorder Goff was read, in which the Recorder said that he would be glad to allow the use of his name as a Vice President. He added:

"Prof. Brophy has spoken to me this morning relative to a suggestion of yours that I might be called upon to speak at the meeting. I appreciate your thoughtful kindness, but will be unable to fill that post of honor. You can realize the strain that is at present upon my mind which precludes attention to anything else. I will be present at the meeting, however.

"Inclosed please find a check for $25, and I wish that my means permitted me to make a larger contribution to a cause so worthy."

As soon as the Recorder's letter had been read, there were cries for him from all over the house, and these increased in volume and earnestness when he did not come forward. The demand was only finally silenced when Judge Van Hoesen announced that the Recorder had left the hall.

MR. COCHRAN'S SPEECH.

Congressman Cochran of Missouri, who was frequently interrupted by hearty applause, was the next speaker, and said in part: "The patriotic Boers of South Africa are fighting the battles of all humanity. The great Joubert stands to-day alongside the imortal George Washington. The contest now being fought there is to determine just as Valley Forge determined it for the American colonies, whether the South African Republics are to be dedicated to liberty or to tyranny.

"How it could ever have been said by any real American newspaper or by any true American citizen that if there was a European coalition, we would be at England's side, passes my comprehension. Yet it has not been disclaimed in high circles, and it is believed in London. Can it be possible that there is any one place in all this broad land where Tories outnumber patriots? Is Washington's farewell address no longer to keep us out of entangling alliances?

"In the war of 1812 Great Britain said that none of her subjects could expatriate himself, and she went to war about it with a feeble republic almost fresh from its war for independence. On that pretense Great Britain searched our ships. Now, however, she attempts, sword in hand, to expatriate the Outlander and compel the Transvaal Republic to make such changes in its laws as she desires. This is the so-called mother of civilization. [Hisses.]

ENGLAND AND CIVILIZATION.

"Leaving out her colonies in Australia, Canada, and the West Indies, tell me where Great Britain has promoted civilization? Has she done it on the beautiful and fertile but unhappy island of Ireland, whose bleeding feet have trod the stony path of despair for hundreds of years? Accursed be the power of desolation. [Cheers.] In Venezuela, with a population only a little larger than this city, she tried to seize the gold mines, but had to submit to arbitration, which unfortunately turned out disgracefully, so that she obtains a good deal of the territory where the coveted gold mines lie.

"Then there's Alaska. It's a crying shame that Great Britain, when the gold mines were discovered there, was allowed to extend her boundary line so that she could get possession of those mines, and then she policed it. The American Administration [hisses] meanwhile made light of this outrage, saying that someway, somehow, it would settle the dispute satisfactorily some time with Great Britain, that pirate power and gold thief nation. [Applause and cheers.]

"Then Great Britain moved the boundary line of the little Orange Free State so as to take from her her diamond fields, an act which was denounced by the Bishops of the Church, English statesmen, and the press of the world. Despite these protests, the thieves and freebooters seized these diamond fields, worth many millions, and then paid a small sum for them, 1 cent on the dollar.

"Greater fortunes have been made out of this grand larceny than Joubert, Krüger, or any other Boer ever did or will make. More money has been made out of those mines than was ever made in Christendom before. Do you believe that the British Ministry in the calm exercise of its judgment ever could have forced this war on the South African Republic?

THE WHISPERINGS OF GREED.

"Nay, verily, but I regret to admit there are evidences that capitalism and Government are in partnership. The whisperings of greed are more potent with Cabinets than the cry of the oppressed. So it is that greed and not the best policy prevails.

"A battle of liberty has been fought on Spion Kop [Cheers] the result of which is ringing around the world. When this war began in agony I prayed God to let the Boers hang on until the price of drink rose in the London market. I had no stronger hope. I'm a little more hopeful to-night. We have renewed cause to thank God.

"I'm old-fashioned enough to believe that there is a God who overrules battles, and I trust that in His good providence it may seem well that the cause of liberty and not of tyranny shall achieve success. It is our duty to see that incorporated greed or whatever form this injustice assumes shall have no help from us.

"If the Boers overthrow the English people and achieve victory, it will demonstrate that government of the people by the people and for the people has been planted in South Africa, there to remain. If, on the other hand, tyranny gains the ascendancy, the battle for liberty is not yet lost. Dutch blood and Dutch courage remain.

"The Boers are determined to be free. Defeat will not down that feeling. The teardrops of sorrow will be dispelled by the sunlight of hope, and liberty lasts as long as life. Let us give the lie to the brazen charge that in this home of republicanism and this hope of the world there is in any quarter sympathy for this atrocious crime."

During Congressman Cochran's speech, Miss Maud Gonne entered the hall, escorted by Gen. O'Beirne. They were shown to a box in the gallery. Miss Gonne seemed deeply interested in the proceedings, and remained to the end of the meeting. Only a limited number of persons in the hall knew of her presence, and there was no public demonstration in her honor, although two score of men and women paid their respects to her.

R. B. ROOSEVELT'S REMARKS.

Robert B. Roosevelt opened his speech by addressing his hearers as "Friends, Murderers, and Robbers," but explained this greeting by saying that it was in these words that President Krueger once addressed a meeting of citizens of Johannesburg, some of whom were outlaws as well as Uitlanders.

"When we come to look into the causes of the war upon the South African Republic," said Mr. Roosevelt, "I feel like using the same terms in inquiring of those who ought to know what were and are the demands or complaints of England which have brought about this cruel, horrible, useless war, a war that no matter how it ends can do good to no one, not even to the mine owners. Has the English Government ever placed before the world or even before the country attacked by it a statement of its grievances and its demands? Never.

"I was intimate with Gen. Joubert when he visited this country some years ago. Nothing worried him more than the victory he had won at Majuba Hill. He well knew the sting of it would last and that the great, powerful British Nation would never rest till it had revenged on his poor, feeble, little republic its one signal victory."

Mr. Roosevelt then went into details as to the alleged causes of the war claimed by England, the principal of which, he said, was the wrongs of the Uitlander. Yet even this, he said, would not bear the light of investigation.

A RAP AT CHAMBERLAIN.

Mr. Roosevelt then got a rap at Chamberlain in the following terms:

"It is an odd characteristic of the downright, sturdy, honest John Bull that he lives to be represented by a jocular, supercilious personage. It was as much the monocular insolence of the English representative as any difference on the question of minor matters that prevented an amicable settlement, unless it is conceded that the war was merely the irrepressible conflict of the two antagonistic national characteristics, the Dutch love of independence and the British greed for the possession of all Africa.

"This war is not only unjustifiable, but it is stupidly useless. Before it is over it must inevitably cost in money alone, more than all the mines are worth. Great Britain will be crippled for years. A very plaything and object of contempt to the European powers, who now stand in awe of her, and to whom she represents liberty, progressiveness, and humanity.

"Let us throw that aside as impossible, doubtful as the issue has already become, but let us look at the result wholly on the theory that in the end her immense resources must conquer: success will leave its legacy of sullen hatred, seething in repression and waiting only its chance to burst out like a furious volcano, another Ireland, only ten times as dangerous, for it will be six thousand miles away.

"No time will wear this out. Kill all the men, which is the task set before the conquerors, and the children, now babies, will grow up to abhor the murderers of their fathers. The Dutch are slow to forget, and hard to crush. Will time ever remove this bitter feeling? The answer is to be found at Cape Colony to-day, where the British Government, after all its years of benign and gentle sway, does not dare to trust its unwilling Dutch subjects."

A ROUSING WIND-UP.

Ex-Congressman John Van Voorhis of Rochester was the next speaker. He said nations as well as men can commit crime. Because the British sympathized with America in a good cause, was that any reason why America should sympathize with her in a bad cause? Ninety per cent. of the American people sympathized, he said, with the Boers.

Mayor Perry of Grand Rapids, Mich., was the last speaker and aroused the greatest enthusiasm of the evening. He said that his city was in the centre of a population largely made up of descendants of the original Boers. Within a radius of forty miles of Grand Rapids there were 200,000 of them, and he came to the meeting to express their greeting and that of 400,000 other residents of Western Michigan.

He spoke of a meeting held at Grand Rapids four weeks ago, where a hall holding 4,000 persons was packed to suffocation, 5,000 persons had to be denied admittance, and $5,000 was raised, made up mostly of 25 and 50 cent contributions of poor people.

"Let's have the roll of honor," he said, "from this cradle of liberty which will appal Great Britain. She has been spoken of as the conqueror, but she has never conquered any one. She's been trying to conquer poor Ireland for 800 years."

He then read a poem which he said an Irishman wrote and dedicated to Paul Krueger four months ago. Every line of it was loudly applauded. The concluding lines were as follows:

Take no more time to confab, Oom Paul,
This is another case of grab, that's all,
Sound the tocsin of the free,
Then strike for your liberty.
Take your gun from off the wall,
Give it to them grape and ball.
We are with you one and all, Oom Paul.

The crowded house cheered and cheered again as the speaker concluded. Then when the noise subsided some one shouted "Three more cheers for Mayor Perry," and they were given with great heartiness. This ended the speaking, and three cheers were then given for the South African republics.

It was stated that $2,200 had been contributed in cash by the meeting, and that $800 more had been promised, and that as a result of the appeal $5,000 would be received.

VOLUNTEERS' OFFERS TO THE BOERS

Attitude of the South African Republics on the Matter.

Dr. Hendrik Muller, Envoy Extraordinary of the Orange Free State and Consul General to the Netherlands, has written to Charles D. Pierce, Consul General of the Oronge Free State, in this city, regarding the attitude of his Government and that of the Transvaal toward the offers of volunteer service and of money received from persons in the United States.

"As to volunteers," Dr. Muller says, "from whom I receive a large number of offers from America by every mail, none of them may be engaged either by Dr. Leyds, Envoy Extraordinary of the Transvaal Republic at Brussels, or by me, or by any representative of the two republics. Any person who wants to go to South Africa must do so on his own account and at his own risk via Delagoa Bay."

Dr. Muller says he cannot undertake to pay volunteers. "The only thing I can do," he continues, "is to recommend to the Boer authorities people who have presented themselves to me and are possessed of excellent testimonials and credentials. After arrival here, they will be advised verbally how to get to the frontier without much difficulty."

Dr. Muller also cautions those desiring to volunteer "that a Boer never fights under foreign command." He says also that "electrical and other technical people may be useful," but that his Government has refused to give any orders concerning them. He suggests that if such volunteers are unable to pay their passage the funds should be advanced by "us or by our friends in their private capacity," and adds that it is possible that these advances will be returned "after a happy finish of the war," although there is no official assurance as to this.

"As to money," says Dr. Muller, in conclusion, "this is most urgently required for many purposes. Therefore I shall be particularly happy if money is sent me. It is preferred that the donors do not stipulate anything but that it should be spent for the Orange Free State Government."

To Urge Arbitration in Boer War.

Arrangements are being made by the clergy of the city for a mass meeting in favor of arbitration and peace. The merits on either side in South Africa will not be discussed, the object being solely to urge the President of the United States to act under the provisions of the Peace Convention formulated at the conference at The Hague.

BOER SYMPATHIZERS AT ALBANY.

Resolution Is Referred to Committee on Federal Relations.

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—In the Assembly tonight Mr. Bradley of Buffalo called up his resolution expressing sympathy for the Boers in their struggle for self-government with England and proceeded to debate it. He said in part:

"I believe the resolution should pass this body. It is in harmony with every historic and patriotic sentiment that safeguards human liberty, the broad world over. More especially should the voice of the great Empire State proclaim for the right and protest against the wrong, the monstrous wrong which the Government of Great Britain seeks to impose on a God-fearing, patient, and liberty-loving people."

Mr. Dillon of New York favored the resolution. The war would never have been brought on, he said, but for the interference of a set of scheming politicians who desired to have absolute control of the wealth of the Boer republic. He did not deny that the six years' clause restricting citizenship in the Boer republic was severe, but he held that England had no more right to interfere with the laws of the Transvaal than it had to interfere with the laws and restrictions of citizenship in the United States.

Mr. Delaney of Syracuse arose to debate the resolution, but Mr. Allds, the majority leader, forestalled him by moving that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Federal Relations. To this Mr. Bradley strenuously objected, but the Speaker put the question to a vote, and it was so referred by a vote of 77 yeas to 44 nays.

Another Appeal to the President.

BOSTON, Jan. 29.—The Board of Directors of the American Peace Society to-day forwarded an appeal to President McKinley to offer the good offices and mediation of the United States to Great Britain and the Transvaal, basing the action on the fact that the whole civilized world has not forgotten that one of the most benign features of the scheme approved by all at The Hague conference was that entitled "Good Offices and Mediation."

Answer to a Correspondent.

WILLIAM F. CAMPBELL.—The Black Watch of the Royal Highlanders consists of the Forty-second and Seventy-third Regiments of Foot. Both regiments were sent to South Africa as soon as hostilities began, and took part in the battle which resulted in the disastrous British defeat on Dec. 11, when Gen. Lord Methuen attacked the Boers' position at Magersfontein. In this engagement Gen. Wauchope was killed, while not only this regiment, but all the Highland Brigade, suffered terribly.

STREET CAR MEN HAPPY.

Philadelphia Company Increases Wages of Its Employes.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 29.—The Union Traction Company of this city, which controls every street car line within the city limits, to-day notified its conductors and motormen, numbering upward of 5,000 men, that beginning with Feb. 1 it would voluntarily increase the wages of the men. The men will work twelve hours a day as heretofore, and the wages will be increased for 16 1-3 cents to 18 cents per hour.

CATTLE HAVE RABIES.

Number of Pennsylvania Herds Placed Under Quarantine.

BELLEFONTE, Penn., Jan. 29.—The farmers in Penn and Brush Valleys, this county, have been pasturing a large number of cattle on the Brush and the Seven Mountain. A few days ago the owners went to look after the cattle, and found it was impossible to get near them, owing to the fact that a number of them acted as if they were suffering from the rabies.

The State Live Stock Sanitary Board of Harrisburg was notified, and Dr. John Ritter, agent of the board, is now here making an investigation. He found the situation so alarming that to-day he placed under strict quarantine every farm in Niles township. A number of cattle have been killed by order of Dr. Ritter.

New Jersey Legislature.

TRENTON, Jan. 29.—The two houses of the Legislature held short sessions to-night. The Governor sent these nominations to the Senate: District Court Judge in Newark—Thomas J. Lintot; State Board of Medical Examiners—John W. Dennett of Monmouth, John E. Wilson of Essex, and John J. Bauman of Hudson.

PARLIAMENT MEETS TO-DAY

Predicted that the Queen's Speech Will Be Colorless.

WAR BARELY TOUCHED UPON

Whole Proclamation Said to Indicate That There Will Be No Thought of Backing Down.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—It has been learned that the Queen's speech at the reassembling of Parliament to-morrow will be colorless. There will be a short reference to the war, chiefly confined to regrets at the terrible bloodshed and encomiums of the men who have laid down their lives for the country. The whole proclamation indicates that there is not the slightest idea of giving up the war until Great Britain's ends are gained.

The speech will further say that relations with all the foreign States are very friendly, and will express great pleasure and gratification at the patriotism shown by the colonies at a critical period in sending troops to South Africa, and at the patriotism existing in the empire generally. It will also express gratification at the offers of troops from Indian native chiefs, and will allude to the satisfactory completion of the treaty relating to Samoa.

The delight of foreigners and the jeers of the Continental press are reproduced in the British papers and wound the national pride. This harmony of hostility to Great Britain throughout the world, except in the United States, causes uneasiness and the reflection that international complications may arise at any time. A scheme for a considerable increase in the navy may be brought before Parliament by the Government.

The opposition leaders have decided upon Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice, member for the Cricklade Division of Wilts, to move the amendment to the address involving the vote of censure. The amendment will be of a comprehensive character, virtually convicting the Government of want of knowledge, foresight, and judgment in the management of South African affairs since 1895 and in the preparations for war. It is supported by several prominent members of the Opposition identified with Lord Rosebery's views, and the debate is expected to occupy a week.

The Times, in an editorial comment upon the forecast of the Queen's speech, says:

"It is satisfactory to know that further provision will be made for increasing the efficiency of the navy, a duty enjoined by the undisguised hostility of foreign opinion. Obviously, it will be practically out of the question to introduce any measures of domestic reform involving large expenditure."

The Times severely reproaches the Opposition for "opening the doors of controversy" by the Fitzmaurice amendment, which it declares can do no good at the present juncture. It says:

"We hope it is not too late for the Opposition to reconsider this decision. No national benefit of any kind could possibly balance the mischief to be done by such a display of divided counsels in the face of the country's enemies. There is much in the conduct of the Government calling for criticism; but this is not the proper time."

A Cabinet Minister who was interviewed to-day said:

"I do not believe the session opening to-morrow will materialize into anything serious. Some of our Irish friends may try to expire on the floor, but I find in moments of serious national crisis Irish eloquence has little effect, and such orators generally take a back seat. The diatribes on the Government will doubtless be a little more vicious than formerly, but I believe sober-minded men of both parties realize, however much there may be to criticise, that the Government is doing its best and that it would be almost unpatriotic to attempt to tie its hands at such a time. We are not nervous as to the result of the session."

William T. Stead has addressed an open letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons, Mr. William Court Gully, in anticipation of the meeting of Parliament, which he asks to have brought to the notice of the House. The writer says:

"The consequence of going to war with a lie in our right hand is now manifest even to the dullest understanding. The responsibility for the lie which is now working out its natural consequences in South Africa originally lay upon the Colonial Secretary alone, but, by a conspiracy of falsehoods, the Select Committee of 1897 was hocussed into returning a false verdict, which, being afterward accepted by the House of Commons, involved Parliament itself in the responsibility for a fatal fraud."

Mr. Stead then asserts that "the war was undertaken to conceal the truth and to whitewash the Colonial Secretary," and he appeals to the House to insist upon the production of the correspondence between the Colonial Office and Mr. Hawksley, Solicitor to the Chartered Company, "in order to ascertain the truth respecting the Jameson raid and to purge the House of this dishonor."

Owing to the recent death of Lady Salisbury, the Premier did not give the customary Parliamentary dinner this evening. This was given on his behalf by the Duke of Devonshire, Lord President of the Council.

Mr. Balfour, the Earl of Kimberley, and Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman also entertained their respective supporters.

MAUD GONNE ARRIVES.

Her First Words Express Her Belief that British Reverses Make Ireland's Opportunity.

"This is the best opportunity that Ireland ever had to strike a blow for freedom. There are barely 6,000 soldiers on the island now, whereas there are usually 20,000. We must not let our hour of destiny slip by."

Miss Maud Gonne, known as the "Irish Joan of Arc," uttered these sentiments with much earnestness yesterday as the French Liner La Normandie, on which she had journeyed from France to this country, was steaming up the bay from Quarantine. Miss Gonne had just been met by an enthusiastic Reception Committee composed of Irish-American men and women and told of Gen. Buller's retreat across the Tugela. She clapped her hands with enthusiasm.

Miss Gonne comes to this country to arouse public sentiment in favor of the Boers. Had La Normandie arrived on Sunday she would have received a more imposing welcome at the hands of the Reception Committee. Yesterday the committee was scattered, but still enthusiastic. One section, including Gen. James R. O'Beirne, O'Donovan Rossa, Peter Ryan, Peter Moran, and Joseph Maginn, went down to Quarantine on the revenue cutter, where they boarded the liner. Miss Katherine L. Sullivan of the Ladies' Committee went aboard at Quarantine from the Health Officer's boat, while still another section of the committee waited at the French Line dock. The members all wore big buttons displaying the features of President Krüger surrounded by the flag of the Boer Republic.

Miss Gonne was found to have suffered severely from seasickness during the extraordinarily tempestuous voyage of La Normandie, and had not recovered when met by the advance guard of the Reception Committee. She became animated, however, when told of the Boer successes of the past week, and enthusiastically discussed the war during the trip up the bay.

"The object of my visit here," said Miss Gonne, "is to arouse American sentiment in favor of the Boers and particularly to cement the unity of sentiment existing between the Irishmen of America and Irishmen in Ireland. I have been in France, Germany, and Holland, and everywhere I have heard expressions of surprise that America has not been foremost in championing the cause of the Boers. The sentiment in favor of the Boers is now so strong in Ireland that they do not dare march troops down the main streets of Dublin for fear of having them hissed and assailed."

Here Miss Gonne spoke of Ireland's opportunities, admitting, however, that the island was not in as good position to strike as she might be. "For the reason," continued Miss Gonne, "that we have adhered too long to the policies promulgated by Parnell."

Speaking of the efforts of the Government to increase enlistments, Miss Gonne said one work of the Irish Party was to stop enlistment. Ten years ago, she said, there were 30,000 Irish in the army. To-day there were not 25,000.

Carriages were awaiting the Reception Committee at the French Line pier, and Miss Gonne was driven to the Fifth Avenue Hotel, where an address of welcome was read to her, after which she held an informal reception. Her first lecture will be given at the Academy of Music next Sunday evening. She will later visit all the principal cities of the country.

BRITAIN DEMANDS A LARGER ARMY

BOERS HAVE THE INITIATIVE.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—Spenser Wilkinson, in The Morning Post, says:

"Defeat is bitter. But it is right to face it and to take reasonable means to turn it into victory. It is wrong to try to conceal it from ourselves.

"The initiative is now again with the Boer commander; and the question is, What will he do next? He will either act against Ladysmith or against Gen. Buller. In the latter case, pursuit would be useless, for when the British force is once across the river again it would be impracticable, as a small rear guard could prevent pursuit. Much more probable would be an attack on Chieveley before the return of the main body. Either that or a fresh assault on Ladysmith may be recorded in a day or two."

Mr. Wilkinson then proceeds to point out the groundlessness of fears that strategic suggestions made in England might be useful to the enemy. He says that the censorship stands in the way of any such benefit to the Boers, and that, moreover, if the Boer Generals want suggestions they can easily get them from the German press.

As such matters are likely to come under the attention of Parliament, he discusses at length questions of artillery and the like, concluding as follows:

"The measures now urgently needed are the development of the military resources of the country by the initiative of the Government. With 100,000 men in the field and 50,000 men to follow, the moment has come to push on the training of all troops left at home and to raise further troops to supply the further needs of the campaign."

LORD DUNDONALD IS SAFE.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—Great anxiety has been removed by the announcement that Lord Dundonald's cavalry forces, which it was feared were isolated among the hills in the neighborhood of Acton Homes, are safe on the south bank of the Tugela River.

BOERS TO DEMAND A SEAPORT.

BERLIN, Jan. 29.—An official agency has communicated the following to the press:

"In spite of unofficial statements that Dr. Leyds (the diplomatic representative of the Transvaal) is here by official invitation, his visit is entirely by his own initiative, and, though he has received ordinary courtesy, his presence is entirely without political significance."

The Tageblatt to-day says that Dr. Leyds, the diplomatic representative of the Transvaal Government, denies that he met Mr. Charles D. Macrum, the former United States Consul at Pretoria, in Paris. He also reiterates his denial that Mr. Macrum is the bearer of a letter to President McKinley from the Transvaal Government.

To a correspondent who interviewed him to-day Dr. Leyds made the following statement:

"I know nothing about the reported missions of either Mr. Macrum or Mr. Webster Davis. Nor, to the best of my knowledge, is either the bearer of a message of peace. There are no movements under way on our part to induce President McKinley to intervene between Great Britain and the Transvaal. As I do not at present have direct communication with Pretoria, I do not know what Mr. Montagu White's mission is, except to establish diplomatic relations with the United States.

"All this talk about peace is sadly premature. Great Britain surely will not succumb now. Neither will we. While we are talking here there may be but a decisive battle is being fought there, for I presume Lord Roberts has withdrawn the troops around Ladysmith and is massing them for a formidable coup."

Dr. Leyds repeated his former declaration that the Boers, when concluding peace, would want back part at least of the territories which England stole from the Boers. He rather expects also that a harbor south of Mozambique will go to the Transvaal—"for our legitimate extension," he added, "we need free access to the sea."

He asserted emphatically that one condition of peace would be the recognition of the absolute independence of the Transvaal.

Berlin is certainly very much excited over him. He is overwhelmed with invitations. His apartments at the Palast Hotel, where the Transvaal flag is flying, are besieged day and night by crowds, including contractors and mining speculators, as well as fine ladies, gentlemen of the Court, and army officers, who wish to congratulate him upon the Boer successes or to offer their services.

BRITISH ROUT PLEASES BERLIN.

BERLIN, Jan. 29.—The latest news from South Africa is unfavorably commented upon by the German papers.

The National Zeitung says:

"The British position around Ladysmith is now untenable. Either Lord Roberts must await reinforcements or remove his strategic centre elsewhere, abandoning Ladysmith."

The Lokal Anzeiger says:

"The defeat at Spion Kop is likely to become of decisive importance for the whole war."

The Kreuz Zeitung says:

"It requires a good piece of British deceit still to believe in an approximately favorable issue of the war; but whom the gods would destroy they first make mad."

The Vossische Zeitung says:

"The best prepared and most carefully planned British operation during the war has now ended in complete fiasco. What is there now to prop up the sinking prestige of 'world power?' To talk about another 100,000 men is rubbish, and the few battalions that can be raised will not change the issue of the campaign."

BRITAIN DETERMINED TO WIN.

ROME, Jan. 30.—The Corriere di Napoli publishes an alleged conversation of Sir Edmund J. Monson, British Ambassador in Paris, who, after declaring that Anglo-French relations were excellent, said:

"There is no truth in the rumor that British troops are to be replaced by Italian troops in Egypt. We lack neither men nor arms. Alone we will triumph over the Transvaal, no matter what the cost.

"The Boers are rebels from whom England will have satisfaction. We are right, and have the holiest and most just cause; and, although we should be compelled to see Africa become the tomb of all our sons, we will only return victorious."

Sir Edmund denied the rumors of European intervention.

FALSE WAR NEWS CIRCULATED.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—The correspondent of The Times at Lorenzo Marques, telegraphing yesterday, says:

"How the Boers disseminate false news has just been illustrated. Herr Pott, the Transvaal Consul here, received telegrams from Pretoria announcing the capture of 2,000 British prisoners on the Tugela. These he officially communicated to the Consular authorities. It is now admitted that only 150 were captured.

"An officer who was interviewed after the capture said he was the only officer still in action at the time of the surrender. He did not order the hoisting of the white flag, but, having been exposed to a fierce fight for eight hours, they thought that only twenty of them remained.

"Among the slain at the Tugela is Lieut. Brusewitz, a German officer, who joined the Boers two months ago.

"After a week of uncertainty, British residents of the Transvaal have been informed that there is no desire to expel any except a few undesirables. President Krüger, however, has given a significant warning that, if the Boers are forced to starve, the Britishers will share the same fate."

BOERS CHEER PRESIDENT STEYN.

PRETORIA, Jan. 26.—President Steyn of the Orange Free State and A. Fischer of the Executive Council of that republic arrived here this morning. They were met at the railroad station by President Krüger and other officials, and were cheered while driving to the residence of the President of the Transvaal.

The Volksstem, the official organ of the Government, in welcoming the guests of the State, says:

"But for the courageous attitude of the Free State the conditions of the present struggle would be changed. It would have been impossible for the Transvaal to have taken the course followed with such success."

BRITAIN TO GET DELAGOA BAY?

LONDON, Jan. 30.—The Lisbon correspondent of The Standard says:

"I hear that the indemnity to be awarded Great Britain in the Delagoa Bay arbitration will be so large that Portugal will be obliged to make over the railway and the port of Lorenzo Marques to the British Government."

KIMBERLEY HEAVILY SHELLED.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—The Times has the following heliograph message, via Modder River, from Kimberley, dated Jan. 26:

"The bombardment continues. It is now directed toward the inhabited portions of the town rather than the fortifications. Between midnight and 4 P. M. yesterday 145 shells were fired. They seem to have been of Transvaal manufacture, not bursting widely. One child was killed and four people injured."

Seven Days for Crying War News.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—During the trial yesterday of a newsvendor for crying false news—he had shouted "Horrible British Slaughter"—an impertinent bystander, on hearing the prisoner sentenced to seven days in jail, said: "Why not bring the War Office into court?"

EX-SECRETARY ALGER ON THE WAR

Un-American, He Says, to Stir Up Feeling Against Either Combatant.

Russell A. Alger, ex-Secretary of War, is at the Waldorf-Astoria. In conversation yesterday with a reporter on the South African war and the pro-Boer sentiments expressed by William Jennings Bryan, he said:

"I think it is both un-American and unpatriotic for any American to attempt to stir up a feeling among the masses either against England or the Boers. The war in South Africa is none of our concern, and we should keep our hands off.

"When we had trouble with Spain, Great Britain had no pro or anti-Spanish meeting. She attended to her own business, and if she did anything beyond that, it was to give notice to other nations by implication to let us alone.

"The least that America can now do is to treat Great Britain in 1900 as she treated the United States in 1898."

British Buying Mules and Horses.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 29.—Lieut. Col. M. Stephens, a representative of the British Army, has come to St. Louis to purchase an additional 1,000 mules for use in South Africa. The commission to which he is attached has been ordered to buy several thousand cavalry horses in this country. Most of this order is being filled in this vicinity.

DENTIST RUN OVER BY A CAB.

Dr. Rudolph Gudewill, a dentist of 100 East Sixty-second Street, was run over, knocked down, and badly bruised in front of the Plaza Hotel last evening by a hansom cab owned and driven by G. Hallen of 673 Third Avenue. Dr. Gudewill was struck by the rear wheel of the cab, which knocked him to the ground, the wheel passing over his left arm and hand, and badly bruising his arm. The cabman, in endeavoring to stop the horse, turned the cab around, and the wheel passed over the doctor's left leg, bruising it badly. Only the rubber tires of the cab prevented the breaking of the bones. He was picked up unconscious and carried into the Plaza Hotel by Policeman Mears of the Park Squad.

After regaining consciousness, Dr. Gudewill summoned his physician, Dr. Fredenburg, who had his patient carried to his own office, 30 West Fifty-ninth Street, where he was going when run over. The cabman made no effort to get away, and was arrested. Dr. Gudewill refused to make a complaint against him, as he had apologized for the accident and explained that his horse was unmanageable.

Dr. Gudewill was unable to leave his office for his home last night, and a consultation was held. Although badly bruised about the body, arms, and legs and suffering from nervous shock, no serious effects are anticipated unless the wounded members become inflamed.

Dr. Gudewill made the positive identification of Mr. and Mrs. Andrews and their daughter, Mrs. Gamaliel St. John, who were burned to death in their homes last April, by means of their teeth, of which he had made a chart.

Edward Morgan Leaves "Ben-Hur."

Edward Morgan, who was transferred to Klaw & Erlanger to create the title rôle in "Ben-Hur" and continue in the part up to the time he would be required by Daniel Frohman to take up active rehearsals for the forthcoming production at Daly's Theatre of John Oliver Hobbes's comedy of society, "The Ambassador," withdrew from the "Ben-Hur" company Saturday night. His part has been taken permanently by Emmett Corrigan, who formerly played Ilderim. The latter rôle has been assumed by William Frederic.

GEN. HAWKINS ASKED TO COME TO 71ST INQUIRY

Col. Bartlett Declares the Officer Refused to Testify.

MORE TROUBLE IN REGIMENT

Some Regret Gen. Hawkins's Statement Was Made Public—Major Smith Calls Col. Reade a Liar.

According to Col. Franklin Bartlett of the Twenty-second Regiment, Brig. Gen. Hamilton S. Hawkins, United States Army, retired, had an opportunity to testify before the court of inquiry which was investigating the Seventy-first Regiment last Winter, and he declined to do so. Members of the court are not in entire harmony with what Gen. Hawkins said after the review of the regiment last week, when he talked of the part played by the regiment at the battle of San Juan, and contradicted some of the testimony of Major Gen. Kent, the division commander, which was given before the court of inquiry.

Col. Bartlett, who was one of the members of the court which found against the officers of the regiment, said yesterday: "Gen. Hawkins was formally asked to testify before the court of inquiry, and he answered that he did not desire to testify. On one occasion during a dinner of the Sons of the Revolution last Winter, and while the inquiry was pending, I personally asked Gen. Hawkins to appear before the court and give his testimony. He declined to do so. I doubt the accuracy of the remarks attributed to him at the recent review of the Seventy-first Regiment.

"Gen. Hawkins crossed the main ford early in the day, and led the Sixth and Sixteenth Regiments of regulars up San Juan Hill. I cannot understand how he can throw any light on the question of the orders which were given to Col. Downs by the division commander, Gen. Kent, or explain the conduct of senior field officers of the Seventy-first Regiment in the trail, and their failure to lead the regiment out of the trail and take part in the capture of San Juan Hill.

"The record of the court shows that Col. Downs, Lieut. Col. Clinton H. Smith, and Major Whittle testified before the court, and gave their evidence in extenso and in detail. The uncontradicted testimony shows that San Juan Hill was taken at 1:25 P. M., and that the regiment did not cross the ford, with the exception of certain members who joined the regulars, until after 3 o'clock of the same afternoon.

"I do not understand how Gen. Hawkins can now be conversant with the facts surrounding the cause of the inquiry, as he was away in advance of the Seventy-first. At no time did the court criticise the line officers or the rank and file of the regiment, and it is unfortunate that the senior field officers should continue to stir up the old controversy, which was settled by the court of inquiry."

QUOTES FROM THE FINDINGS.

Col. Bartlett then quoted the following extract from the findings of the court:

"Before reaching the trail, and while the brigade was halted and under fire, Col. Downs received an explicit order from Gen. Hawkins to bring his regiment forward on the road crossing or following the river until he met the General, and to follow behind the Sixth Infantry. Proceeding with his regiment until he met Gen. Kent at the forks of the road and the trail, he was ordered by Gen. Kent to take his regiment through the trail, debouch across the river and there rejoin his brigade and report to his brigade commander, that this would place him where he would be expected on the line. * * *

"While the regular regiments were passing through the trail many of their officers endeavored by personal appeal to induce the Seventy-first to go forward. Several of the enlisted men responded and assisted in the capture of the hill. The court has been unable to ascertain the number. From time to time staff officers, walking or riding through the trail, ordered and besought the Seventy-first to go forward but without result, until after the last regular regiment had passed, when the movement began and was made as stated in the foregoing findings of fact.

Gen. E. H. Liscomb of the Twenty-fourth Regulars was wounded in passing to the rear through the trail. His experience is thus described in the findings:

Gen. Liscum saw a field officer of the Seventy-first Regiment standing, leaning on his sword, with his head drooping forward. Gen. Liscum addressed him and said to him that he should go to the front with his men—that they were very much needed at the front. The officer made no reply whatever to the request. Then Gen. Liscum saw on the other side of the trail a cluster of some five or more officers belonging to the regiment, and he addressed himself to this cluster in almost the identical language he had used to the field officer. (Record, Pages 2,240-2,) telling them that they should go to the front with their troops, that they were needed there very much. The officers made no reply. A good many of the men of the Seventy-first were lying down there in sight. They got on their feet and approached Gen. Liscum and in a beseeching manner held out their hands as if they were going to come to him and take hold of him, and they said to him, "We want to go to the front, but our officers won't go with us."

"The whole situation is as follows," declared Col. Bartlett. "Col. Downs was ordered to take his regiment to a certain place, and because the route was changed he did not do so. Suppose I was in command of a regiment attached to a brigade stationed here in Park Row and the brigade was commanded to move to the west side of the city, and the other regiments went through Chambers Street. I am suddenly ordered to take my men through Mail Street. It would be my duty to do so, as long as I reached the place of my destination. I would not be expected to camp out in City Hall Park."

Brig. Gen George Moore Smith, in command of the Fifth Brigade, of which the Seventy-first Regiment is a part, declined to express an opinion on the statements credited to Gen. Hawkins. However, he was willing to say that the speech made to the officers of the regiment had been correctly reported in the papers. In fact, the report had been in every detail complete.

MAY MAKE MORE TROUBLE.

At the Seventy-first Regiment Armory there was considerable discussion over the published accounts of Gen. Hawkins's speech. There is a prospect of further trouble arising over the making public of what was considered a private affair. A number of the officers tried to find Gen. Hawkins yesterday, so as to trace through him the persons who had given out the information of what had occurred after the review. The officers found that he had left the city, and would not return until early next month.

The majority of the line officers regret that the trouble which was supposed to have been buried should have been revived at this time, and they are very bitter against the men who gave out the information of what was deemed a private meeting. This bitterness was so great that it was said the matter would be a subject for investigation at the meeting of the field and staff officers to-night. The general opinion was that Gen. Hawkins had not authorized the publication of his remarks, which were made in the presence of only the officers of the regiment and Gen. Smith, who, with Gen. Hawkins was the only guest present.

The rank and file, however, and some of the officers of the regiment are very much elated over the fact that Gen. Hawkins expressed his opinion of the Santiago campaign when he met the officers. The enlisted men at the armory last night were discussing in a very excited manner the possibility of reopening the court of inquiry. Some talked of sending a petition to the Governor, while others thought the Governor might reopen the court without any request.

SAYS IT BECOMES AN ARMY AFFAIR.

An officer high in the ranks of the Guard, however, said last night: "I have always felt that the court of inquiry did not give the men of the regiment justice at the hearing, and when I read Gen. Hawkins's clear statement of the case, I was made more firm in my belief that the regiment had been left deserted by the division commander at Santiago and that it was not the fault of the officers or men that the trouble occurred. Of course, the fight has now shifted from the regiment to a dispute between Gens. Kent and Hawkins, and becomes a regular army affair."

If there should be a reopening of the court, the officers will seek to get Col. Philip Reade, who is now on duty in the West in the regular army, on the witness stand. They are especially bitter toward Col. Reade because of his statement that he went along the lines at San Juan and asked if there was an officer in the Seventy-first who was not a coward. Major Clinton H. Smith is particularly wroth at Col. Reade for this statement.

"When Col. Reade, United States Army," said Major Smith, "says that he asked if there was an officer in the Seventy-first who was not a coward, he tells a deliberate and malicious lie. I make this statement advisedly. Col. Reade's alleged remark was made to Capt. Rafferty of the Seventy-first. The Captain told me that no such remark was made by Reade. Lieut. Garthwaite, who was standing by Rafferty's side at the time, swore before the court of inquiry that Reade made no remark about cowards. Reade makes his statement in his official report.

"If this report is true, then Reade is an unmitigated and pusillanimous cad, for no real soldier and no gentleman would ever refer so to brother officers on the field of battle when those officers had stood all day under a rain of fire. If his report is not true, then Reade stands convicted as a liar. He can take either horn of the dilemma he chooses. Besides, any one who knows Rafferty and his fighting blood, knows that he would never have allowed Reade to make such a remark about Rafferty's brother officers."

MAKES ANTI-TRUST LAW VOID.

Statute Recently Enacted in Illinois Declared Unconstitutional by Federal Judge Kohlsaat.

CHICAGO, Jan. 29.—Judge C. C. Kohlsaat, in the United States Circuit Court, to-day decided the Anti-Trust act of the Illinois Legislature in 1893 void on the ground that the statute contains both class and special legislation, and is in contravention of the Federal and State Constitutions. The opinion of the Court bears more directly on the ninth clause of the act of 1893, but the validity of the whole act is also denied.

The ruling was made in the case of the Union Sewer Pipe Company against Thomas Connolly, but applied as well to the case of the same plaintiff against William Dee, the two cases having been tried conjointly. The Court took the case from the jury, and gave instructions that the finding be in favor of the plaintiff.

The Union Sewer Pipe Company brought suit to recover upon promissory notes given by the defendants, who contended that the plaintiff was a trust or combination organized for the express purpose of creating and carrying out restrictions in trade.

Referring to the Illinois statute, which went into effect July 1, 1893, the Court says:

"The said statute of July 1, 1893, provides in Section 9 that 'the provisions of this act shall not apply to agricultural products or live stock in the hands of the producer or raiser.' I am of the opinion that this statute contains both class and special legislation, and is in contravention of both the State and Federal Constitutions, and therefore void. It is urged that, granting the unconstitutionality of the ninth clause, it may be declared void without affecting the validity of the remaining clauses of said act. If this were so, then by declaring said clause void the courts would make the act binding upon those classes of persons within the State which the Legislature had specially exempted from its provisions. This would be judicial legislation of the most flagrant character. In my opinion the said Clause 9 taints the whole act, and renders it all void. Therefore the special defense must be stricken out."

The matter probably will be taken to the United States Supreme Court.

Opinions differ widely as to whether Judge Kohlsaat's decision leaves the State without anti-trust laws. It is held by some lawyers that the act of 1893 did not supersede that of 1891, and that the latter statute is still in force. Judge Kohlsaat did not touch upon this point in his decision.

THE PRESIDENT'S BIRTHDAY.

Born Fifty-seven Years Ago Yesterday at Niles, Ohio—San Francisco Banquet in His Honor.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—President McKinley is fifty-seven years old to-day, having been born at Niles, Trumbull County, Ohio, Jan. 29, 1843. He received many congratulations from visitors and a large number of cablegrams and telegrams felicitating him upon the occasion. Many floral remembrances were sent him.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 29.—The first annual banquet of the Bohemians of America, in honor of the birthday of the President of the United States, was held to-night. Over fifty invited guests and members were seated at the banquet table. Col. H. I. Kowalski presided as toastmaster. Among those responding to toasts were James A. Waymire, Gen. William R. Shafter, Capt. P. N. Whiting, and Dr. David Starr Jordan.

A letter signed by the President's secretary was read as follows:

"His inability to be with you on this occasion, by reason of the pressure of his public duties and engagements, causes the President sincere regret. He desires to convey to you and your associates an expression of his appreciation of the compliment paid him by the selection of the date of the banquet, and to assure you that this evidence of regard and esteem is most gratifying to him.

"The President also requests me to send you and through you to those who shall be present at the banquet his best wishes for a pleasant and enjoyable evening."

ATTACKED BY A BLOODHOUND.

Wheelman Badly Hurt by Malcolm W. Ford's $500 Prize Dog.

BABYLON, L. I., Jan. 29.—Frank Thurber, a merchant of Bay Shore, while riding his bicycle along the South County Road in front of the Ford place yesterday, was attacked by a five-hundred-dollar-prize bloodhound owned by Malcolm W. Ford, the former all-round athletic champion.

The wound is a bad one, and serious results are feared. Mr. Thurber has begun proceedings to have the dog shot, and will bring a suit for damages.

TOURIST DIED OF ALCOHOLISM.

Instructions for Disposal of MacClure's Body Cabled from Scotland.

Dr. Emil F. Hartung, for Coroner Burger of Brooklyn, made an autopsy yesterday morning on the body of David E. MacClure, who died at the Homeopathic Hospital on Sunday under circumstances which led the police to believe that he was a victim of "knockout" drops. Dr. Hartung, after the examination, declared positively that there was no evidence of narcotic poisoning, but that death was due solely to excessive indulgence in alcoholic stimulants. The bruises on MacClure's head, Dr. Hartung said, had absolutely nothing to do with his death.

MacClure, who was visiting America as a tourist, boarded at the house of Mrs. Holland in Concord Street, Brooklyn. Mrs. Holland, when she learned of MacClure's death, cabled to 6 Florentine Terrace, Hillhead, Glasgow, Scotland, the man's home. A reply received yesterday stated that "Stewart of 167 West Eighty-first Street" would take charge of the body.

Arrangements for the removal of the body from the hospital to Manhattan were made last night. MacClure it is said, was a retired business man of Glasgow, and was formerly connected with David MacClure & Son, printers, of that city.

SHOT BY A BANDIT.

Railroad Detective Killed While Trying to Make an Arrest.

HOLDEN, Mo., Jan. 29.—John Jackson, a detective of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad, was shot through the head by a man whom he was endeavoring to arrest here on suspicion of being a train robber.

A word reached Sedalia early this morning that the express was to be held up, and a posse was organized. When the train reached Holden the officers were informed that the suspected men were at a resort there. The town Marshal, another officer and Jackson started to make the arrest, and when Jackson entered the house one of the men fired, a ball passing through his head just over the right eye. The officers returned the bandits' shots, but he and his companions, of whom there were about six, escaped. Jackson cannot recover.

The arrested robber finally said his name was Shores, and confessed to numerous robberies. He admitted having robbed the Missouri Pacific agent at Independence a few nights ago, and of having robbed the Pittsfield Post Office last Friday night. It is believed that Shores and the man who shot Jackson and escaped stopped a Missouri Pacific passenger train west of Kansas City Jan. 9, robbing the sleeping car passengers. Bloodhounds have been sent for to trace the escaped robbers.

It develops that a woman revealed the plot to rob the train to the officials at Sedalia. Her identity is not known. The plan was for two men to board either Train No. 8 or No. 10, east-bound, at Holden, and ride to Centreview, eight miles east, where the engine was to be detached, after which the robbers were to rob the express messengers and passengers.

MRS. ASTOR'S ANNUAL BALL

About Three Hundred Guests Attended the Beautiful Function.

THE HOSTESS RECEIVED ALONE

The Cotillion Danced in the Picture Gallery, Which Was Simply Decorated—Handsome Gowns Worn.

Mrs. Astor gave last evening at her residence, 842 Fifth Avenue, her annual reception, with dancing. This ball—as it is one of the most largely attended private functions of the year—is looked forward to by society. It is considered as the climax of the season, and it has taken place with unfailing regularity, except when deferred by years of mourning, with each recurring season.

For last evening, Mrs. Astor issued about 400 invitations, and there were over 300 people present. The cards read "Mrs. Astor at Home, Small Dance. R. S. V. P." The dance last night was "small" only in name, and if anything was a more generally attended affair than that of last Winter. A reason for this was that Mrs. Astor has entertained but little this Winter, and has not given her accustomed series of state dinners. An Astor ball is always a very handsome entertainment, and the one given last night in no way differed from its predecessors in lavishness of decoration and appointment.

It was quite a late affair, many of the guests having attended the opera, and there were a few dinners also preceding it. Both of the Astor houses were thrown open for the occasion. Mrs. Astor received alone in the great drawing room of the north, or upper house, which was filled with vases of American Beauty roses. Along the sides of the hall were branches of flowering almond, apple and quince blossoms, while about pillars of the halls were banked palms, pink and white azaleas in pots, and "Jack" roses. Other flowers used were white lilies, yellow jonquils, &c.

The dancing was general before supper. After that event there was a cotillion, danced in the ballroom, which is also the picture gallery. This apartment has been frequently described. It is one of the most beautiful private ballrooms in this country. The decorations there, as in all the apartments, were extremely simple and consisted of Mrs. Astor's favorite flower, the American Beauty rose, Easter lilies, and carnations, while here and there were potted palms.

The south house, which is owned by Col. John Jacob Astor, who, with his wife, is now abroad, was also thrown open. Supper was served at forty small tables in its great dining room. The decorations of the tables were flat centre pieces, with bowls of orchids and violets at alternate tables. The decorations of the buffet tables were of American Beauty roses. The supper, furnished by Sherry, was as follows:

Consommé Marie Stuart en tasse.
Supreme de volaille.
Filet de Boeuf aux champignons frais Pommes Surprise.
Terrapin.
Canvas-back duck—Hominy croquettes.
Paté de foie gras en crouet.
Salade Orientals.
Glace Merveilleuse.
Fraises fondantes. Mandarins glacés.
Petits fours. Bonbons.
Marrons glacés. Cerises fondantes.
Café.
Moet & Chandon, Imperial Brut. Apollinaris.

Music was furnished by Lander's Orchestra and the Hungarian Band. The cotillion which was danced after supper was a large one. It was led from both ends by Mr. Elisha Dyer, Jr., dancing with Mrs. Orme Wilson, Mrs. Astor's daughter, and Mr. Harry Lehr, dancing with Mrs. Ogden Mills. The cotillion was, however, entirely under Mr. Dyer's general direction, and was, as usual, gracefully and skillfully conducted.

There were four favor figures. The favors were very beautiful and elaborate and in every way the handsomest given at any ball this season. In the first figure there were handsome satin sashes of various colors and Directoire staves.

The favors in the second figure were, for the women Dutch tiles in blue and white, and silver trumpets for the men. Staves trimmed with silver tulle and ribbons of different shades were the favors for the third figure, with flowers—pink, yellow, and white chrysanthemums—for the women, and for the men dainty boutonnières.

In the fourth figure, Japanese fans of scarlet silk were given the women, and card cases to the men. The "stags," of whom there were many, were given, when they wished to take out a partner, silver pencils and French bric-à-brac and trifles. The favors were furnished by Mrs. Kate Collins.

SOME OF THE GUESTS.

WILL FIGHT ALCOHOL AS FOOD.

W. C. T. U. of Hartford Displeased with the Atwater Theory.

HARTFORD, Jan. 29.—The experiments as to the food value of alcohol which are being made in the respiration calorimeter at Wesleyan University by Prof. L. Atwater have been the occasion of much comment in temperance circles and this afternoon a conference of representatives of different societies throughout the State was held at Memorial Hall under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

The conference was called through the instrumentality of Mrs. C. B. Forbes, wife of the Rev. C. B. Forbes of this city. The announced object of the meeting was to consider the best way of counteracting Prof. Atwater's statements with regard to the use of alcohol. The Rev. Mr. James of Rockville, Agent of the State Temperance Society, was present.

No action was taken at to-day's meeting further than to appoint a committee, which will present resolutions to be considered at the next meeting. The Executive Committee of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union also informally discussed plans of action in regard to the work against Prof. Atwater's teachings.

Prof. Atwater's first experiment in this line was made last May, and several days ago he started the second experiment, when Harry Wells, Assistant in Chemistry at Wesleyan, took up his residence in the box. He will remain there nine days, and his food will be mixed with alcohol or largely composed of alcohol during the whole term. Wells will be in the box for three periods of nine days each, alternating with being outside the same number of days. Wells never used alcohol in any form and offers a splendid subject for the trial.

Memorial of Garret A. Hobart.

A memorial of Vice President Hobart in the form of three bound volumes of clippings from newspaper obituaries was delivered yesterday to Mrs. Hobart by Burrelle's Press Clipping Bureau of this city. Each volume contains 130 pages of heavy white Bristol board, 12 by 14 inches in size, upon which are pasted an average of three clippings. The newspaper titles and dates of publication are engrossed in old English. The binding is seal. The clippings used were selected from 5,816 editorials published throughout the United States by Democratic and Populist, as well as Republican papers. Two months' time was required in preparing the volumes.

BARNARD'S DEAN RESIGNS

Mrs. George Haven Putnam Gives Up Her College Work.

NO SUCCESSOR TO BE NAMED

Her Decision the Result of Failing Health—May Resume Her Position at Some Future Time.

Barnard College has suffered a great loss in the resignation of Mrs. George Haven Putnam, first Dean of that institution, who will go out of office to-morrow. In her letter of resignation, which was read by Abram S. Hewitt, Chairman, at the last meeting of the Board of Trustees on Jan. 19, Mrs. Putnam stated as her reasons for giving up her work that she no longer found her strength sufficient for the discharge of her duties, and that because of an agreement with Columbia University, for which she had long worked, she was able to leave with a minimum of inconvenience to the college. The board passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the board accepts the resignation of Mrs. Emily J. Putnam, Dean of Barnard College, with profound regret at the great loss which the college must sustain in being deprived, at least for a time, of her valuable services; and,

Resolved, That the board expresses its high appreciation of the loyalty, devotion, and far-seeing wisdom which the retiring Dean has manifested in the discharge of her responsible and arduous duties to Barnard College during the past five years; and,

Resolved, That in the hope that the Dean may be able to resume the performance of her duties, the board is not inclined to consider the question of the appointment of a permanent Dean until after the close of the present college year.

The retiring Dean, who is still a young woman, is better known in the educational world as Miss Emily James Smith. She is a daughter of Judge James C. Smith of Canandaigua, who for more than thirty years was on the Supreme Bench of this State. She was born in Canandaigua, was graduated from Bryn Mawr College in 1888, and afterward studied at Cambridge University. Returning to this country, she became a Fellow in Greek in the University of Chicago. She was appointed Dean of Barnard College in 1894. The college then had about 110 students and occupied quarters at Madison Avenue and Forty-ninth Street. The number of students has trebled under her management, and she has seen it installed in its beautiful new site at Broadway and One Hundred and Nineteenth Street. For this growth, both educational and material, she is given no small share of credit, and even with the burden of all this administrative work she found time to do some teaching. Her crowning achievement however, was the consummation of a recent agreement with Columbia University, which she had been very much interested in bringing to pass. Up to this time all the privileges Barnard students have enjoyed in the university have been simply a matter of courtesy. Now, however, Barnard College is incorporated academically as one of the schools of Columbia, and the University Council controls all its educational work, Barnard retaining only its own Board of Trustees. Mrs. Putnam last evening refused to discuss the possibility of her returning to the post she leaves or her plans for the immediate future, but she said that her physician had ordered her to lay down her cares.

"It was not an accident that I resigned at the time the agreement took effect," she said. "Now they can run right along, as President Low is now President of Barnard by the agreement, and in case of an interregnum would see that everything went on smoothly."

Mrs. Putnam's husband is a descendant of Gen. Israel Putnam of Revolutionary fame, and is a member of a well-known publishing firm in this city. Mrs. Putnam has written numbers of magazine articles and addresses on educational topics, and has published a volume of translations from Lucian, the Greek author.

Prof. James H. Robinson, who holds the Chair of History in Columbia University, has been appointed Acting Dean of Barnard.

DEPEW OPERA HOUSE BURNED.

Fire Destroy's the Senator's Property at Peekskill—Loss, $40,000.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y., Jan. 29.—The Depew Opera House, here, owned by Senator Chauncey M. Depew, was destroyed by fire this morning. The loss is estimated at about $40,000.

The fire was discovered about 7:30 o'clock, and when the firemen arrived on the scene the interior of the Opera House was a mass of flames. A high wind favored the rapid progress of the fire, and despite the efforts of the firemen the flames burst through the roof and through the windows. The firemen, seeing that the Opera House was doomed, directed their efforts to saving surrounding property.

The building was erected nine years ago. It was a large brick structure, with brownstone front, and three stories high. In 1896 the building was sold to satisfy a judgment, and there were several biddings for the property. Senator Depew bought it for $22,000 and spent much money on improvements.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST—Warmer; fresh westerly, shifting to southerly, winds.

The cold wave which reached the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts Sunday night and yesterday was the most extensive, and in the Southern States, the most severe cold wave of the present season. Yesterday morning the temperature averaged about 30 degrees above zero along the Gulf Coast from Western Florida to Southern Texas, and heavy frost occurred at Jacksonville. In the interior of the country the temperature rose rapidly. Another cold wave has appeared in the region north of the Dakotas, with minimum temperatures 10 to 18 degrees below zero.

Since Sunday night a storm of marked strength has advanced from a position off Hatteras northnortheastward to the mouth of the St. Lawrence River, attended by high northeasterly shifting to northwesterly winds on the Middle Atlantic and New England Coast.

The weather will moderate to-day in the Middle and South Atlantic and Gulf States and the Upper Ohio Valley, and the Northwest cold wave will overspread the Missouri and Upper Mississippi Valleys. By to-morrow the temperature will probably again fall in the Upper Ohio Valley, the eastern lake region, and the North Atlantic States.

Along the Middle Atlantic and New England Coast the winds will diminish in force from the west to-day and shift to south. On the South Atlantic Coast the winds will be variable.

Storm signals are displayed from Boston to Eastport. Cold wave signals are displayed in North and South Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, and Northern Missouri.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from THE NEW YORK TIMES thermometer and from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau, is as follows:

COLD WAVE STRIKES THE CITY.

Not Expected to Last Long—Hospitals Crowded Yesterday.

The crescent-shaped cold wave, with one extremity over the upper lakes and the other in the vicinity of Southwestern Georgia, arrived at New York in the early hours of yesterday morning on the wings of an icy gale, blowing at the rate of sixty miles an hour. The mercury dropped 20 degrees in twelve hours, and reached its limit at 10 o'clock last night, when the official thermometer registered 16 degrees above zero. This may not sound very cold, but walking in this temperature in the teeth of a gale was about the most disagreeable weather experience New Yorkers have suffered this season.

This icy windstorm was strictly official, according to the Weather Bureau people, who said last night that New York had "got off easy." The storm

WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S

Was It An Intrusion?

THERE were folks that said it was when Stewart's Store became Wanamaker's. But the folks who said so didn't know.

It would have been impertinent had we come here without a mission. The proof of our mission appears in the fact that in the three short years the shoping public have made a business here that taxes our facilities to the utmost.

Our mission is to work out on the highest plane that we can reach; the greatest ideas of up-to-date retailing. Merchandise—diligently sought in every market of the world. Merchandise—collected by honest experts and therefore worthy of your respect. Merchandise—transferred to you straight from the maker, and therefore at lowest cost. Store service that shall serve you quickly and well.

And yet our mission has only just begun. Handicapped by human limitations that often produce faulty work, we push on. Your appreciation gives us success. And success is merely a stimulant to better things. Some day we hope to show you a more complete expression of our ideas in good storekeeping.

Good advertising is one of our aims. The effort is to make good store news that shall be vital with human interest, truth without dulness, accuracy without stupidity.

Psychology and Dress Goods

The interior decorator will gain your confidence more quickly than the dressmaker. It is easier to sell you furniture than dress goods. All this is quite natural. You are more critical concerning the things you wear than you are concerning your surroundings.

Therefore of all progress in selling we take increased sales of dress goods with the most serious satisfaction. Thus comes present gratification over the reception accorded to our high novelties in French Cotton Dress Goods. The pen cannot interpret them,—your eyes are needed. Critics call it an exhibition of the fine arts in textiles.

Our Cotton Dress Goods contain many items of great interest because so cheap.

Ginghams—French or Scotch, Which? A salesperson said "French," which of course was absurd, for everybody — except the salesperson—knew they were Scotch. That sort of thing hurts the store.

Nevertheless the value was 25c, and the price is 12½c. Throngs of buyers in front of the counters and flying yard sticks behind wafted away one-half yesterday. The choice remains, rich and full, for another day's carnival—to-day may close the chapter.
Rotunda, towards Broadway.

Cotton-and-Silk Foulards, 25c Only a few days since it was 109,000 yards. The quantity has been reduced by great selling. They are re-aligned in ranks most beautiful. The texture is like a butterfly's wing. The patterns are quite to the most critical taste. The value, 50c, and cheap. The price is almost an insult to fabrics so fine. Been going a week and why so good a choice? Didn't have room enough to show all at once. Else you wouldn't be a reading of this.

Twenty-five Cents

Broadway and Tenth street.

Printed Organdies, 12½c An international combination. Europe supplies the cloth, America the finishing and printing. Our folks can print them just as well as the Franco-Germans, and thus you get at 12½c what otherwise would cost you 37½c. Only 5,000 yards. A mere trifle. White grounds and flower designs.
Fourth avenue.

Cotton is queen of Summer Dress Goods.

Black Dress Goods The greater portion of the fabrics listed below are intended for spring wear. Incoming goods will not be greatly dissimilar—in fact, there's but very little change in weave and design. Yet these rich blacks must be sacrificed to the demand for show space for the early spring arrivals. Prices reduced a third on some—others a full half.

White Lawn Aprons Lawns are considerably higher than when these were bought, a little while back. But that shall not influence this price—not yet. 25c for these aprons, and they're excellent values at that price. Of fine quality and prettily trimmed.

China Table Ware Wise housekeepers by the thousand know that with our coming to New York we brought a new era in the china business. Growing sales show the rapid widening of the circles that know the fact.

New ideas in styles of china ware. Our specially gathered collections are unique, unlike all others.

Our convictions were that fine chinaware should be cheaper—it is cheaper.

Sacques, Robes and Waists

These are all of warm materials—eiderdown and flannelette. Their season's ended for us, practically. But if the law of averages is to be maintained this winter, there'll be wearing time in plenty for you. At any rate it's time these cosey, grateful garments were giving actual comfort. We'll help them on such an errand, by making new prices—the easiest sort of prices—

Eiderdown Sacques—At 50c. Solid blue, red, gray or pink; full front, fitted back; bound with satin; closing with frogs; were $1. At $1.75—Various solid colors; full front, fitted back; large, prettily appliqued collar; closing with frogs. These were $3.25.

Eiderdown Robes—At $2, one style, in solid pink, is made with full front, fitted back, and large collar bound with satin; closes with frogs and girdle; were good value at $3. Another quality at $3.50, though moderately priced at $5. These in red, blue, pink and violet; bound with satin; closing with frogs and girdle.

Flannelette and Mercerized Cotton Waists—Two particularly good values in waists of flannelette. One at 75c—Of the striped fabric; bias striped full front; yoke and plaited back. The other at 95c is in shepherd's plaid—black and white; attractively made.

At $1—Mercerized cotton. The close resemblance to silk is surprising. Shown in various solid colors and black; prettily plaited across front and back. An unusually attractive and durable waist for one dollar.

Cognate to Candies

Dinner favors and that sort of thing consort with candies. It fits. The chief of our business in sweets goes to Europe often. He doesn't learn much about candies, for American candy novelties are more numerous than any except French. Travel sharpens wits and sharp wits are equally needed in candies and dress goods. He gets dinner table decorations.

Sometime since English echoes demanded pie-collars, and pie-collars are here. They are along with the swans, dolls, lilies, tubs, bells and other devices that form dinner favors for creams and bon-bons.

On one side are snap crackers that throw out mottoes, paper caps, alleged jewels; on the other side cream cases and patty cases. Near them ham, chop and small bone frills and lace papers appear.

Hearts for St. Valentine. Little hatchets for George Washington speak of coming holidays. It's a great candy store.

$350,000 FACTORY FIRE

Oil and Varnish Feed Fierce Flames in Cherry Street.

ICE-COATED FIREMEN'S PERIL

Explosions and Danger from Warehouse Filled with Fireworks—Losses of the Heywood Brothers.

One of the most disastrous, as well as picturesque, fires with which the department has had to cope since the big fire in Whitehall Street last Winter occurred soon after 7 o'clock yesterday morning in the chair factory of the Heywood Brothers & Wakefield Company, at 297 to 303 Cherry Street, and extending through to 546-550 Water Street. The factory, which was a seven-story structure, and its contents, consisting of stock and machinery, are a total loss, only a part of the walls remaining. The damage is estimated by Chief Croker at $300,000, which is covered by insurance. The storage warehouses of Lawrence, Son & Gerrish, which adjoin the building on the north, and a similar establishment of Elliott F. Driggs and Silas W. Driggs, across Water Street from the factory, were also damaged by water to the estimated extent of $50,000. There were a number of minor casualties to firemen, who suffered severely from the cold.

About 100 employes of the chair factory were at work when one of their number discovered fire on the fifth floor and immediately informed his companions, who made their way to the street. Samuel Furman, who lives in one of the tenements across the street, saw the flames and at once turned in an alarm. The Captain of the first company that responded turned in a second alarm, which brought Chief Croker to the scene. When he arrived he saw the danger to the immense storage warehouses near by. He turned in third, fourth, and fifth alarms, which brought all the engines south of Fifty-ninth Street.

ICE COATS THE FIREMEN.

The firemen had a tremendous task set them. At times it was impossible to approach near enough to the building on the Cherry Street side to get water to play on the flames, and Engine No. 17, stationed in front of the building, was pulled out of harm's way only after the driver's seat had been burned and the wheels were smoking. A terrific gale was blowing, and this, taking up the water from the towers, turned it into spray, which froze as soon as it touched anything. The firemen working on the north side of the building were soon coated with ice, but they stuck manfully to their tasks.

For a time after the fire started it seemed as if the men would be able to confine its ravages to the Cherry Street front of the building. Chief Croker, incased in a sheet of ice, ordered a number of men into the Water Street side of the building to keep the fire at bay there. Among them were Firemen Quarl and Knapp of Engine 17. Directly thereafter sheets of flame burst through the front, and the air was filled with little burning globules. The Chief knew at once what these burning globules meant. They were burning varnish and oil. He learned that tanks containing nearly 20,000 gallons of the varnish were on the fifth floor, and he ordered the men to abandon that point.

The orders had hardly been issued, when there was a succession of explosions, the flames burst through the Water Street side, and the building and the street about it were deluged with burning oil.

"Get out of that. Come down to the street!" shouted the Chief to his men. Capts. Graham and Hellner and their men made their way out, and then the cry went up that Quarl and Knapp had been caught. Father Smith, the Chaplain of the department, began an investigation, and it was found that the two men had made their way out on the south side of the building, having dropped on the roof of the stable next door and thus reached the street. Both were scorched, but they insisted on remaining at work. Capt. Graham was cut by flying glass, but he continued directing his men.

TONS OF WATER BURST WALLS.

A few minutes after the explosion of the varnish tanks, an immense water tank on the roof collapsed and the rush of the tons of water burst the walls, which fell with a roar into the streets. The water for a moment only subdued the flames of the burning varnish.

Chief Croker also learned that fireworks were stored in the neighboring warehouses, as well as matting, teas, silk, and crockery. The fireworks were the greatest menace, and the Chief stationed men on the roofs of the storage houses to extinguish the burning oil balls that fell thick all around.

When the sixth and seventh story walls of the factory collapsed, they fell on the roof of Lawrence, Son & Gerrish's warehouse, setting fire to the northeast corner. The place was at once drenched, and it was saved.

The fireboats did great service, sending their six-inch streams across South Street into the burning buildings. The fireboat Seth Low came over from Brooklyn and gave aid.

The firemen were not the only men on duty who suffered from the cold and wind. The policemen came in for their share of the hardship. One of these particularly, Edward Holt of the Charles Street Station, had a post in Cherry Street, where he caught the full force of the spray. In a short time he was solidly incased in ice. He stood at his post until nearly 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

There was a panic in the tenements opposite the factory when the flames were discovered. The children were hurried to places of safety near by and the fathers returned to their houses to watch over their household treasures. Holt, who was stationed here, did great service in keeping these frightened people, few of whom understood English, in order.

T. D. Walsh, the Superintendent of the building, said that the fire had started on the fifth floor. The cause is unknown. The barge Heywood, lying at Pier 40, was damaged by fire to the extent of $500. Another barge was also damaged and several bales of cotton on it were partly consumed from sparks dropping on them.

B'NAI B'RITH SESSION ENDS.

Lodge Changes Assessment System, Elects Officers, and Adjourns.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 29.—The improved Order of B'nai B'rith finished the work of its annual convention here to-day. A new system of assessment was substituted for that of set charges in case of death. The one adopted is a graduated scale for different ages. The election of officers resulted as follows:

Supreme President—Elias Ottenheimer of Baltimore; First Vice President—Charles Katz, Philadelphia; Second Vice President—A. B. Seelenfreund, Chicago; Supreme Secretary—Moses Katz, Baltimore; Supreme Treasurer—Kaufman Katz, Baltimore; Supreme Guide—Jacob Kaufman, Baltimore.

The next convention will be held at Baltimore in January, 1901.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

"We had stewed burglars and burglar steak for dinner last evening," casually remarked one of the residents at a fashionable up-town apartment house yesterday, "and we are not cannibals at that." The rather startling assertion certainly needed the explanation that was forthcoming when a look as of incredulity spread over the faces of the listeners. "It was this way," he explained. "On Friday night, after every one had gone to roost the janitor whose rooms are in the basement, heard a suspicious noise on the floor of the restaurant just over his head. He was sure he heard footsteps, and at once jumped to the conclusion that the footsteps were those of burglars. So he rushed to the apartments of the Superintendent, informed him of what he had heard and what were his suspicions. It was decided to notify the police. There happened to be a patrolman on the beat, and he was told of the invasion of the restaurant. This 'copper' didn't care to tackle the burglars single-handed, and rapped for assistance so vigorously that before he was through he had four other officers to reinforce him. These were distributed as guards at the various entrances to the restaurant, and then the officer of the beat with one of his fellows went to the rear of the house and effected an entrance through a back door to the kitchen. Every policeman was armed with his revolver and club and 'ready to do or die,' as the story books have it. With their bull's-eye lanterns opened and guns cocked, the two officers and the Superintendent bravely entered the restaurant and shouted to the party with the mysterious and disturbing footsteps to hold up his hands. There was no reply to the challenge vocally, though there was a defiant repetition of the footsteps in a very uncanny fashion. Finally the rays of the lanterns were focussed in the direction from which the noise seemed to come, and there, floundering about on the floor, were three green turtles, with their flappers hammering the floor as they tried to escape from the rays of the lanterns. Then there was a shout of laughter from the human trio, a summons to the waiting officers outside, and the burglars were restored to the basket, from which they had escaped for a tour of inspection of the restaurant. 'We had the turtles for dinner, and that's why I say that we had burglar steaks as the pièce de résistance of our Sunday dinner."

Truly, New York is a chocolate-eating community. Travelers on the elevated roads keep the slot machines on the platforms busy absorbing pennies and disgorging small tablets of chocolate through all the twenty-four hours of the day. "How much of that stuff do New Yorkers consume in a week?" "Well, I can't say exactly," replied, in answer to a query, one of the men whose duty it is to keep the slot machines filled, "but at a rough guess I should say that they eat about three tons a week from the slot machines alone. The 'Super' at the factory told me that we distributers use up 1,000 pounds daily in keeping the machines here and in Brooklyn filled, so you see my estimate cannot be far out of the way."

If ever there was a lesson in contentment for people who are forever groaning over the petty trifles that annoy them, it was to be learned from an incident that occurred in a fashionable restaurant on the upper west side of town on Saturday evening. Seated at one of the tables was a party of three, two ladies and a gentleman. The younger of these ladies was evidently having the merriest time imaginable consistent with perfect propriety in so public a place. At intervals her musical laugh would ring out above the other noises of the dining place, and those nearest her would occasionally hear her hum a strain of some popular song in accompaniment to the orchestra. She certainly appeared to be the happiest and merriest of the crowd in the crowded room. So infectious was her gayety that people could not help turning to look at her occasionally as if to participate in her joyousness. There was very general surprise when it was noticed that the young lady was being fed by her companion, and that she was apparently helpless to do the least service for herself. Her eyes, shrouded by colored glasses, seemed to betoken some minor eye trouble, while the truth was they were sightless, though not a half dozen of the diners had the least suspicion of it. The merry and sightless woman was Mrs. Baldwin, the victim of a railway accident at Spuyten Duyvil, a few years since, later than that terrible one that cost so many lives when Senator Webster Wagner and others were killed. In that later accident Mrs. Baldwin had both hands burned off at the wrists, lost both her eyes, had her face terribly scarred, as well as having her hair burned off close to the head, besides suffering other minor injuries. A social favorite, blessed with all the comforts that wealth could procure, she seemingly had all that was worth living for wiped out at once by this terrible accident. Yet, recovering from her terrible wounds, and with some of the traces of what once must have been very beautiful features restored, she is able not only to bear her afflictions heroically, but to extract from life much in the way of happiness and contentment that still makes life well worth the living to her. Surely, here is a lesson that should teach something to those of us more fortunate in every way, and whose trials are as nothing compared with even the least of what this woman has to bear.

That was a rather funny sight noticed on Columbus Avenue yesterday. Two schoolboys, with bare hands, stood shivering over the repair kit of a plumber, trying to warm their hands over such heat as arose from one of those little hand furnaces the plumber carries to heat his soldering irons in. Directly at the backs of the lads was a huge cake of artificial ice, big enough and cold enough to give the passer-by a chill of very considerable proportions. How the child minds operated to produce the impression that they were getting more heat from the front than cold from the back was a mystery.

"The attack on that poor fellow Bodger up on One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street on Saturday night, in order to rob him of the $300 he had in his possession, is not to be so much wondered at," remarked the observant man, "if such an experience as I had the other day is at all common in the street cars of New York. I came down town on an Eighth Avenue trolley car. At Fifty-ninth Street two men got into the car, one of them wearing clothing that indicated that he was a butcher, and just from his market, without time to make a change of his apparel. His companion was a well-dressed and rather dandified-looking fellow, whose subsequent actions led me to believe that he was a collector for a wholesale meat house. He had hardly got settled in his seat before he drew from an inside pocket a huge bill book that was pretty well stuffed with both cash and checks. One package of bills had the original wrapper that banks put about such bundles of greenbacks, and was marked, in unusually large figures, '$500.' Besides this he had what appeared to be as much more cash. For I could plainly see several bills of large denominations. The collector was manifestly proud of the fact that he was intrusted with so large an amount of money, for half a dozen times between his taking his seat in the car and his departure from it at Fourteenth Street, even after his companion left him, he flourished it about, to the evident delight of several women on the car, who might possibly have been ready for a little flirtation had the fresh young man given them a bit of encouragement. If a man does that sort of thing in so public a place as he did, it is a sort of encouragement to just such assaults as that of which Bodger was a victim on Saturday night. This city is full of men who would not hesitate to take a short route to a fortune if they see the fortune in sight and being handled by so very fresh a young man as my friend of the street car. And they can hardly be blamed for breaking out as highwaymen in the face of such a useless temptation."

BROOKLYN REVIVAL SERVICES.

Statement on Controversy Over Attitude of Certain Preachers.

The controversy which has arisen in Brooklyn over the attitude of certain of the revival preachers toward the Unitarians has led the Executive Committee of the Evangelistic Forward Movement, through its Chairman, David Gregg, and its Secretary, Thomas S. Henderson, to issue the following manifesto:

"The movement was started to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ to the unsaved, and to confirm believers in their most holy faith. This is precisely what has been done. The services which have been conducted have been services in which sin has been exposed and salvation has been offered. In not a single instance have these services been of a controversial character. Whatever controversy there may have been has been conducted in the pages of the newspapers and not on our platform."

HOMES FOR CONSUMPTIVES.

System of Sanitariums Where Proper Hygienic Conditions Can Be Had Is Recommended.

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—The establishment of local public sanitariums for the treatment of persons who are afflicted with tuberculosis is strongly recommended to the State Board of Charities by a committee consisting of Harvey W. Putnam, Dr. Enoch V. Stoddard, and Dr. Stephenson Smith. The plan submitted by this committee calls for the establishment of such institutions near the great centres of population, and even in more sparsely settled communities, where proper attention can be paid to the sanitary conditions.

The committee points out that pure air is the greatest remedial agent known in the cure of tuberculosis, and a supply of this, together with a strict dietary system, is to be furnished at each of the hospitals that may be erected. The patients are to be isolated as soon as the first symptoms appear, and are to be taught how to combat the disease. The committee points out that each one of those who returns cured will become an instructor of those with whom he associates, and they confidently predict that by this means, together with the lessened danger of infection, it will be but a comparatively short time before the disease will be stamped out.

The report concludes by expressing the conviction that if the Legislature should enact a law on the general plan outlined it would at once lead to the establishment of local hospitals near all the great centres of population, the beneficent results of which would stimulate the people of smaller communities to the creation of their own hospitals. It is the conviction that if the State would adopt and vigorously enforce in every household a policy regarding tuberculosis in all its forms, and along the lines above sketched, within a decade the disease now familiarly called "consumption" would be known only among the most depraved and uncontrollable classes of any community.

LEGAL NOTES.

VIOLATION OF TRUST DUTY FOR PECUNIARY ADVANTAGE.—Severe judicial condemnation was pronounced yesterday by Justice Russell, in Supreme Court, Special Term, upon a scheme in which Silas P. Wood, as President of the American Fire Insurance Company, was instrumental, for pecuniary consideration to himself, in transferring the company's control to the Manchester Fire Insurance Company. The latter company, being desirous of acquiring the stock, control, business, and good will of the American Company, secured Mr. Wood's participation to accomplish that result. The Manchester Company by the arrangement secured $15,000 of stock of the American Company, which was capitalized at $400,000; the resignation of the executive officers and Directors, and the complete control of that organization. The propositions which were accepted and acted upon by Mr. Wood required the passage over to the Manchester Company of the majority of the stock, the wiping out of the old Board of Directors, and the resignation of Mr. Wood as President. Each stockholder of the American Company, in consideration of the success of the scheme, was to have $100 for each share of his stock on the transfer of his certificate, and Mr. Wood was to retain an official connection with the American Company as Vice President at a salary of $6,000, at least until the annual meeting, in January, 1898. The Board of Directors of the American Company was to have the right to vote an honorarium of $6,000 cash to Mr. Wood if on the 1st of January he desired to sever his connection with the company. If the company desired to forego his services, he was to have $9,000 more. The $6,000 was paid, and then Mr. Wood gave notice of his desire to terminate his connection with the company. Payment of the $9,000 was refused. Then Mr. Wood sued the Manchester Company for that sum. Justice Russell gave judgment for the defendant, on demurrer to the complaint. The Court held that the sale of a corporation organized for the purpose of making insurance was presumptively an act of felo de se. "When Trustees of a corporation, for their pecuniary benefit," Justice Russell said, "even though that benefit may be shared by others interested in a smaller relative degree, seek to gain pecuniary advantage by the sale of the corporation and of their own trust duties to other persons, the act is one which cannot be sustained by law."

DEPRIVATION OF WIFE'S SUPPORT AND CONSORTIUM.—Betsy Goldman brought suit in the Supreme Court to recover for the loss she sustained as a wife by the injuries inflicted upon her husband from the negligence of Richard Cohen, the defendant, in the management of a horse. The loss claimed was that which usually occurs to a wife from the loss of a husband in the deprivation of support and consortium, and the need of her personal care for him during his sickness. Justice Russell, in Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday sustained a demurrer to the complaint, giving judgment for the defendant. Justice Russell said that such negligence has never yet been embraced within the circle of causes of action recognized by the law as a right given to the injured one, and which had survived to the consort and injured one in case of death, and added: "It is true that this century, with our own State foremost, is in the advance in the adoption, by unwritten and statutory law, of the justice of wider views of the wife's existence as a human being, by the emancipation of her person from 'the moderate chastisement' of the husband, and the protection of her rights of property; but her interest in the husband's life and companionship is not a right of property or derived from a contract of bargain and sale. That interest lies in a region into which the law does not enter except when necessity compels; but it does recognize invasion by willful misconduct. It inflicts heavy damages upon the enticer or seducer. But this is for punishment and atonement, rather than compensation. It comes within the range of a current and supplementary adjunct to the criminal law, for the prevention and redress of wrongs."

THE DAMAGES AWARDED WERE NOT EXCESSIVE.—Martin Hutchinson, a child about seven years old, with three brothers and a friend of about the same age, while on his way to attend a Christmas festival at the Columbia Theatre, in Brooklyn, on Dec. 25, 1895, boarded a car of the Atlantic Avenue Railroad Company on Adams Street, and soon after transferred to an Atlantic Avenue car of the same company. The boy, who took a seat near the middle of the car, soon after began vomiting. With one of his brothers he attempted to gain the rear platform, but was told by the conductor to return to his seat. He did so, and resumed vomiting. When some of the passengers complained, the conductor took hold of him and removed him from the car to the street. According to his story and that of his brothers, the conductor dragged him to the rear platform by the coat collar or shoulder, where he lifted him up and threw him to the ground over the dashboard, without stopping the car. In the child's suit, by guardian, against the railroad company, a verdict was given in his favor for $3,500. The judgment thereupon entered, which was affirmed by the Appellate Division of the Second Department, has now been sustained by the Court of Appeals. The appellate tribunal held that the verdict could not be set aside as excessive, where it appeared that the child suffered a fracture of the acromion process and of the humerus or upper arm bone, and at the time of the trial still suffered and was likely to continue to suffer from the injuries.

GAGE MAKES REPLY TO SENATE QUERIES

NO CONFERENCE WITH MORGAN

The Secretary Denies Any Agreement with the National City Bank as to Deposits.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The Secretary of the Treasury to-day transmitted to the Senate his reply to the resolution of Jan. 22 calling for further information as to his dealings with the officials of the National City Bank of New York. Secretary Gage quotes in full the Senate resolution, and adds that it might be considered as fully answered by his communication of Jan. 10 in reply to the Senate's first resolution of inquiry of Jan. 3 on the same subject. He adds, however, that he will endeavor to supply, to the best of his ability, whatever may have been lacking in this first answer. Secretary Gage then takes up the resolution of Jan. 23 by paragraphs. His reply, in brief, is as follows:

"1. That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all letters and the substance of any conversation or agreement he may have written or had with A. B. Hepburn in reply to a letter from Mr. Hepburn to him, dated June 5, 1897.

"A careful search of the department files does not show any answer to the letter of A. B. Hepburn, written by him to me, dated June 5, 1897, nor do I believe that any answer ever was made to said letter. Neither do I recall any conversation had with A. B. Hepburn in reply to such letter. Nor was there at that time, or now, any agreement made or expectation of an agreement to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury or any of the officers of the Treasury Department with any person or persons with reference to the subject matter of said letter of A. B. Hepburn.

"The record transmitted with my communication of Jan. 10, 1900, contains all there is or ever was, so far as I know, concerning the said letter of A. B. Hepburn."

THE PACIFIC RAILWAY MONEY.

In reference to copies of letters, communications, agreements, papers, and documents passing between the Treasury Department and the National City Bank of New York within the period embraced between June 5, 1897, and Oct. 27, 1897, Mr. Gage says:

"It does not appear from any record of the Treasury Department, nor is it within the recollection of the Secretary of the Treasury, that the department or any of its officers had any relations, either official or private, with the National City Bank of New York within the period embraced between June 5, 1897, and Oct. 27, 1897, so that there are no letters, communications, agreements, papers, and documents in the possession of the department which passed between the Treasury Department and the National City Bank within that period."

The Secretary calls attention to the necessity which arose late in October, 1897, of disposing in some way of the large sum of money—$58,448,223—which was realized from the settlement of the Pacific Railway debt, without drawing this money out of active channels, and thus precipitating a financial disturbance. He refers to his letter to Mr. Hepburn, printed in full in his first reply, in which he told Mr. Hepburn that H. W. Cannon of the Chase National Bank already been requested to ascertain how many banks would qualify as depositories to receive a portion of the $30,000,000 of the railway fund which was to be disbursed in the redemption of Government 6s about Jan. 1." The Secretary adds:

"The National City Bank could readily qualify by the deposit of public bonds to receive a large amount. It was necessary that there should be in this instance an original recipient and distributor of the fund, because one check alone was drawn in amount $13,645,250. It ought to occur readily to the minds of the most inexperienced in banking affairs that it required an institution of some considerable magnitude to handle such a check.

"As shown in the communication of Jan. 10, 1900, the National City Bank did become the original recipient and distributor of this fund, and that as fast as certain other banks qualified it transferred to those institutions, as follows: To the Chase National, $2,000,000; to the Hanover National, $2,000,000; to the Fifth National, $200,000; to the American Exchange National, $500,000; to the National Bank of the Republic, $500,000; to the Seaboard National, $500,000, and to the Western National, $1,000,000, all of which sums, together with the amount held by the National City Bank, secured by deposits of bonds of the United States, were subsequently withdrawn and paid into the Sub-Treasury at New York.

"The Secretary believes that he accomplished by such transaction what he has taken pains to do since, namely, the avoidance of that sort of disturbance in the money market which affects not merely speculative affairs, but which, as sad experience has too often demonstrated, spreads throughout the whole commercial and industrial fabric, bringing ruin and disaster such as close the doors of factories and mills, throw labor out of employment, and invite years of business stagnation, the like of which was witnessed during the period from 1893 to 1897.

"I may add, the sole purpose which has animated the Secretary in these connections was so to use the banks as to secure, preserve, and keep the public moneys without risk or hazard of loss, and in such form within the limitations and requirements of law as would best preserve and protect the general interests of the people."

THE DEAL WITH STILLMAN.

Section 3 of the reply relates to the request for letters and telegrams bearing on an alleged "conference" with Mr. Morgan regarding the Treasury deposits in the National bank depositories in New York. In response Secretary Gage says:

"There are no letters, communications, agreements, papers, or documents on file in the Treasury Department between the Secretary of the Treasury or his subordinate officers or officials and the officials of the National City Bank of New York, or the officials of the National City Bank and the Secretary of the Treasury or his subordinates, in reference to a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to James Stillman, President of the National City Bank of New York, of Dec. 21, 1897, in which the Secretary wrote, 'I have yours of the 20th inst. and note your suggestions as to a conference with Mr. Morgan in relation to the Treasury deposits in the National bank depositories of New York,' other than were transmitted with my communication to the President pro tempore of the Senate under date of Jan. 10, 1900. Nor can it be recalled that there was ever any conversation had between the Secretary of the Treasury and Mr. Stillman, or between the Secretary of the Treasury and any other man, concerning the said letter."

The fourth section of the Senate inquiry is quoted as follows: "And the Secretary of the Treasury is further directed to transmit to the Senate copies of any letters, agreements, communications, papers, documents or other information in his possession or in the possession of the Treasury Department respecting the conference between the Secretary of the Treasury and James Stillman, President of the National City Bank; J. P. Morgan of New York, and any other person or persons with whom he conferred in Philadelphia, as mentioned in his letter to James Stillman, President of the National City Bank of New York, of Dec. 21, 1897, and also whether or not the conference resulted in any agreement or understanding in regard to depositing Government moneys in the National bank depositories in the City of New York; whether or not any record was kept in the Treasury Department of telephonic or telegraphic communications between the Secretary of the Treasury or his subordinate officers and the officials of the National City Bank of New York City, and, if so, what agreement and understanding was arrived at by means of these telephonic, telegraphic, and other communications."

NO CONFERENCE WITH MORGAN.

To this the Secretary replies: "It should be a sufficient answer to all that is requested on the subject of this conference between Mr. Stillman, Mr. Morgan, and myself at Philadelphia to say that such a conference never took place. Mr. Stillman and Mr. Morgan, for what reason I know not, did not come to Philadelphia to see me, but on Dec. 28, 1897, Mr. Stillman placed the matter about which he and Mr. Morgan wished to talk with me before me in a letter, which appears on Page 77 of the document wherein is printed my communication to the President pro tempore of the Senate of Jan. 10, 1900."

Mr. Stillman's letter is a request to allow as much as possible of the Pacific debt money to remain in the New York banks so as to secure "an easy money market with a uniform rate of interest," which Mr. Stillman said would avoid a panic and aid in the reorganization plans of various railway companies then in progress.

Section 5, which refers especially to that part of the inquiry which raises the question whether or not the Secretary of the Treasury knew or had reason to believe that the Government funds deposited in the National City Bank of New York were used with a view of causing a liquidation of speculative stocks, as mentioned in the letter of James Stillman to Lyman J. Gage of April 8, 1890. Mr. Gage answers as follows:

"The two letters referred to in the inquiry are separated by a period of sixteen months, but all the knowledge or belief the Secretary of the Treasury has as to the use to which deposits in the National City Bank were to be put, at either period, or at any other period between Dec. 21, 1897, and April 8, 1890, was obtained from these letters, which have already been submitted to the Senate in answer to the former inquiry. Beyond the information conveyed by these two letters the Secretary has no knowledge whatever. They were not supplemented by personal interviews or telephonic communications."

MADE NO VERBAL AGREEMENTS.

The sixth query answered is whether or not the Secretary of the Treasury or any of his subordinates had any correspondence, telegraphic or telephonic, or otherwise, or any agreements, documents, papers, or conversation with the officials of the National City Bank of New York, between the period embraced from April 28, 1898, to June 2, 1898; Sept. 19, 1898, to Oct. 29, 1898; Aug. 26, 1899, to Dec. 19, 1899, and, if so, let him accompany his response to this resolution with copies there. The Secretary replies:

"The Senate has already been furnished, as stated in my communication of Jan. 10, 1900, with all correspondence, letters, telegrams, agreements, documents, and papers in the possession of the Treasury Department with reference to deposits in the National City Bank of New York, from March 4, 1897, to Jan. 4, 1900, the date of the previous Senate resolutions on this subject. For that reason there have already been furnished to the Senate copies of all correspondence of every kind and description from April 28, 1898, to June 2, 1898; Sept. 19, 1898, to Oct. 29, 1898; Aug. 28, 1899, to Dec. 19, 1899

"The department is without means of preserving conversations, and for that reason is not able to comply with the Senate's request for copies of conversations, if any were had. It has not been the practice of the Secretaries of the Treasury to preserve conversations. It may be said, in general, however, that in the transaction of the business of this department with the National City Bank, or with any other bank, no conversation has been had, either by telephone or face to face, which has had reference to any relations, official or private, otherwise than as fully set forth in my communication to the Senate, dated Jan. 10, 1900. No agreement, past, present, or in contemplation, has ever been had with the National City Bank otherwise than is literally set forth in my communication to the President pro tem. of the Senate of Jan. 10, 1900."

NO STANDARD OIL TRUST BONDS.

The final section of the Senate inquiry reads: "And the Secretary of the Treasury is further directed to inform the Senate of the amount of United States bonds held in trust by the Treasury Department for the Standard Oil Company of the City of New York, to secure Government deposits for the National City Bank of New York City, and upon which dates these bonds were assigned, and the amount thereof now or at any time held by the Government of the United States for the Standard Oil Company."

This inquiry, the Secretary says, is based on a misconception, induced, no doubt, by requests from the National City Bank to transfer certain lots of bonds to the Standard Oil Company and to other parties. Secretary Gage explains that when registered bonds are deposited as security in the Treasury they are canceled and fresh bonds issued to the credit of the Treasurer in his name "in trust." When such bonds are surrendered by the Treasurer they may be reissued to the depositing bank or, on the bank's formal request, they may be reissued to any other person or institution. In conclusion, he says:

"The records show that the Treasurer has assigned and delivered upon the orders of the National City Bank, to fourteen different parties, a total of $7,334,000, and of these $1,914,000 was transferred to the Standard Oil Company. The Treasury Department has at no time held any bonds in trust for the Standard Oil Company, nor for any interest other than for the depositing bank."

MR. GAGE IS AGAIN ATTACKED.

House Democrats Impugn His Motives in the Sale of the New York Custom House.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—Immediately after the reading of the Journal in the House to-day Mr. Dalzell, (Rep., Penn.,) from the Committee on Rules, reported back the Sulzer resolution for the appointment of a special committee to investigate the deposit of public funds by Secretary Gage in New York banks and all the transactions relating to the sale of the New York Custom House, with the recommendation that it be referred to the Ways and Means Committee. The recommendation was acquiesced in after a sharp debate, which was participated in by Mr. Richardson, (Dem., Tenn.,) Mr. Sulzer, (Dem., N. Y.,) Mr. Hopkins, (Rep., Ill.,) Mr. Dalzell, (Rep., Penn.,) and Mr. Hill, (Rep., Conn.)

Mr. Dalzell explained that the response of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Sulzer resolution of inquiry upon the same subject had gone to the Ways and Means Committee, and it was proper that that committee should have jurisdiction.

Mr. Richardson, leader of the minority, said he was not opposed to the reference of the resolution to the Ways and Means Committee, but he was decidedly of the opinion that an investigation should be made.

When he spoke a few days ago, he said, he had insisted that there must be some reason why the National City Bank of New York had not completed its title to the Custom House property purchased from the Government. The Government had taken a paper credit for $3,215,000, which left the pitiful sum of $50,000 still due the Government. Why had this been done? Not a dollar of the Government's credit at the bank had been checked out. Why could the credit not have been for the full amount? There must be some reason, said Mr. Richardson, and he insisted that the resolution had developed. It had been the intention of the Secretary of the Treasury, he said, to relieve the bank of its tax obligation to the State and City of New York by retaining the title in the Government. The Government had agreed to pay rent for the property, yet the bank was not to pay taxes upon it. He called attention to the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury asking Congress to appropriate $109,000 for the property sold in the manner he had described to prevent the bank from being liable for taxes.

"If that was the Secretary's motive," said Mr. Richardson, emphatically, "I am here to condemn it and to insist that it does not become the Secretary of the Treasury to go into partnership with a private corporation."

The National City Bank of New York, Mr. Richardson said, had been enabled to make $357,000 up to date. Mr. Richardson said he was surprised that the Secretary of the Treasury had not already asked to be allowed to make an explanation.

Mr. Sulzer, the author of the resolution, followed Mr. Richardson. He said the Republican Party dared neither to smother nor ignore the resolution. The people of the country were deeply interested in ascertaining the truth. He characterized the conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury as infamous, and his connection with the Rockefeller bank, which had been used, he said, to manipulate the stock market against adverse interests, as scandalous.

"We demand this investigation," said he, "to ascertain who the stockholders and Directors of this bank are that they are entitled to special privileges from this Administration."

Ever since the present Secretary had been in office, Mr. Sulzer said, he had been aiding the National City Bank at the expense of other National banks. It had been making millions "coming and going." He declared that the people of the country recognized that the Secretary of the Treasury was unfit and incompetent to hold the purse-strings. The United States Treasury was made the instrument of the Standard Oil Trust. Aye, more, he said, the people believed the Secretary should be impeached.

Mr. Hopkins, in reply, said that all this discussion was premature and out of place.

"I simply rise," said he, "to protest against the unfounded, unwarranted, and untrue charges made by the gentleman from Tennessee, (Richardson.) What right has he to impute false and fraudulent motives to the Secretary of the Treasury? Is there any evidence upon which to base them? None whatever. When the Secretary of the Treasury was called upon for the facts he presented a full response."

"Why did the $50,000 remain unpaid?" interrupted Mr. Richardson.

"I'll come to that," replied Mr. Hopkins.

Proceeding, he said Mr. Richardson had charged that the Secretary had entered into a fraudulent contract.

"I affirm," said he, "that there is no support whatever for the charge. The Custom House property was sold to the National City Bank. It took possession and made a lease. I claim that the City and State of New York can proceed to the collection of taxes just as if the paper title had passed. Under the law the Secretary of the Treasury sold the property to the highest bidder. The National City Bank bid $190,000 more than any other bidder. What is the next offense? That the purchase price was deposited with the National City Bank. Was there anything wrong in that? That bank is a Government depository selected by the Administration because of its financial standing, and a deposit in the bank was the same as if it had been in the Sub-Treasury or in the Treasury itself. I ask then, in the name of decency and justice, where is the wrong done by the gentleman who presides with such dignity and ability over the Treasury Department?"

Mr. Hill (Rep., Conn.,) declared that the resolution for an investigation was pure buncombe and intended for political purposes, just as a similar resolution directed against the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury in the last Administration was.

"I asked the gentleman from Illinois," (Hopkins,) again interposed Mr. Richardson, "why the $50,000 had been held back. He did not answer it. I now propound the same interrogatory to you."

Mr. Hill replied that the law under which the property was sold compelled the payment of only $750,000 cash, the remainder from time to time.

The Secretary was compelled to receive any cash payment in excess of $750,000. He couldn't help himself. The gentleman from Tennessee (Richardson) made the specific charge that it was done for the purpose of defrauding the City of New York of taxes.

"It now becomes him," said Mr. Hill, indignantly, "to charge the Secretary of the Treasury with fraudulent intent. Furthermore, if he had gone deeper into the investigation, he would have ascertained that the city could not lose the taxes upon the property."

He proceeded to explain the tax laws of New York relative to National banks.

"Therefore," said he, in conclusion, "the disreputable charge that the Secretary of the Treasury did anything with fraudulent intent falls to the ground." [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Richardson replied in a two-minute speech. Neither Mr. Hopkins nor Mr. Hill, he said, had made any answer to his question as to why the Secretary of the Treasury had not taken a paper credit for $3,265,000 instead of $3,215,000. He insisted that failure to answer left open the question as to taxation. He also questioned the right of the National City Bank, with a capital of $7,000,000, to buy real estate to the amount of half its capital.

In closing the debate, Mr. Dalzell (Rep., Penn.,) said the entire question of referring the whole subject to the Ways and Means Committee had been used to renew charges that had been answered over and over again by none better than by prominent Democrats in the House and country.

"Who are they?" cried several Democrats.

Mr. Dalzell paid no heed to these cries. So far as the right of the bank to purchase the property was concerned, Mr. Dalzell said, its purchase had been authorized by the act that authorized the sale. The resolution was then adopted without division.

TILLMAN ON THE PHILIPPINES.

South Carolina Senator Mingles the Question with That of Negro Domination.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—In accordance with previous announcement, Mr. Tillman (Dem., S. C.,) delivered an address upon the Philippine question to-day in the Senate. He dealt particularly with the resolutions offered by himself and other resolutions before the Senate.

Mr. Tillman said he had been waiting an hour to begin his speech. Mr. Chandler remarked in this connection that the Senate was anxious that Mr. Tillman should begin, "for the sooner he begins, the sooner he will get through." [Laughter.]

"If the Senator (Chandler) will keep his seat," replied Mr. Tillman, "he will laugh on the other side of his mouth before I get through."

Mr. Tillman, referring to the speech delivered by Mr. Beveridge, in which he charged that American opposition to the war in the Philippines was the chief factor in prolonging it, said:

"If Senators on this floor and patriotic Americans throughout the country—thousands of them belonging to the party which elected Mr. McKinley President—have felt it their duty to protest against the inhuman and dishonorable conduct of our Government, if they have believed that the Stars and Stripes were being disgraced, and that the United States was waging a war of conquest upon a liberty-loving people, I ask that Senator, in God's name, would he have us remain silent? Must we be accused of disloyalty to the flag because we declare our belief that in prosecuting this war the Administration is disloyal to the Declaration of Independence?

"I impugn no man's motives, but whether the President be most to blame, or whether the crime rests on his dupes and subservient party dependents, I say with all the emphasis of my nature that I and none of those who voted against the treaty are responsible for the spilling of one drop of this innocent blood that has been shed, and I will not endure patiently and without resentment any such accusation."

Referring to the speech of Senator Beveridge, in which the Indiana Senator had said that the Filipinos were not capable of self-government, Mr. Tillman said:

"If, although the Filipinos are illy armed and without artillery, it has required 60,000 American troops over a year to drive them from the field, and even yet they have not surrendered, are not fit for self-government under our kindly tutelage, let me ask the Republicans here how dared they give the control of the Southern States into the hands of negroes as being fit not only to govern themselves, but also to govern white men?

"Did this Nation," he asked, "offer up of its best and bravest upon the altar of liberty the blood of 700,000 men and spend and destroy $5,000,000,000 of treasure that we might have a government of the people, by the people, for the people, to find that in the brief span of one man's life the sacrifice was vain, the civil war a mistake, and that the colored race has no rights we are bound to respect at home or abroad?"

Adverting to Mr. Beveridge's quotations from the Bible, Mr. Tillman said: "I have heard that the devil can quote Scripture for his own purposes. Why, I can quote Scripture myself. [Laughter.] Verily, verily, I say unto you, Senator from Indiana," pointing his finger dramatically at Mr. Beveridge, who sat within a few feet of him, "you cannot gather figs from thorns nor grapes from thistles."

SENATOR MASON IS ANGRY

Resents Utterances of British Consul at New Orleans.

CALLS HIM A "CHEAP MAN"

Senator Lodge Compares the Incident to the De Lome Letter and Favors Action in the Matter.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—Mr. Mason, (Rep., Ill.,) at the conclusion of routine morning business, rose to a question of personal privilege. He had read a newspaper clipping of an interview with the British Consul at New Orleans. In the course of the interview, the Consul was quoted as saying that the British public was disgusted with the position taken by the American people and some of the Senators in Congress on the subject of the British-Transvaal war. That position was assumed, the Consul was quoted as saying, simply because the American people were mercenary. To-day they were favorable to the Boers because they had achieved a little success; to-morrow they would be just as favorable to the British when they had achieved victory. The Consul considered as particularly bombastic the utterances of certain Senators of the United States, and declared, according to the interview, that when Senator Mason adopted the rôle of a mountebank and encouraged the "half-civilized" people, he did so simply for "show and for votes."

Mr. Mason said the Consul's utterance was scarcely worth attention, except that he was one of the accredited representatives of a great nation to this country.

"It is not the first time," declared Mr. Mason, "that a British diplomat has attempted to run this country. So far as his personal attacks upon me are concerned, I have no concern. They do me honor. The more venomous attacks by the British upon me and those who think like me; the more we are made the subjects of British stupidity and animinity, the sooner will all the American people get on the right side of the controversy.

"Cheap men who come to this country in diplomatic or Consular capacity and misquote the utterances of Senators only accentuate the arrogance and cowardice of those people."

Further along Mr. Mason said that, according to the best information obtainable, the people of Scotland, those of Ireland, and 95 per cent. of the people of America were in sympathy with the Boers in their contest with Great Britain.

"I want to say," said Mr. Mason, "I ask for no special defense from the State Department in this matter, for with the help of God, I'll try to take care of myself.

"There is one thing that I should like to inquire about. What has become of the arbitration treaty that was submitted to this Senate? I am told that the United States Government cannot mediate in this war until that treaty has been ratified. If that is so, I want that treaty discovered and ratified so that that barrier against mediation shall be removed."

Mr. Mason then adverted to the resolution of sympathy with the Boers which he had offered early in the session. He urged the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which the resolution had been referred, to make a report upon it, in order that a vote might be had upon it. If it was not fair, he urged the committee to make it fair, but he did not want to believe that it was buried in the committee, as the London newspapers had announced the morning after its introduction.

"Don't take that child to the graveyard," urged Mr. Mason. "For I give you notice now that there will be a resurrection of it every day after this week. You'll have a chance to think about it at least once every day unless you go to the cloakrooms while I discuss it."

Mr. Hoar (Rep., Mass.,) regarded the utterance of the British Consul as very serious, "an attack, in fact, upon the character of a United States Senator, and upon the American people."

It seemed to him that, inasmuch as the matter had been brought officially to the attention of the Senate, it ought to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, so that that committee might bring it to the attention of the President. He thought it might be a proper ground for the revocation of the British Consul's exequatur, and perhaps it might properly be made a subject of representations to the Government of Great Britain.

Mr. Hoar then moved that the matter be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Continuing, Mr. Hoar expressed his regret that Mr. Mason had made his impassioned attack upon a friendly nation. It was quite natural that Mr. Mason's kindly sympathies should be strongly stirred, he said, by the brave Boers struggling against a great empire, but the Senate was a part of the diplomatic power of this Government, and if such utterances were made here, he doubted the efficacy of any offers of mediation that might be made by the United States.

"It does seem to me," said Mr. Hoar, "to be a logical position to assume. I have hoped that the time would come when either mediation between Great Britain and the Transvaal should be offered by the Government, or that the position of the American people would be made so clear as to bring about peace. I suppose the attitude of the people of the United States for those of Great Britain is one almost of attachment and love."

Mr. Hoar said that if Great Britain were wrong in the present contest, she was regarded by patriotic people precisely as they would regard their own Government if they were wrong. He did not believe, he said, in the doctrine: "My country, right or wrong," and did not think the people believed in it.

In a brief speech, Mr. Lodge said that about three years ago the Spanish Minister resident in Washington had made an attack on Senators.

"I regarded that attack," said Mr Lodge, "as highly improper, and I called the attention of the Senate to it.

"Spain was then engaged in pressing the life out of Cuba, but that was not the reason I spoke. I thought the attention of the Senate ought to be called to the subject, because I did not believe the diplomatic or Consular officials had a right to attack Senators in such a manner. I have not changed my opinion. This is a matter of which we ought to take cognizance. It is no better coming from a British Consul than from a Spanish Minister."

Mr Mason replied briefly, but so vehemently to the points made by Mr. Hoar that Mr. Platt (Rep., Conn.,) said: "I do not want to let this occasion pass without entering my protest against the abuse of free speech in the United States Senate."

The matter was then referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MR. MASON'S ENGLISH CRITIC.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 29.—Arthur G. Van Sittart, the British Consul, at this city, whom Senator Mason is desirous of making the subject of a Senate investigation because of his utterances against the American people in general and Senator Mason in particular, is a familiar figure in New Orleans.

He has been Consul here during the past two years, and, it is asserted, is not as popular with many citizens as he might be. His anti-American utterances are not shared, as a rule, by the members of the English colony here, and many of them have openly expressed their disapproval of the course the Consul has pursued.

Not infrequently Mr. Van Sittart has, on street corners and in hotel lobbies, given vent to his views concerning the pro-Boer attitude of some of the American people, and never hesitated to say just what he thought. Senator Mason is his favorite theme.

OPPOSED TO CIVIL PENSIONS.

House Takes Action that Will Kill the Idea, It Is Believed.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The bill for the reorganization and improvement of the Weather Bureau, which includes provision for pensioning disabled and aged employes of the service, received a black eye in the House to-day. The bill was bitterly fought by the opponents of civil pension rolls on account of the life-tenure provision it contained, and it was side-tracked on a test vote by 57 to 73.

Although the Speaker ruled that it remained unfinished business when the House was again in Committee of the Whole, the opponents of the measure believe the action to-day kills it.

SENATOR SCOTT LIKELY TO WIN.

Indications Are that He Will Retain His Seat.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The protest against Senator Scott of West Virginia occupying his seat in the Senate will probably be decided soon by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections in favor of Senator Scott. The committee decided to-day not to take any more testimony in the case because of its opposition to going behind the action of the State Legislature.

Discussion of the general subject to-day indicated not only an early decision, but a decision favorable to Senator Scott.

SENATE ELECTS NEW SECRETARY.

Agreement that Reorganization Will Take Place Feb. 1.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The Senate to-day adopted an order presented by Mr. Allison, (Rep., Iowa,) deciding to proceed to the election of a Secretary and Sergeant at Arms of the Senate.

This was the second step in the reorganization of the Senate, which has been pending for several weeks. Mr. Allison then, in succession, presented resolutions, first, that Charles G. Bennett of New York be elected Secretary of the Senate, and, second, that Daniel M. Ransdell of Indiana be elected Sergeant at Arms.

After an agreement was reached that the officers would not take their places until Feb. 1, the resolutions were adopted without division.

CLARK CASE STILL DRAGS ON.

Witnesses Testify on a Number of Minor Points.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day heard a number of witnesses on minor points involved in the charges against Senator Clark of Montana. The protestants took occasion during the day to withdraw all intimations against J. K. Toole, who withdrew from the Montana contest for United States Senator under circumstances which the protestants at first were inclined to consider suspiciously favorable to Mr. Clark.

The prosecution also declined during the day to put two witnesses on the stand who had been summoned at their instance, because the men had talked unsatisfactorily since their arrival in Washington.

THIRD AVENUE RAILROAD.

Persons Interested in Metropolitan in the Debt Syndicate—Bonus Note Issues.

A number of diverse reports were published in Wall Street yesterday relative to the taking of the Third Avenue Railroad Company's floating debt of $17,000,000. One of these was to the effect that Metropolitan interests were coming in to the Third Avenue on the basis of an exchange of one share of the former corporation's stock for two shares of that of the latter. This was emphatically discredited both by Edward Lauterbach, counsel for the Third Avenue, and by a representative of the Metropolitan.

A member of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. admitted that some persons interested in the Metropolitan were also interested in the syndicate to take up the Third Avenue debt, but only in their capacity as private individuals. He denied that the syndicate was interested in bearing the stock. "On the contrary," said he, "it is to our interests to see it rise in market value."

A prominent Director of the Third Avenue surface line made this official statement in regard to the arrangements with the syndicate: "We are to get from the syndicate money to pay the floating debt and additional money to effect needed improvements. It will all be paid for by the issuance of three-year interest-bearing notes of the company. The notes are issued, in return for the money we want over and above the equivalent of the floating debt, in other words, in return for money which may be needed for improvements, will carry with them a bonus in the option of subscribing at par to an equal amount of the new treasury stock of the company when it shall be issued. The notes, on the other hand, simply issued to pay off the floating debt, will not carry with them such an investment privilege."

"Is the interest on these three-year notes of the company as high as 6 per cent.?" this Director was asked.

"Oh, I don't know," said he. "That is a matter still under discussion."

The experts are still hard at work on the company's books, which are said to be in rather a complicated condition.

LOCAL GAS SITUATION.

Dissatisfied Consolidated Stockholders Turn to Mr. Lamb.

George E. Lamb, who has been preparing papers on behalf of some Consolidated Gas Company stockholders with a view to setting aside the election at the company's last annual meeting, said last night that he expected to serve the papers to-day and take his case into court five days afterward.

Mr. Lamb represents a much larger interest than was at first supposed. He held proxies for 8,000 shares at the meeting and has been getting more proxies through the mails ever since. He got proxies from three additional stockholders yesterday. Besides this interest there is that of persons who were present at the meeting with him, which he says is still larger. So that it is estimated that he must represent in one way or another not much short of 20,000 shares.

The protective committee of the Standard Gas Light Company, which now controls more than a majority of the stock of that corporation, met in the office of President Carter of the Bank of the Republic yesterday. They did not transact business of a radical nature at this meeting. They feel confident of the outlook at present.

Mr. Tappen's Birthday Anniversary.

Frederick D. Tappen, President of the Gallatin National Bank, celebrated his seventy-first birthday anniversary yesterday and received the congratulations of his numerous friends in the banking district. Mr. Tappen enjoys the distinction of being the dean of New York's bank Presidents.

Gould had contributed $5,000 toward the five-hundred-thousand-dollar fund now being raised for the establishment of Berea College, in Kentucky.

Coal Trust Opponents' Road.

OVERDUE STEAMERS GET IN.

Nothing Heard, However, from the State of Nebraska and Ethiopia.

The heavy gales and rough seas that have prevailed during the last few days have delayed even the fastest liners, and as for the slow-going steamers, they are all several days late. The steamer which is the longest overdue is the State of Nebraska of the Allan State Line, which left Glasgow on Jan. 11, and for which relatives and friends of passengers on board have been anxiously looking for nearly a week. Nothing has yet been heard of her since she sailed from port, but at the office of the company it was said no apprehensions whatever were felt about her, as she is a slow boat.

Another liner that is overdue is the Ethiopia of the Anchor Line. She left Glasgow on Jan. 12 and was due in New York on Jan. 22. She has eighty passengers on board. Friends of theirs made inquiries about the boat at the office of Henderson Brothers, the agents, in person, by telephone, and by telegraph during the day, and they were all told that the company had no fears whatever for her safety.

The French liner La Normandie, which arrived last evening, over twenty-four hours late, had to force her way through variable gales and heavy head seas. She left Havre on the 20th, and when out two days ran into a northwestern

THE BRITISH FAILURE.

Nothing could be more complete and sweeping than the admission by The London Times of the total failure of the British campaign against the Boers. Such an admission from that source is especially significant. Its significance proceeds not only from the peculiar position of The Times, which, in spite of all its mistakes, has managed to hold a more representative position than that of any other British newspaper. It proceeds from the fact that The Times is more responsible than any other British newspaper for the position in which the British Empire finds itself, a position far more humiliating than it has occupied before within the memory of man. Throughout all this South African imbroglio the voice of The Times has been still for war. Of wiles more inexpert it knew not. It has been so very much in favor of crushing the Boers that it has converted itself, according to the accusation of other British journals, into the personal organ of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, than whom no other British politician can be more offensive, in a general way, to the constituency for which The Times normally speaks, and its spokesmanship of which constitutes its unique authority.

When The Times owns that the British campaign has completely and decisively failed, the confession may safely be accepted. When The Times refers to the impendency of a catastrophe "without a parallel except in the surrender at Yorktown," it evidently means the surrender of Ladysmith. And all the news indicates that Ladysmith is to be abandoned to its fate. Indeed, it must be. The efforts to relieve it have distorted and spoiled the British plan of campaign. And they have decisively failed. The original plan of campaign was apparently to take the routes from Port Elizabeth and East London, which lead northward, to and through the Orange Free State, to the South African Republic. It was deviated from by the assumed necessity of repelling the invasion of Natal and afterward by the sentimental and patriotic necessity of relieving the garrisons of Kimberley, a hundred miles to the westward of the direct line of invasion, and of Ladysmith, two hundred miles to the eastward. On neither flank have the British operations come to anything. Ladysmith seems to be given up for lost. If Kimberley is not as frankly abandoned, that is probably only because it has been "relegated to the second plane" in public interest by the operations on the Tugela. The loss of either place would be most disastrous. The loss of both would be a blow from which British prestige would not recover in our time.

Doubtless there are important military lessons to be learned from the lost campaign, whether or not they will be learned in time to do the British any good. It is doubtless true, as Continental critics assert, that British tactics are antiquated, and that when employed against an enemy armed with modern weapons, and skilled in their use, they are even murderous. The "individual initiative" which the foreign critics admired in our own regulars at Santiago is of increasing importance with the improvement in the range of rifles, and with the open order which that improvement has compelled everywhere but in England. But quite as important a moral is the advantage of the defensive in modern warfare. This is not shown by the Boers alone. The garrisons of Kimberley and Ladysmith have illustrated it as well as the obstinate resistance of the Boers along the banks of the Tugela. Doubtless the Boers are not as well drilled for offensive work as the British. And they are so inferior in numbers that their Generals can run no risks, and must husband their human resources much more carefully. At the same time, when offensive action is clearly necessary, the Boers show to as good advantage as their enemies. The recapture of Spion Kop was as gallant a feat of arms as its capture. Doubtless the general conclusion from the campaign is that the Boers are more modern fighters than the British, and that it is to this they owe their success. It is to be expected that this lesson will be learned and laid to heart in England and applied, even to the revolution in the aristocratic composition of the British Army, for which Great Britain has already paid so dearly and for which she is likely to pay more dearly still.

Nor is it to be expected that there will not be important political as well as military lessons to be drawn from this tragical and costly campaign. The scapegoats thus far selected by the Opposition press seem to be very ill-selected. Poor Lord LANSDOWNE, poor Sir MICHAEL HICKS-BEACH, poor Lord WOLSELEY—it would be an undiscriminating whale that would accept any one of these, or all three, as a satisfactory and eligible Jonah. It seems that there is as yet no dissent from the proposition that the war shall be pushed to a successful conclusion. It is likely that feeling will continue to prevail unless some of the foreign complications which the present predicament of England absolutely invites should call public attention to something of more national urgency even than the subjugation or extirpation of half a million pastoral and backward people in South Africa. But at the same time it is human nature that there should be a much larger number of Englishmen asking themselves whether the war was really necessary, in the light of the defeats of the British Army and the definitive loss of the first campaign, than were asking themselves that question six months ago, when no Englishman doubted that the result of making war would be a triumphal march from the sea to Pretoria. As soon as Englishmen begin a searching of hearts upon that subject, such solemn warnings as those of FREDERIC HARRISON and JOHN MORLEY will take on a new and deeper significance in the light of the event. Such Englishmen will be moved to conclude that the man who is chiefly responsible for such a national humiliation as no living Englishman can recall is the man who conducted what he called "the negotiations," and what Mr. HARRISON called "the efforts to goad the Boers into dogged resistance." The Minister for the Colonies is the man who forced on the war, in the confidence that it would be short, easy, and triumphant. He is the appropriate victim, now that it has turned out to be of undeterminable length, difficult enough to tax the resources of the empire, even without complications which may not be escaped, and has thus far brought to England nothing but defeat and shame.

SCHOOL REFORMS.

The school bills which come up this afternoon before the Cities Committees of the Senate and Assembly deserve serious consideration.

The Ford bill provides that the amount appropriated for salaries for the teachers and supervising force of the schools shall not be less than an amount equivalent to four mills on every dollar of assessed valuation of city property, and that the amount of money to be appropriated in any year to each borough shall be fixed by law at a minimum of $600 per teacher, and not be left, as at present, largely to the discretion of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

The effect of this bill will be to make the Department of Education less dependent on the Board of Estimate by fixing the gross amount of the salary fund, and by insuring for each teacher in the system a bare living at least. Such provisions mark progress in the management of the schools and should be quickly adopted by the Legislature.

The Esberg bill provides for greater power in the Board of Education and less in the Borough Boards. The present system is impossible. Whether its want of success comes from the incompetency of the school officials who administer the law, or from the inefficiency of the machinery itself, it is difficult to say with confidence. But no one doubts that the work of the schools is seriously hampered by the system, and few doubt that the entire system should be changed. Senator FORD and Senator ELSBERG deserve commendation for the work they are doing in this field.

Senator MARSHALL'S bill is a step distinctly backward. It seeks to return to the old system of separate boards in vogue before the consolidation, and to give to the Board of Estimate too intimate authority over school matters. New York is one city now, and it is a mistaken policy to maintain lines of division in providing for the performance of municipal functions in which all parts have a common, not a separate, interest.

BRYAN AND THE POPULISTS.

The Populists need not have the slightest fear that BRYAN will desert them. He is flesh of their flesh and can no more shake off their wild principles than he can reason rightly or talk little or do any other thing that nature has made impossible for him.

If he could he would not. The Populists are the only convinced and trustworthy supporters of Bryanite ideas. No Democrat attached to the principles of Jeffersonian Democracy can be a very firm or enthusiastic advocate of the doctrines of BRYAN. The party organization was seized upon in 1896 by men who professed to be Democrats, but were Populists by belief and association. They have kept their grip on it ever since, and they control it to-day. They also control BRYAN, and they will neither permit any other candidate to be nominated by the Democratic convention, nor will they permit BRYAN to discard or subordinate any of the cardinal principles of Populism.

Those Populists, therefore, who have lately expressed some concern lest BRYAN might be persuaded to make a bid for Eastern votes by dissembling or dropping some of the more dangerous doctrines of their party are evidently not in the confidence of the chief men of the tribe. Nor is it in any way material whether the Populists nominate him first and leave the Democrats the privilege of "indorsing" a candidate already in the field, or take him from the Democrats and "indorse" him at their convention. Some of them have been discussing this question with an appearance of anxiety, as though it were important. The Democracy in its present degraded estate is too near Populism and too deficient in self-respect to be at all particular whether it gets its candidate by original nomination or at second hand.

In 1896, 245,000 votes were cast for BRYAN and WATSON. This represents the middle-of-the-road, extreme, and unconditional Populists who would not make the concession to respectability involved in voting for SEWALL of Maine for Vice President. BRYAN would of course lose all these votes if he should waver in his devotion to the doctrines of the Omaha and Chicago platforms. But the vast majority of the voters of Populist inclinations must have cast their votes for the regular Chicago ticket, BRYAN and SEWALL. Those unnumbered multitudes in all the States where crazy delusions flourish would also drop BRYAN if he should weaken or seem to weaken in his loyalty to the cause they serve. Add to these the really convinced believers in 16 to 1, and there appears a total of so many hundred thousand voters that BRYAN'S candidacy and his hopes would be instantly blasted should these men withdraw from him and put up a true-blue Populist and fiat-money ticket.

It is preposterous, therefore, for Mr. BOURKE COCKRAN and other perplexed gentlemen casting about for political standing and recognition to argue that anti-imperialism or any other new issue can be forced to the front in the Bryan campaign, leaving free silver and Socialism out of sight and out of the thoughts of the people in the far background. As the Democratic candidate for the Presidency this year, W. J. BRYAN will profess and preach Populist doctrines as the foundation principles of his candidacy. He will talk anti-imperialism more or less in order to give renegade sound-money Democrats some decent pretext for supporting him. But that, like the anti-trust issue, will stand only in the relation of an outer adornment to the deep structural articles of faith that constitute the essentials of Bryanism.

INJUSTICE IN NAVY RETIREMENT.

There are in Washington a number of old men, (if men from sixty-three years of age up into the seventies may be called "old,") all of them officers of the navy, who have had forty and more years of honorable service, and every one of whom had served throughout the civil war "creditably," and who, because they were retired before March 3, 1899, when the Navy Personnel act went into operation, find themselves, one and all, invidiously discriminated against in favor of their former juniors and successors who did not happen to retire until after March 3, 1899.

The evils of hasty legislation in the closing hours of a session of Congress, when conference committees are the expedients by which bills are rushed through and amended by incongruous provisions without due consideration, were notable in the instance of this Navy Personnel bill. It aimed to harmonize conflicting interests and benefit the whole navy. It has been the unintentional means of grievously wronging every officer of the civil war, however eminent and honorable his record, who had the misfortune to become sixty-two years of age prior to March 3, 1899.

This anomalous condition has resulted from a provision in the bill that officers hereafter retired who creditably served in the civil war shall have the rank and pay of the next higher grade; a disconnected provision, appended in conference to another section, preventing the increase of pay of any officer already retired. While the manifest intent of this legislation was to reward the comparatively few civil war officers who still remained on the active list, it was overlooked that in elevating them to the next higher grade, (Rear Admiral,) the practical effect was to put them in rank and pay above their former seniors, who had served throughout the civil war and who were thus indirectly but actually degraded—passed over by recordless men who but entered the navy in the last days of the civil war.

When the attention of members of the naval committees was called to this unfortunate consequence of their legislation they frankly declared that they had never thought of this and certainly never intended to abase veterans like FRANKLIN, LUCE, BENHAM, GEORGE BROWN, WALKER, RAMSAY, EBBEN, and their worthy comrades of the staff, and that they would be prompt to rectify the wrong. It is to be hoped that Congress will speedily undo its inconsiderate and hasty work of March 3, 1899.

"UNBALANCED BIDS."

"Unbalanced bids" are familiar enough to contractors and to those having to deal with public works, but the term may not be understood by many readers who have noted the importance given to the remedy for this mischievous practice in the report of the Canal Committee, which has attracted such wide attention.

In a general way these bids may be said to be bids at high prices for items stated as of small amount in a contract and of low prices for items stated to be of large amount, the total being thus brought low enough to secure the job. When the work is actually done, it is found that there is a large amount of the high-priced items and vice versa, and the cost to the State and profit to the contractor are increased in proportion. This may result from the mistake of the engineers in charge of the work, who make the estimates of quantities, or from their connivance. It has been a favorite plan of swindling the public, and the Canal Committee devoted a good deal of time and labor to the study of a remedy.

Let us suppose that there is a job of excavation necessary. The engineers report that 100,000 yards of material will have to be removed and that of this 90,000 will be earth and 10,000 rock. One contractor, with no knowledge beyond this estimate, offers to do the work at 80 cents per yard for the earth and $1.60 for the rock. The total will be $48,000. Another contractor, with special knowledge, and possibly a tip from the engineer, bids 25 cents for the earth and $2 for the rock. His total is $42,500, and being the lowest, he gets the contract at those rates. When the work comes to be done, it is found that there are only 30,000 yards of earth and 70,000 yards of rock. The successful bidder gets for his work at the accepted rates $147,500, while the other would have done the same work at $121,000. The State loses the difference.

The plan proposed by the Canal Committee is one that has long been in use in the public works of France. In place of asking for bids for the total as estimated by the engineers, bids are asked for for the unit of each kind of work without regard to the quantity. In order to give a basis of calculation for bidders, the cost of each unit, under the circumstances of the job, is to be estimated first by the local engineer and then approved by the State Engineer, the Commissioner of Public Works, and the Canal Board. The contractors are then invited to offer a discount or a premium on the prices thus estimated, and the one that offers the greatest discount or the lowest premium secures the contract. The plan has worked admirably in France for a long time, and would doubtless work equally well here. The committee have so much confidence in it that they urge that its adoption be made the condition precedent to the legislation authorising the enterprise that they recommend.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Not infrequently in the past Prof. GOLDWIN SMITH has written about America and the Americans in a way that justified the suspicion of an intention on his part to perpetuate as long as possible every remnant of hostility between the United States and England, and, if he could, to arouse new animosities. In all or most of these attacks upon our motives and our morals, however, those of us who would could take a charitable view of the professor's course, grant him the full license of the foreign critic, and assume that he had innocently misinterpreted rather than willfully misstated the facts as he saw them. Such leniency is not deserved by Prof. SMITH, now that he has chosen to make in a London paper the monstrous statements in regard to the Maine which we republished yesterday. "Few things are more certain," wrote the professor, "than that the Maine was blown up by the ignition of coal in her bunkers." Now, the nature of the fate that overtook the Maine is not a matter of opinion. Every man alive who has examined the wreck in Havana Harbor is absolutely sure that she was sunk by an exterior and not by an interior explosion, while every other man alive has had an opportunity to inform himself on the subject as well as if he had made such an examination. Prof. SMITH either has so informed himself, in which case he has presented as facts what he knows are falsehoods, or he has not so informed himself and speaks of what he knows nothing with an assurance which his voluntary ignorance transmutes into reckless malice. Another sentence in his letter reads: "Nothing is more certain than that the Maine was not blown up by the Spaniards." This, though less important, is also unpardonable. No American of official or other responsibility ever laid the great crime at the doors of "the Spaniards," giving that phrase its ordinary significance, and whatever some of us may suspect in respect to unknown individual Spaniards supplies no basis at all for the Toronto man's insinuation. Englishmen need not worry about the pain they have inflicted by applying the name of our lost battleship to their floating hospital. The word recalls a great sorrow, but connected with it in American minds is no taint of wrongdoing, of false accusation, or of disgrace. That can never again be said of the name Goldwin Smith.

—Certain remarks recently put in print by M. EDOUARD NAVILLE, an eminent Swiss writer on political and economic subjects, should be of some interest to the curious little groups in New York and elsewhere who are just now laboring with such pathetic industry to convince themselves and others that the cause of the Boers is the same as that which inspired the patriotic devotion of the founders of our own Nation. M. NAVILLE begins by admitting that in a contest between a great monarchy and two small republics, the sympathy of Switzerland would concentrate by instinct on the weaker side, but he hastens to add that the wisdom of doing this depends on whether or not the Boers are the exponents of a righteous policy. Study of their history convinces him that they are not. The fight of the Transvaal, he says, "is not for the sake of its autonomy, which England would willingly respect; it is not for the sake of freedom—a thing alien to its institutions, and yet more so to its Government; it is for neither of these principles that the Transvaal rushes into a war which must ruin her. It is that she may retain a despotic ascendency over the Uitlanders and the pecuniary advantages attached to it. In a word, it is mainly a question of money. We cannot, therefore, concede that the Transvaal is on a par with our own forefathers or with the Montenegrins." This statement of the case cannot be expected to have any weight with those whose love of the Boers is merely an allotrope of hatred for England, but its truth and force will be recognized by everybody else, and with especial ease by those familiar enough with history to know that nations are not always to be judged by the names they give to their rulers, and that democratic principles may flourish in an empire and wither in a republic, according to the character of the people living in each.

—There is good reason for doubting the efficacy of such attacks on "Christian Science" as that which the Rev. Dr. W. S. CROWE made from the pulpit of the Church of the Eternal Hope on Sunday. Calm philosophical arguments are well enough in their way, but of what possible use is it to point out the logical absurdities of a system the followers of which long ago left logic far behind and are proud of the abandonment? The people ready to admit Dr. CROWE'S premises and competent to judge the legitimacy of his conclusions are little likely to be misled by the preposterous claims of the Eddy woman and her book agents. What they need is to have their attention called again and again to the fact that every community in which this delusion gains a foothold is seriously endangered in life and property. Each exponent of faith healing is always a potential, and often an actual, centre of infection, not only to believers in the wretched cult, but to all whom they meet in business or society or even pass on the street. This is far from generally realized at present, and to make it so is vastly more practical work than is the expression of gentle regret that the so-called scientists should drown their spoonful of truth in oceans of falsehood.

—So the Government, through the Post Office Department, has decided to make an elaborate campaign against the dealers in "green goods." Well, they are a bad lot, beyond question, and, whatever happens to them, will get no more than they deserve, but somehow one cannot help wondering if it is worth while to single out for special assault rascals who prey only upon other rascals, when there are so many rascals whose chosen and almost invariable victims are honest men. No respectable citizen ever was or ever will be deprived of a penny by members of the "green goods" fraternity, and if the latter are forced into other lines of criminal activity the chances are that they will become more rather than less dangerous to such of us as are not tempted by offers of counterfeit money. It may be that the only way to stop the "green goods" business is to offer immunity to those who try to buy bad money, but it's certainly an expensive remedy, and will put an end to a deplorable but very effective means of inflicting rude justice.

THE OUTLANDERS AND THE WAR

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The extraordinary display of force by the two Boer republics is the more astounding when we consider their resources in men. The white population, according to The Statesman's Year Book of the South African Republic in 1884, was 50,000, of which 40,000 are stated as of Dutch descent. In 1887 the relative figures are 60,000 and 45,000. The Orange Free State in 1880 numbered 61,022, and in 1890, 77,716. Up to 1887 immigration had played no mentionable part in the population of the Transvaal. The increase had been mainly in the natural way in both republics. In the ten years from 1880 to 1890 it amounted to 27.30 per cent., or 2.73 per cent. per annum, while in the Orange Free State this ratio represents the general increase pretty nearly up to a recent date. In the South African Republic it has become of vastly greater proportions. But we cannot accept a larger ratio from births for the Transvaal than what is established for the Orange Free State, as the people of both lead the same kind of life, i. e., an agricultural-pastoral one. It is a population thinly spread over an immense territory. Accepting, then, 2.73 per cent. as the rate of increase of the native white population for both republics from the dates stated, we have by 1899 the figure of 96,756 for the Orange Free State and of 79,770 for the Transvaal Republic, a total of 176,466. This is the extreme figure of what could be called "Boer" in the most liberal construction of the term. The number comprises men, women, and children. If every male from the age of twenty to forty-five were in the field the whole number could be no more than 34,410. It would comprise the weak and the cripple. I arrive at this figure by taking the United States census of 1890 as a guide, where the proportion of these age classes to the total population is as sixteen to sixty-two, or 19½ per cent. It is scarcely possible that the entire strength of native Boers can be drawn, or, if collected, for emergency, kept permanently in the field. That more than 25,000 men can be placed at any one time out of a population of this number is more than conjectural.

But there is another problem to solve, the problem growing out of the extra population of the Transvaal. This population takes its beginning in 1887, the time of the rise of the gold fever. An incomplete census taken in 1896 places the entire white population at 245,397, of which there were 137,947 men and 107,450 women. The State Almanac for 1898 gives the white population as 345,397. On the same basis, however, this larger number would represent 194,000 males. The entire male population of Boers in this number would be 40,000, and leave 154,000 males of all ages as of origin other than Boer. This part, deriving its origin from immigration since 1887, consists in the main of men in the prime of life. We have been told that England was forced into an attitude of hostility on this war by the oppression exercised by the Boers on the Outlanders. If this be true, then the feat is performed by the Boers of not alone successfully opposing a British force four times their number, but of holding in check an oppressed population of the proportion of five able-bodied men to one of their own. Or is this story of oppression a myth? The fact that the Outlander does not rise to the situation and assist his would-be deliverers is strong confirmation of the assertion from authoritative sources that his position in the east has been a satisfactory one. If the Boers had in their ranks anything near the 100,000 men they are credited with, the difference would have to come for the greater part from the Outlanders. The disparity between 30,000 and 100,000 could not possibly be filled to any appreciable extent by Dutch sympathizers from Natal or Cape Colony. British surveillance would be an impediment if no other existed.

But leaving this question open, the fact that there is no effort on the part of the Outlanders to assist their British deliverers in itself supplies sufficient cause for reflection to the sober mind of Great Britain. The above statement of the numerical differences in the two sets of population shows that a few years of statesmanlike waiting would have given England's colonial policy undisputed sway. That the Chamberlains and the Rhodeses have bungled the matter is no reason why England should persist in a course that, even victory gained, will have exhausted her to a point at which her enemies wish to see her. Whatever her errors, she stands as an impediment against the robber propensities of other Governments, none of whom is worthy or able to fill her place, and all see their chance in her exhaustion.

"A FAIRLY CONTENTED WOMAN."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Can you give me a little space to say a few words for some women. There are many kinds of us, but from a few articles which you have published lately one could gather the idea that we are all of a sort for which many of us have deep dislike, not to use any stronger expression. The report in this morning's issue of some club members who are indignant and insulted because they were given the chance to expose misdemeanors and annoyances in the place where such exposure might do most good, roused my ire to the speaking-out point. If those ladies had grounds for their complaints, why are they afraid to carry them to the place where they may be rebuked or remedied; and if they did not have just grounds for complaints, why did they do so much talking?

Another thing is the bank question. I have been a depositor in several of our city banks. Never, I regret to have to say, anything but a very, very small one, and I have never received anything but the most reasonable kind of treatment. Of course, I do not expect from a man who sees before him a line of impatient people all in a hurry to be served, the Chesterfieldian courtesy that I would look for from a partner in a cotillion, but I do look to be treated as a lady, and till now have never been disappointed, not even when I indorse my checks on the wrong end, and, as once did occur, mail a check to Boston with an error in the signature. Just at present I carry an account at a bank, probably as small a one as they have, and I feel sure that I will not be contradicted when I say that the treatment received there is uniformly businesslike and polite.

Having read so much of women's complaints of impolite, unjust, and unreasonable treatment, I felt that I must raise up my pen to try to tell that there are some women who are fortunate enough to be in the way when polite, just, and reasonable treatment is being dealt out.

OZONING CAR PASSENGERS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Setting aside all questions as to the rights of car passengers, it is difficult to understand as a business proposition why the conductors are directed to keep open windows in the cars during all kinds of weather. Frozen passengers must succumb to sickness or death, or, escaping that result, at least protect themselves by finding more comfortable means of conveyance.

During the last cold snap the serious though laughable scene was presented of the conductor of a Madison Avenue car repeatedly rushing into the car to open windows which several very respectable looking passengers kept jumping from their seats to close as often as reopened by the conductor, who insisted that his orders were to keep them open and that he intended doing so to the "finish," even if it took all his time, which it then did, to the evident loss of divers uncollected fares to the company and greatly increased danger to passengers entering and stepping from the cars. For a time the scene was riotous.

Yesterday morning the temperature of a Broadway car was reduced considerably below the freezing point by the cold wind which entered through no less than six open attic windows. Several passengers vacated their seats to stand so as to keep moderately warm. The conductor of this car stated to an expostulating passenger that the inspectors along the line reported conductors who failed to keep open windows and explained also that it was left to the conductor's judgment as to how many of them should be opened, and added with an expression of grim humor that he thought "osoning" the passengers would do them good, and that he therefore opened six windows.

Health ordinances require the proper heating of the cars, and it is a painful commentary on those whose duty it is to enforce such regulations that any employes of the companies, whether of high or low degree, should be permitted to evade the law by letting in through open windows a score times more cold wind than sufficient to countervail the decrepit heating appliances.

AGUINALDO'S STATEMENT.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of this date you reprint from The Springfield Republican a statement from Aguinaldo. It hardly seems possible that an intelligent American could read the first article of that statement and not conclude the writer incapacitated for any participation in the government of any people. The article makes Aguinaldo say:

"After a year's fighting I pitched my camp in the wild and unknown range of Biak-na-bato, where, toward the end of May, 1897, I established the Republican Government of the Philippines, and where, on the 14th of December, 1897, I concluded a treaty of peace with Don Pedro Alejandro Paterno on the following terms: Firstly—I was to be free to live abroad with the companions who were willing to follow me, and in Hongkong, which I had decided on as a place of residence, the payment of $800,000 indemnification money was to be made in three installments—$400,000 on receipt of all the arms that were in Biak-na-bato, $200,000 when the number of arms delivered up should amount to 800, and the remaining $200,000 on the total number of the same reaching 1,000."

Did The Springfield Republican stop to analyze this statement before they published it? I think not, or they would not have presented it hoping thereby to strengthen a sentiment for Aguinaldo. Aguinaldo cuts a fine figure in this pose as a patriot. He established his "republican" Government in a "wild and unknown range" as robbers are wont to establish their strongholds, and not among men or where there were people to be protected by legal regulations executed by wholesome-minded officials. His next step was to bargain for $800,000 to abandon his "republican" Government and people to the fate the Spaniards might elect, himself "to be free to live abroad," in other words, accept banishment from his country and people. He gave up his "established republican" Government pretty easily, and showed in the manner of his act that all he cared for his people, or any people, was to betray and abandon them for money. When he ordered his soldiers to fire upon the American troops he probably had in view a like "patriotic" act. Thus we see this brigand dealer in the blood of the fellows of his race posing as a lover of liberty and seeking it for his tribe. Without mentioning the many evidences that the idea of liberty with this treacherous Malay is "obey me or die," there is enough in this first article of Aguinaldo's statement to show the utter insincerity of the man and the utter inability and unfitness of his race to govern themselves.

Yet we behold the senior Senator from Massachusetts including Aguinaldo in the same category as Washington, the would-be President from Nebraska hoping to ride into the White House on a wave of Aguinaldo's patriotism, and hundreds of our public speakers and newspapers teaching our people that this system of Hispano-Malay treachery and bribery is the ideal political virtue, and the sort our forefathers taught, and upon which they founded our great Nation.

AID TO INDIGENT VETERANS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of Jan. 16 you published a communication signed "Veteran of the Civil War" regarding the allowing of posts of the Grand Army of the Republic to distribute public moneys for the relief of their indigent members. Your correspondent refers to veterans outside of Grand Army posts, and I presume he is one of them. The fact of their being outside the posts is largely due to their lack of the necessary qualification for membership therein. The distribution of relief by Grand Army posts is not a charity, but a slight return for the incalculable services rendered by those grand old heroes to the country in the darkest period of its existence, and is only given to those rendered prematurely disabled by the hardships they had to endure. Your correspondent evidently does not understand the method of distributing this relief, for he has overlooked a very important factor in the distribution, viz.: the Woman's Relief Corps, an auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic. No one familiar with honest veterans of the civil war has ever accused them of begging, and it is to a great extent only by the earnest efforts of these noble women that the needs of the disabled veterans (and not only the members of Grand Army posts) are discovered. It is then, after investigation by the Relief Committee, that the funds are paid out, and the report of the Relief Committee is verified by their oaths. The award is far more worthy than many to various institutions in the city for the payment of large salaries to their too numerous officials. VETERANI FILIUS.

THE PALISADES PARK MOVEMENT

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I observe in your issue of Jan. 20 that there is in the Legislature a bill that provides for preserving the Palisades as a park. When such a proposition is before us, one naturally asks how much is such a park a necessity. To answer this completely one must get a little away from the persistent needs of the hour and realize that the people at large do not foresee the requirements of the future, and that when a popular demand comes for more park room it is already too late to acquire such parks except at an enormous expense. It was due to the energy of a few prophetic minds that labored unceasingly and preceded popular demand that we have now our Central Park.

Every citizen in New York is grateful for their farseeing wisdom. A city grows on the side of least resistance, and heretofore the Hudson River has kept in check the growth on the Jersey shore. As communication becomes better and accelerated by a bridge this will cease to be so much of a barrier, and then it will be too late to acquire the Palisades for a park. The fact that much of the Palisades is in New Jersey should not be considered as an obstacle, for its proximity will always keep a park there under the control of New Yorkers and for the benefit of its citizens. In fact, its water accessibility will make it adjacent to every part of New York City as no other park can be.

If the legislators are listening for the popular demand, let me speak for the millions yet unborn who will call them blessed for having the wisdom of foresight in acquiring this piece of ground for a nominal price, which can now be done and which the present bill provides for. We have already one of the grandest parkways in the world in our Riverside. Great as that is, it will be in the second place when Palisade Park is developed, and then New York may lay claim to being one of the most beautiful cities in the world.

Every citizen should be interested in adding this to the health-giving resources of the city.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

From the comments of all the English newspapers without exception it would seem that the British are exceedingly prejudiced in favor of courage. They tell of how the officers, disdaining cover, were killed; how the men charged through an open space in a storm of lead, and how the Boers kept themselves hidden. The substance of their almost unconscious opinion is that it is better to be courageous than intelligent, and that by this rule the Boers should be in honor bound to show themselves so that no matter if they should all be killed and lose the war—the thing is to be too proud to hide, though you may not be too proud to boast or too proud to kill your fellowman.

Now, why, in this age of science, courage should be placed above intelligence does not appear, unless it be that heredity is concerned. It would seem to the sober-minded that, instead of affording opportunities for the Victoria Cross, it would be better to avoid them by practicing good strategy, for strategy consists, after all, in threatening and in playing for position rather than in striking. A maxim might possibly be made to the effect that the more strategy the less blood. It is conceivable that war might be so waged that it would consist of a series of manoeuvres whereby at length, with little loss of life, the defeated acknowledges checkmate.

English pride has kept the nation from studying the Continental war methods, and, as always, they have relied on British pluck, tenacity, and the supposed general superiority of the English over other nations. Pride has made them believe themselves perfect; prejudice against things foreign has so insulated their army that it is now actually antiquated and worthy of the days of George III. Might the same not be partly true of their navy?

So, what between ranking courage above intelligence, acting as though the science of war (unlike other sciences) remains stationary, and believing that tenacity will at length answer their purpose—the outlook for Britain is not bright.

Bulldog tenacity forms part of their creed; if they substituted scientific tenacity in "finding the way round" all might be well, but to keep on and on with the same old methods on the same old beaten track means annihilation. I believe that pride and prejudice in their widest sense are the fundamental deterrents to British success.

The Dewey Arch Site.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is an argument against erecting the permanent Dewey arch on the site of the temporary one which I have not yet seen advanced. This is the probability—it may fairly be considered a certainty—that the skyline above it, on the north side, would be turned immediately to advertising account. At present the huge advertisement extending along the top of the building in Twenty-fifth Street that runs from Broadway to Fifth Avenue is hidden from the view of any one approaching that point via Broadway; but if the arch were to become a fixture, a framework would speedily be erected on the roof of that building sufficiently high to expose this or some other business card above the top of the arch. This, of course, would absolutely destroy the artistic effect of the monument. The owner of the building, for the sake of keeping the arch in his neighborhood, might bind himself and future owners not to allow such an erection; but the value of a guarantee of this sort is not always to be depended on. This seems to me a strong argument against making the present site a permanent one.

The Revival Movement in Brooklyn.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

You have from time to time given much space to the revival movement in Brooklyn. Is it not space and time lost? Is not the whole movement most unfortunate both for the Church and society? Has not the movement been one of confusion, contention, and disagreement from the very beginning? Was it not a mistake to bring Dr. L. G. Broughton here? He uses everything but brotherly love, wisdom, and discretion. He calls our universities and schools of higher learning the dens of demons and, in many instances, demons themselves. He attacks the Unitarian Church instead of attacking the devil. It seems to me that the devil is in the midst of those brethren who have organized; and the sooner they disorganize, go back to their own churches, preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ to the blind, to the poor, to the broken-hearted, to the captives of sin and misery, the better it will be for Brooklyn and the entire community. The Holy Spirit never comes until the people of God are of one accord. We are sure that the ministers of God are not of one accord in Brooklyn. The whole affair is unfortunate. Brethren, disband, send Dr. Broughton home, and let each pastor return to his field of labor, for the harvest is ripe and Satan is gathering it into his garner. Yours for God and His Church.

Not Pastor Emeritus.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I observe that in your paper and other papers I am often spoken of as the "pastor emeritus of the Lafayette Avenue Church." Allow me to say that when I resigned my long and happy pastorate the church kindly offered me the honor of "pastor emeritus." But I declined their generous offer, because I could not consent to receive any annual allowance or "pension," and also because I did not wish to occupy any official position that would interfere in any way with the perfect freedom of my excellent successor. In justice to him and to myself, please to publish this brief note of correction.

Expectoration in Public Places.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read most thankfully "Prisea's" letter in the Sunday TIMES on "the spitting nuisance." I write to ask you if the Board of Health has not the power to enforce a penalty. Why should it be allowed to forbid unless it can enforce? As it is, no attention whatever is paid to the notice in street cars against this dangerous and disgusting habit. The street cars of New York from this very evil are not a fit place for a clean and self-respecting pig to get into, and are a disgrace to our municipality.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL

Theatrical Incidents of a Night Devoid of Novelties.

MRS. LANGTRY SPEAKS A PIECE

A New Variety Farce for Ward and Vokes—Beatrice Herford's Monologues—At the Opera.

The still further postponement of the beginning of Miss Netherside's engagement at Wallack's left last night free from "novelties" in the theatrical field. Yet there were a number of incidents calling for record. Mrs. Langtry's first recitation of "The Absent-Minded Beggar" in khaki at the Garden Theatre, in the circumstances, attracted a large number of first nighters. At the Fourteenth Street Theatre Chauncey Olcott reappeared in his "Romance of Athlone" before a large crowd.

Over at the Grand Opera House they had the only unfamiliar play in town, but "The Floor Walkers," in which those broad caricaturists, Messrs. Ward and Vokes, are the stars, can scarcely be termed a "novelty." It is a knock-a-bout variety farce of the most ordinary pattern. Most of its jokes have done service many years. Few of its songs are new. But it was received with boisterous demonstrations of joy by an audience that packed the big theatre to overflowing.

It is the humor of Messrs. Ward and Vokes to dress like tramps and to call themselves Harold and Percy. They are naturally funny fellows, but they are quite unambitious. They give good measure and they receive capable assistance from agile and graceful Lucy Daly, whose dancing is remarkable; Margaret Vokes, and William West, while their company also includes the Chicago Ladies' Quartet and a troupe of young women who are particularly picturesque and effective in a tuneful "coon" divertissement.

"THE ABSENT-MINDED BEGGAR."

Mrs. Langtry Recites Kipling's Verses Under Very Trying Conditions.

Mrs. Langtry made her attempt to popularize Kipling's verses, "The Absent-Minded Beggar," at the Garden Theatre last evening under circumstances that were very depressing, to say the least. According to the programme the orchestra was to play the music written to the words by Sir Arthur Sullivan, and Mrs. Langtry was then to come on and recite the poem. A lack of rehearsals or dense stupidity on the part of the musicians resulted in a massacre of the music by the fiddlers. It was a performance such as would have been a disgrace to a barn-stormer's orchestra, and so utterly depressing as to throw cold water on all that followed.

Mrs. Langtry made a quick change after the final scene of "The Degenerates" and came to the front to the squeak of a fife and the rattle of drums. She wore a khaki costume with a train of the prevailing street length and a zouave jacket. The latter had a collar of red and brass military buttons. A row of the buttons also extended down the middle of the front breadth of the skirt and was its only trimming. Knotted about her waist was a red military sash. On her head was a huge picture hat of black lace with a rosette of red, white, and blue ribbons, which were supposed to give the American tinge to the costume.

Just how to receive the recitation was a puzzle to the audience. A few started to applaud after the first verse. There was an awkward pause, a hesitation, as if that was a mistake, and then feeble attempt to awaken enthusiasm died away. So Mrs. Langtry went on to the end, and then received some perfunctory applause, while men and women looked wonderingly at one another, as if they did not quite know what it all meant or what it was best for them to do under the circumstances. So they went home, and the first theatrical attempt at "The Absent-Minded Beggar" fell rather flat. Mrs. Langtry is not an elocutionist, whatever else she may be.

"LE NOZZE DI FIGARO" AGAIN.

Mozart's Opera Repeated at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Mozart's delightful comic opera, "Le Nozze di Figaro," was repeated at the Metropolitan Opera House last night. The audience was one of large size, but it was neither as large nor as enthusiastic as it should have been. It seems inevitable that we shall finally have to admit that the operatic public, with its superficial regard for works of art, does not appreciate this really great production of genius. The trouble is that there are no sentimental situations in "Le Nozze di Figaro," and consequently there are no mellifluous love duets, with the glamour of moonlight and the suggestion of rhapsodic passion to come. The opera is without a tenor. The leading men are baritone and bass, and only a second tenor appears in a very subsidiary part.

On the other hand, the book is a clever comedy of intrigue. Indeed, if most of the operagoers only knew that the work was unfit for the "young person," against whom the doors of the theatre should so often be closed, the book would receive the study which is not now given to it. Then operagoers would know what was going on, and they would enjoy the inimitable manner in which Mozart set the diablerie of the whole thing to music. But the average operagoer regards a libretto as a set of syllables for the singers to employ with pretty tunes and as a hint for the cut of dresses. Consequently at a performance of "Le Nozze di Figaro" most of the audience listens to "Voi che sapete," "Dove sono," and the letter duet—possibly also to "Non piu andrai"—and the rest is Greek. When Susanna puts the girl's dress on Cherubino and when that young scapegrace tumbles into the flower bed, there is laughter; for a boy disguised as a girl and awkward in skirts is funny to the eye, while from the invention of the theatre a fall on the stage has been conceded to be a stroke of true humor.

Last night's performance enlisted the services of the same persons as have already appeared in this work, except that Mme. Sembrich was this time the Susanna. Her performance of this part is familiar, and it need only be said at this time that it was never better in voice or comic spirit than it was last night. Mme. Eames as the Countess, M. de Reszke as Almaviva, and Signor Campanari as Figaro repeated their well-known interpretations. The performance seemed to move somewhat slowly at times, yet the ensembles were excellently sung. Signor Mancinelli conducted.

Castle Square Opera Company.

Planquette's opera, "The Chimes of Normandy," was revived last evening by the Castle Square Opera Company at the American Theatre in the presence of an audience justly enthusiastic in its praise of the singing. This week's bill promises to be most successful. Soloists and chorus put forth their best efforts, and the voices of the former were adequate to their respective rôles. The familiar airs were redemanded by the audience. With Miss Eloise Morgan as Germaine, the lost Marchioness; Miss Gertrude Quinlan as Serpoletie, William Pruette as Henri, the Marquis of Corneville; Reginald Roberts as Jean Grenicheaux, all assisted in giving a spirited performance.

At Koster & Bial's.

There were several new features introduced in the programme last evening at Koster & Bial's Music Hall. Miss Mildred Howard de Grey, "the bare-foot girl," appeared in an original act, called "Naughty Anthony Dance," which was a novelty. Adele Purvis-Onri gave a fine exhibition on slackwire and ball. Several portraits were displayed, among them those of Queen Victoria and President Krüger, which were repeated after the applause both invoked. It was apparent that the audience was sharply divided on the South African war question. The six Sennetts in an act entitled "O'Flaherty's Visit to the Zoo" amused as well as amazed the audience by their mimicry and acrobatic feats. Marion Manola appeared both in song and recitation. Her reception was as cordial as ever. Lafayette, "the imitator," also presented a new act. Others who appeared were Ethel Tillson, the sisters McNulty, the Tobins, O'Brien and Havel, King and Cray, Fred Niblo, and Ramza and Arno.

The Fourteenth Street Theatre.

Chauncey Olcott was welcomed back last night by an audience which taxed the capacity of the Fourteenth Street Theatre to its utmost. The star appeared in the leading rôle of Augustus Pitou's drama, "A Romance of Athlone." His engagement opened as auspiciously as his previous appearances in this city. The play gives him full scope for the exercise of his vocal accomplishments and powers as an actor. In the third act, when he visits a gypsy camp, and in disguise tells fortunes, the audience was kept laughing throughout its progress. The dialogue was extremely clever.

Mr. Olcott is supported by a capable company. Olive White as Rose Mannering was all that could be desired. Richard Malchien as the villain of the play did excellent work. Miss Martin made a clever Lady Ponyane. Miss Marscelli was the gypsy girl.

At the Murray Hill.

The Donnelly Stock Company, at the Murray Hill Theatre, presented last night Marguerite Merington's comedy, "Captain Letarblair," as their revival for this week. Produced as it was last night the comedy seems as enjoyable as ever, and certainly affords the patrons of Mr. Donnelly's theatre a genuine pleasure. The portrayal of the title rôle by Ralph Stuart was an excellent bit of work, and Miss Dorothy Donnelly gives a clever characterization of Fanny Hadden. William Redmund's Dean Ambrose was good, and Miss Grace Huntington was in her element as Hyacinth Messiter. The other parts, which were taken by Edwin Nicander, Thomas L. Coleman, Charles Waldron, and Georgia Welles, were all well done. Next week's attraction will be Ludwig Fulda's drama, "The Lost Paradise."

Theatres and Music Halls.

EDEN MUSEE.—The new war views of scenes in South Africa attracted much attention. New comic and mysterious moving pictures were also shown.

HARLEM OPERA HOUSE.—Charles Frohman's comedians in Hennequin and Valabreque's farce, "Make Way for the Ladies," was presented last night, and kept a large audience in laughter with its amusing situations.

PROCTOR'S THEATRE.—The Rossow Midgets entertained their audiences with a boxing burlesque and weight-lifting antics. Montgomery and Stone, the three Merkel sisters, Dempsey, Mitchell and company, Diana, McPhee and Hill, and the Kalatechnoscope made up the balance of the programme.

PROCTOR'S PALACE.—A most satisfactory vaudeville programme was given at the two performances, the star features being the Four Cohans in their sketch, "Running for Office." Others were Yorke and Adams, John E. Carey, Whitney brothers, Ethel Levey, Raymond, West and Sunshine, Lenton Brothers, Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Darrow, and Grace Smythe.

LION PALACE MUSIC HALL.—An attractive programme of high-class vaudeville was presented yesterday. Among the leading features are Herr Von Polin, lightning oil painter; Miss Emma Krause, a soprano soloist; Howard sisters, singers and acrobatic dancers; Klein and Clifton, acrobatic comedy sketch team; Mayo sisters, character change artists, and Sam Holdsworth, tenor soloist.

HURTIG & SEAMON'S MUSIC HALL.—The Dainty Duchess Burlesque Company kept their large audience last evening in excellent humor with their sketch entitled "Manhattan Beach by Moonlight," which has many amusing and clever situations. In the olio were Monroe and Mack, Miss Letta Meredith, Howard and Emerson, McCree and Trayers, the Mimic Four, and Swor and Voe.

DEWEY THEATRE.—The Utopian Burlesquers and the long olio attracted a large audience to this house yesterday. The features in the olio, which included two burlesques entitled "Le Chat Noir," and "Hotel Razzle Dazzle," were Barton and Ashley, the three Gardners, the Sisters Lane, James C. Flynn, Lida Dexter, Clara Adams, and Patrice in a new sketch called "A New Year's Dream."

THEATRE COMIQUE.—The Rose Hill English Folly Company appeared for a week's engagement last night in a sketch entitled "The Jolly Old Sport," which begins the entertainment, which is composed of all sorts of musical, dancing, and acrobatic specialties. Among the company are Berry and Hughes, Joseph J. Sullivan, Miss Carrie Webber, Miles and Raymond, Willard and Raymon, and Swan and Bamford.

KEITH'S UNION SQUARE THEATRE.—Miss Cora Stuart and her company presented "The Fair Equestrienne" with success, and her work throughout the sketch met with approval. The remaining part of the bill included Caron and Herbert, Midgley and Carlisle, George Evans, Grazer and Hazel, Fields and Ward, biograph pictures, Lavender and Tomson, Riley and Hughes, Lynch and Jewell, and Mr. and Mrs. Tom McIntosh.

HUBER'S MUSEUM.—Princess Olga, whose specialty is the taming of snakes and alligators, made her first appearance yesterday. Other novelties in the programme were Monsulla and Russell, aerialists; the Italian Four, Porello's illusions and dissolving views, Young Americus, the strong man, and George Hussey, ventriloquist. In the theatre were J. M. Moore's Southern minstrels and a company of vaudeville artists.

MISS HERFORD'S MONOLOGUES.

Miss Beatrice Herford's entertainment at the Lyceum Theatre yesterday afternoon was attended by a numerous and appreciative audience. Miss Herford writes her own plays, from observation of life, and serves as her own dramatic company. She acts only one part in each of her little comedies, but in such a way as to make the doings and sayings of the other characters easily imagined.

Yesterday's programme included the sketch in which a young mother and her first-born are passengers in a street car, the conversation of female boarders on the piazza of a Summer hotel, the dramatized tribulation of the talkative lady whose husband is confined to the house with a cold, and two or three other pieces.

Her keen sense of humor and extraordinary powers of observation and selection are indicated both in the writing and in the performance of these monologues. Her reproduction of familiar tricks of speech are delightfully apt, while the play of her features is both subtle and graphic. Miss Herford will give another entertainment at the Lyceum Theatre next Monday afternoon, Feb. 5.

MISS LOFTUS IN COMEDY.

To Appear in Shakespearian Plays with Mme. Modjeska.

Since Miss Cissie Loftus defeated Weber & Fields, who attempted to secure an injunction to restrain her from appearing under any other manager, little has been heard of her, except an occasional appearance in vaudeville. It has become known, however, that she will make her appearance in this city during the forthcoming engagement of Mme. Modjeska at the Fifth Avenue Theatre the latter part of next month as a member of the Modjeska company.

It has been announced that Mme. Modjeska will not confine herself to the new play "Marie Antoinette," but will also give some Shakespearean revivals. In "Twelfth Night," which will be put on for a series of matinées, Miss Loftus will make her appearance in the rôle of Viola. During the past month Miss Loftus has been traveling with the Modjeska company, and has availed herself of the opportunity of receiving direct instructions from Mme. Modjeska in the rôle which she is to assume. The engagement of Miss Loftus has been kept a profound secret.

It is also intimated that Miss Loftus will be seen in other revivals of the dramas of Shakespeare.

MISS BATES AND HER STOCKINGS.

Broadway Window Display Leads the Actress to Bring a Suit.

Miss Blanche Bates is the latest actress whose feelings have been outraged, and they have been outraged to such an extent that she is seeking redress in the law courts. Yet the defendants in the suit for an injunction that she has begun probably thought that they were paying her a very nice compliment, for they alluded in all sorts of adulatory terms to the play in which Miss Bates is taking the leading part and spoke of the principal scene in which she appears as having "set all New York talking."

The actress takes the part of a hosiery model, and, in the words of the complaint, the part in question is "carried out by the plaintiff mainly sitting down upon the stage floor in full dress, and taking off a number of fanciful and artistic stockings, short in length, in such manner as not to disclose to the audience," &c.

The trouble is that a Broadway firm of hosiers, Peck & Peck, have arranged a show window which they label "The Stocking Girl's Window." They display a number of stockings in a lifelike manner, and the models show none of the reticence of Miss Bates. A label in the window states that the models show "the exquisite hose used by Miss Bates in the famous stocking scene. * * * The models are made from life."

It is the last line that the actress objects to. As her lawyers said yesterday: "She fears that it may create a false impression." Therefore she has instructed House, Grossman & Vorhaus to move for an injunction restraining the firm from advertising their models as being made "from life," at any rate from suggesting that they are made from Miss Bates's life. Papers were served on the defendants yesterday, and the case will come up for argument in the Supreme Court on Feb. 5.

"BELLE OF NEW YORK" IN COURT.

Application to Restrain Mr. Lederer from Producing It at the Casino.

Decision was reserved by Justice Andrews, in the Supreme Court, yesterday, on a motion by counsel for Gustave Kerker, Hugh Morton, and George B. McLellan, to restrain George W. Lederer, the George W. Lederer Company, and Samuel S. Schubert from producing "The Belle of New York" at the Casino.

Kerker wrote the music and Morton the libretto. They assigned their right in the play to the George W. Lederer Company on the condition that they were to receive a royalty of 5 per cent. on the gross receipts. The plaintiffs claim that the play is being produced at the Casino by George W. Lederer's company, to whom it was never assigned, and that they should receive over $10,000 of back royalties, which became due by the George W. Lederer Company prior to the production of the play in London.

Counsel for Mr. Lederer opposed the granting of an injunction pending the trial of the action. He said that Lederer was the sole owner of "The Belle of New York," and had, before it became a success in London, lost $50,000 on it. As a matter of fact, he said, the plaintiffs owed Lederer $30,000.

W. J. FLORENCE'S WIDOW SUES.

Wants a Divorce from G. H. Coveny, Whom She Married in 1893.

Suit for divorce was begun before Vice Chancellor Pitney, at Jersey City, yesterday by Mrs. George Howard Coveny of Asbury Park, N. J., on the ground of desertion. Mrs. Coveny was the widow of William J. Florence, the comedian.

In her bill Mrs. Coveny says she was married to Coveny in 1893, after an acquaintance of only two months. Shortly after, she says, Coveny began to draw on her for money. She complied with his demands at all times. Three years ago he asked her for $10,000.

She gave it to him, and he then told her that she would never be bothered with him again. He left the house immediately after, and she has never seen him since. He is now in England, and is said to be on the stage. Mrs. Coveny is seventy years old, while her husband is barely fifty years old.

The E. E. Rice Benefit.

The preparations for the benefit for Edward E. Rice to take place at the Metropolitan Opera House, February 15, are going on without a hitch, and the benefit promises to be one of the most notable events of its character held in this city. In addition to the various managers who are on the committee, Messrs. Nat C. Goodwin and William Gillette will represent the actors now playing in this city. "From Broadway to Tokio," "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp," Miss Anna Held, "The Belle of New York," Weber & Fields, and every other organization playing in the city during the week of the benefit will be represented in the bill. The orchestras of the theatres have volunteered, and from them a grand orchestra of over 100 pieces be selected.

Clyde Fitch Seriously Ill.

Clyde Fitch, the playwright, has been taken seriously ill, and may be confined to his home for a long period. During the past week he contracted a severe cold, which settled in his stomach, and at one time during yesterday his temperature was extremely high. At his home last evening it was said that, while he was resting quietly, his condition was unchanged.

CHINESE ARE DISSATISFIED.

Official and Mercantile Circles Disturbed—Russian Papers Say Partition Is Inevitable.

SHANGHAI, Jan. 29.—The deposition of the Emperor Kwang-su creates great dissatisfaction among the Chinese officials in the Yang-tse Valley, and native mercantile circles are disturbed, fearing trouble. It is rumored that the Emperor will be reinstated in one year.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 29.—The newspapers here are paying considerable attention to the events in China. The Novosti expresses the opinion that the dynasty will last for a long time to come, but adds that China will never be restored to her former condition, and that the "unavoidable" work of partition will be accomplished peacefully, though perhaps in the distant future."

The Rossija asserts that it was not necessary for Russia to take a hand in the coup d'etat, and adds:

"A Russo-Japanese alliance is inevitable. It is only a question of time. In the meanwhile, it is important that the control of the naval and military forces of China does not fall into the hands of the Americans, British, or Germans."

The paper concludes: "We must keep on the alert and see how the new situation affects the interests of Western Europe, above all, those of England."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—No confirmation has reached the State Department of the reported death of the Chinese Emperor. Because of the peculiar roundabout way in which the story found circulation, its accuracy is subject to considerable doubt. Moreover, a dispatch was received at the State Department this morning from United States Minister Conger, at Peking, containing no reference to the report. It is regarded as incredible that the Emperor should be dead and lying in state in Peking without Mr. Conger's knowledge. The officials, however, while discrediting this particular story, look upon it as an ill-omen for the future of the Emperor, recalling the fact that such rumors are frequently put afloat in China by way of preparing the public for some coup.

At the Chinese Legation it was said that absolutely nothing official had been received on the reported death of the Emperor, and the Legation has no reason to believe the report true.

Russian Spies in Sweden.

STOCKHOLM, Jan. 29.—The newspapers are becoming persistent in their demands for explanations from the Government respecting the steps it is pursuing regarding the alleged Russian spies who, for several weeks past, are reported to have been seen in different parts of Sweden, especially in the neighborhood of fortified places. The papers declare that if the reports are true the Government must address an unequivocal intimation to Russia that such proceedings must cease. There will probably be an interpellation in the Riksdag on the subject.

Paris Carpenters Gain Their Point.

PARIS, Jan. 29.—The strike of carpenters engaged on the exposition buildings came to an end to-day, in consequence of a decision by the Arbitration Committee, composed of representatives of the employers and the workmen, in favor of the strikers. An increase of 10c. per hour for work on buildings twenty-five metres or more in height was recognized as a just demand, such work being considered dangerous.

A New Jersey Man a Suicide.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The inquest over the remains of Harold Michaels, who, according to letters found upon him, was a clerk employed by the Stone Storage Company of Rocky Hill, N. J., resulted to-day in a verdict of suicide. The deceased had been staying at a hotel in the city since Jan. 3. He shot himself in a saloon Jan. 25.

Wreck on the French Coast.

PARIS, Jan. 29.—Heavy snowstorms prevail throughout France, especially on the north and west coasts, where numbers of small wrecks have occurred. The Spanish steamer Primero, from Bilbao for New York, has been wrecked off Point Lebous, near Brest. Her crew, consisting of eighteen men, was rescued by fishboats.

CASTELLANES LEAVE LAKEWOOD.

The Count and Countess de Castellane came up from Lakewood yesterday morning, where they were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Miller Harris. They went directly to Miss Helen Gould's residence. After luncheon with Miss Gould they went for a drive. Thursday evening the Count and Countess, with other guests of Mr. and Mrs. Harris, will see Mrs. Langtry in "The Degenerates" at the Garden Theatre.

In the near future Miss Mary Paxton, who was with the Countess at Ogontz, will give a luncheon for the Count and Countess at the St. Andrew's. The guests upon this occasion will be former Ogontz girls. It was at first planned to have only women present, but the Countess accepted the invitation only upon the condition that she be allowed to bring the Count.

"You know," she said, "I can't go anywhere without him."

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The weather, which must perforce be mentioned in any daily review of the doings of the New York social world, inasmuch as at this period of the year it has much to do with the present movements and plans of the members of the gay world, promises to repeat its performances of last Winter. Then, as now, January brought a delightful and mild temperature until near its death, when the Winter set in in earnest and there was a succession of cold waves and snowstorms. The disagreeable but warm rain of Sunday night was followed yesterday by bright skies and bracing air in the morning and by bitter cold at late afternoon and night. The heavy fall in temperature made a sudden demand for automobiles for the opera and the Astor ball last evening on the part of people who did not wish to subject their servants and horses to the exposure of the night's cold. The supply of these health-saving and humane vehicles, however, could not meet the demand, and so many coachmen, grooms, and horses suffered that society might enjoy itself.

The event of yesterday was Mrs. Astor's annual ball, to which a number of the guests went from the opera, where "The Marriage of Figaro" was sung, and from several dinners, notably one given by Mrs. Whitelaw Reid. The story of Mrs. Astor's ball will be found in another column. The last of the second series of Mr. Bagby's musical mornings took place at the Astoria, and there were a number of "at homes" in the afternoon. Mrs. Eben Wright (Miss Pell) of 10 West Fifty-third Street gave a dinner at her residence in the evening.

The sewing class of the Lying-In Hospital will meet this morning at Mrs. George Crocker's. Miss Callender and Miss De Forest will give another of their "Tuesday nights with music" at their apartment in the Tiffany Building this evening. Mr. George Coppell will give a large reception to introduce his youngest daughter, Miss Grace Coppell, at his residence, 40 Fifth Avenue, this afternoon, and among the "at homes" of the afternoon will be those of Mrs. Maturin L. Delafield, 475 Fifth Avenue; Mrs. M. Augustus Field, 14 West Thirty-sixth Street, and Mrs. Robert Hoe, 11 East Thirty-sixth Street. Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry and the Misses Gerry will give the second and last of two Tuesday afternoon receptions to-day. The Junior Badminton Club will have its first meeting for the season at the Berkeley School Building on Madison Avenue this evening. This will be one of the most notable dinner evenings of the season and will bring a number of large, formal dinners, some of them so elaborate in appointment and so large in size as to be worthy of the title of banquets. The most important of these dinners will be given by Mrs. William Schermerhorn, Mrs. Buchanan Winthrop, Mrs. George L. Rives, and Mrs. Francis Burrall Hoffman. Mrs. James Brown Lord will give a dinner of twenty covers.

Miss Rose Antoinette Preston and Miss Maude Jackson will give what is called "The Chantant" at Sherry's this afternoon. Miss Jackson will play the piano and Miss Preston will dance. Miss Preston is the daughter of the late Stephen Preston, for many years the Haitian Minister at Washington. She is an accomplished young woman, and is an extremely graceful dancer. Among Miss Jackson and Miss Preston's patronesses for this afternoon's affair are Mrs. Astor, Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. Levi P. Morton, Mrs. George B. De Forest, Mrs. Luther Kountze, Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, Mrs. Wilbur Bloodgood, Mrs. George J. Gould, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. Almeric H. Paget, Mrs. Buchanan Winthrop, Mrs. Egerton Winthrop, Jr., and Mrs. F. R. Rohl.

Among those who have secured boxes for the great concert to be given at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, Feb. 6, the entire proceeds from which are to be devoted to the Dewey Arch Fund, are Messrs. William E. Dodge, Morris K. Jesup, Charles T. Barney, Anson Phelps Stokes, George Bowdoin, H. B. Hollins, V. Everett Macy, Jacob Schiff, Mrs. Hood Wright, Miss Delia Gurnee, and Mr. John D. Rockefeller. The committee in charge of the concert is composed of Mrs. Levi P. Morton, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Mrs. Douglas Robinson, Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Robert Abbe, Mrs. Lloyd Bryce, Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, Mrs. J. Kennedy Tod, Miss De Forest, Miss Callender, Miss Laura J. Post, and Miss Hewitt. Every effort is being put forth to make this concert not only a notable musical, but a social affair, and there is every reason to believe that its financial results will be such as to add a gratifying amount to the sum already subscribed for the perpetuation in marble of the beautiful arch. Admiral Dewey and Gov. Roosevelt will be present at the concert, and the latter will make a brief address during the interval between the first and second parts of the programme. Among those who have volunteered their services are Mme. Nordica, M. Edouard de Reszke, Mr. Evan Williams, Mme. Gadski, M. Emil Paur, and Mr. Walter Damrosch, as well as the full chorus of the Oratorio Society and an orchestra of sixty pieces. "The Manila Te Deum," composed by Mr. Walter Damrosch in honor of the victory at Manila, will be the first number on the programme. Boxes and seats can be obtained at Carnegie Hall, Tyson's, and the Fifth Avenue and Astoria Hotels.

The Society of Arts and Letters, a newly formed organization whose members are men distinguished in the professions, and are also members of the parent association, the Social Science Association, will meet this evening at Mendelssohn Hall. Mr. Charles Dudley Warner will address the meeting, and addresses will also be made by Prof. J. C. Van Dyke and other eminent littérateurs. This meeting will bring out a very representative assemblage. Membership in the new society is considered a mark of distinction, as it is a synonym for deserved reputation in letters and the arts.

Mrs. Wilbur Bloodgood has sent out cards for a large afternoon reception at her residence, 49 East Thirty-fourth Street, on Friday, Feb. 2. At this reception there will be music and a bride dance, given by Filipinos from Manila.

Mrs. Whitelaw Reid gave last evening at her residence, 451 Madison Avenue, a dinner of forty covers, in honor of Miss Mary Crocker. The guests, for the most part, were members of the younger set in society. Dinner was served at small tables. The majority of the guests went from the dinner to Mrs. Astor's ball.

Some fifteen hundred dollars was realized for the Neighborhood Clubs Association by the sale of tickets to the last of the second series of Mr. Bagby's musical mornings at the Astoria yesterday. The women interested in the charity, who are all well known and have much influence, exerted themselves in the sale of tickets, which were generously placed at their disposal by Mr. Bagby, with the above result. The artists who appeared were Mrs. Morris Black, Miss Florence Terrell, and Mr. Maurice Farkoa. Mr. Franz Kaltenborn also was present with his full orchestra. The features of the musicale were the singing of Mr. Rogers and Mr. Farkoa, Miss Terrell's rendering, with the Kaltenborn Orchestra, of the late Clarence Barker's fantasie, and Mr. Kaltenborn and his orchestra's rendering of the overture to "Rienzi" and Gillet's "Donna Theresse." The largest audience of the season was present. There were many luncheons given afterward in the Waldorf Palm Gardens.

The St. Louis, which arrived late on Sunday evening, brought, among other passengers, Mr. Holker Abbott of Boston, Mr. Arthur Craine-Hodge, Mr. J. W. Kirkland, Mr. and Mrs. G. M. McMillan, Count Starzynski, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Taylor, Mr. Edward Valpy, Mr. Von Hasperg, Mr. and Mrs. Horace G. Williams, and Prof. Owen Williams.

It appears that the fiancé of Mrs. Walter Langdon Kane is Mr. William E. Glyn, a young Englisman who has been living in New York for the last ten years. The engagement was reported in this column some ten days ago, but the name of Mrs. Kane's fiancé was not given at that time. Mr. Glyn lived for some years on Staten Island, and is well known to the English-Canadian colony there. He is a member of the Union and Racquet Clubs.

A sad note was struck in the chorus of yesterday's gayety by the funeral of Mrs. Charles A. Minton, formerly Miss Margaret Rogers, which took place at the Church of the Ascension at 2 o'clock. Mrs. Minton, as has been stated, was found dead in bed by her husband in her apartments at the Brevoort House when he returned home from his office on Saturday afternoon last. She had not been ill, and had been planning a trip abroad for the near future. Her sudden death was a great shock to her relatives and friends. Two young sons, with her husband, survive her. Mrs. Minton was a relative of Miss Sophie and Miss Clementina Furniss, and until her marriage to Mr. Minton resided with them. The funeral of Mrs. John G. Hecksher, who died on Sunday at her residence in this city, will be held at Trinity Chapel at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. The funeral of Mr. James W. Gerard, who also died on Sunday, will take place at Calvary Church at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mrs. John Robinson and Miss Lota Robinson of Baltimore have been in town during the past week. They sail for Europe and the East this week from Boston. Miss Lota Robinson was the guest here of Mrs. Frederick Gebhard.

The Duchess of Marlborough and Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., passed last week in Paris. The young Vanderbilts were to have left Paris yesterday for Nice, where they were to join Mr. William K. Vanderbilt. The Duchess of Marlborough and her mother are going direct to Rome.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Iselin are in Paris. Mr. Iselin has been the guest of Sir Thomas Lipton at his country seat. Paris is a bit gayer than London, which is naturally plunged in profoundest gloom. However, the list of Americans over there is not a long one, as the weather has been extremely trying. Mrs. Ingraham and Miss Fannie Reed are giving weekly receptions, which have several times been noticed in this column. Among the Americans seen at the picture sales and at the restaurants and hotels were Mrs. Tiffany, Mme. de Fontilliat, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Curtis, Miss Lawrence, Miss King, and F. Grey Griswold. Miss Stella Anderson has sailed with the body of Mrs. Walden Pell on the St. Paul for this city.

On the Riviera the only talk is of the war and of hospital relief. Eugene Higgins, who has been at Nice for some time, is experimenting with different kinds of electric and steam automobiles. His steam yacht Varuna is in port, and later he goes on a cruise. The sailing of William Waldorf Astor on his cruise has already been mentioned. The first port will be Palermo, and from there the party will go to the Isles of Greece.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Herter of this city are in Chicago, where they have been extensively entertained at dinners and teas during the last fortnight.

Certain London publications and a few which follow their announcements in this country are in the dumps because there is little prospect for the Spring drawing rooms being held. This foreboding was alluded to some weeks ago in this column, but the events of the last few days rather strengthen the possibility, as since the article was written England has had another overwhelming defeat in the Transvaal, and many families of position have been thrown into mourning. The Duck of Teck, the father of the Duchess of York, having died, there will be no possibility of that august lady holding a drawing room, and the Princess of Wales still clings to her mourning for her mother, the late Queen of Denmark. The Queen herself is almost melancholy glad of an excuse, and it looks very much as if there would be no London season.

A cable story was published yesterday to the effect that Mrs. George Law had broken off her engagement to Gen. Portalis, and that he is to marry some one else. This is news to Mrs. Law's friends in the city, who had never heard before this of her engagement to Gen. Portalis.

Americans Bound for Europe.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—An extraordinary exodus of Americans toward Europe is in progress, according to the figures of the Passport Bureau of the State Department. Up to date the number of passports issued during January was 1,383, and 125 more will be sent out before the end of the month. Most of the tourists are from the middle West.

Scribner—Annan.

Helen Culbertson Annan, daughter of the late John E. Annan, was married to Arthur H. Scribner of the publishing firm of Charles Scribner's Sons, yesterday, at the Brick Church, by the Rev. W. Afterbury, assisted by the Rev. Henry van Dyke. Owing to a recent death in Mr. Scribner's family, the wedding was a quiet one, only immediate relatives of the couple being present.

President Calvert, addressing the alumni, spoke felicitously of the good fortune in having secured Dr. Rhees as the successor of David J. Hill, who resigned to become the First Assistant Secretary of State. "We like him," he said, "because of the things they say about him up in New England, where he has been working."

Dr. Rhees was graduated at Amherst in the class of '83. He was instructor of mathematics there for the following two years, and for the next succeeding three years was at the Hartford Theological Seminary. From 1888 to 1892 he was a Baptist clergyman at Portsmouth, N. H., since which time he has been Professor of Biblical Interpretation at the theological institution at Newton Centre, Mass.

Dr. Rhees, on being presented, made a brief address, in which he outlined the purposes he intends to pursue in his new field. Other addresses were made by Acting President Burton, President Slocum, Theron G. Strong, Dr. Anderson, and Dr. H. L. Morehouse. Letters of regret were read from David J. Hill, Screno E. DEATH L

PAYN'S SUCCESSOR NAMED

The Governor Nominates ex-Senator Hendricks.

CONFIRMATION IS CERTAIN

Democrats May Vote with Republicans and Make It Unanimous—Payn Gives Up the Fight.

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—The expected nomination of ex-Senator Francis Hendricks as Superintendent of Insurance, to succeed Louis F. Payn, attracted the largest audience seen in the Senate chamber this session. This was the one topic of interest, and the importance of the assemblage was clearly manifest as the routine business proceeded.

When the order of messages from the Governor was finally reached, and Lieut. Governor Woodruff handed the document bearing the Executive seal to the Clerk, there was an instant hush which burst into a murmur of surprise when the Clerk read the nomination of an obscure Commissioner for loaning Government moneys. When the next message was read this murmur became a perceptible laugh, when the Clerk read the nomination of an assistant Surrogate to fill a vacancy in St. Lawrence County. A third message was handed to the Clerk by Lieut. Gov. Woodruff, and this time he read "I hereby nominate as Superintendent of Insurance, Francis Hendricks of Syracuse, to succeed Louis F. Payn, whose term of office is about to expire."

"Referred to the Committee on Insurance," blandly remarked the Lieutenant Governor, and the regular routine of the session was continued as the crowd melted away.

A caucus of the Republican Senators will be held immediately after adjournment tomorrow and confirmation of the nomination will be had on Wednesday. It is now definitely settled that Mr. Payn will not resist the confirmation and that the Governor's nominee will receive the entire twenty-seven Republican votes.

Senator Ambler, who represents Mr. Payn's home district, and who, it has been understood, would absent himself from the caucus, stated positively to-night that he would abide by the caucus action and vote with his party.

Thus will end the incident so long anticipated and so expectantly awaited. The only uncertainty which now exists is the attitude of the Democratic Senators. Just what position they will take is not yet revealed, but an impression prevails to-night that they may also vote for the confirmation, and that the Governor will eventually triumph without a dissenting vote.

FOR STATE GRAIN ELEVATORS.

A Bill to Abolish Excessive Charges Will Be Introduced.

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—A bill having as its object the erection and operation of grain elevators by the State at New York and Buffalo will be introduced in the Legislature this Winter. The promoters of the measure, which is similar in purpose to those introduced in former years, are more confident of success this year than in years previous because of the fact that the New York Commerce Commission has made some rather startling discoveries during its investigation, which are embodied in its report. The commission says:

"Considering the relation of the grain elevators at Buffalo to the railroads, it may also become necessary for the State eventually to provide its own elevators at that port for the receipt, storage, and shipment of grain, and possibly at New York as well, in order to make it impossible for the grain naturally tributary to the port of New York to be diverted to other ports through excessive transfer and terminal charges."

The commission is of the opinion that one-half cent per bushel is ample for all services performed in connection with elevating grain by private parties and that any greater charge is an undue tax upon New York's commerce. The framers of the proposed measure, however are of the opinion that the work can be done by the State for one-eighth of a cent per bushel, and would make that the maximum rate.

The bill will be so phrased as to make it difficult of evasion and a penalty will be provided for its violation.

BUTTERINE RESOLUTION PASSED.

Assembly Acts on Measure Asking Congress to Legislate.

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—Assemblyman Witter of Tioga at to-night's session of the House called from the table his oleomargarine resolution, which was amended by Mr. Green of New York last week, directing the Attorney General to proceed immediately against the violators of the agriculture laws, and without settlement of such cases.

Mr. Witter's resolution, which is a concurrent one, requests Congress to pass a law providing that whenever any dairy or food products are imported from one State to another that such goods shall become subject to the laws of such State in the same manner as though they had been manufactured within such State, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of the fact that they were imported or brought in in the original importers' packages.

After Mr. Witter had read a brief on the prohibition of oleomargarine in the State, Mr. Green took the floor in support of his amendment. In an impassioned speech he arraigned the Republican Party for robbing the taxpayers of the State of some $3,000,000 in failing to prosecute these oleomargarine violations, making as a lame excuse for their present inaction the Statute of Limitation.

Mr. Fish of Madison spoke in behalf of the Witter resolution, and was followed by Mr. Allds, who took occasion to refute the charges made by Mr. Green. He moved the previous question on the Green amendment, which was lost, and the Witter resolution was adopted by a viva voce vote.

ANOTHER PARK FOR BROOKLYN.

New Senate Bill Provides for One in the Thirty-first Ward.

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—Another public park in the Borough of Brooklyn is provided for in a bill to-night introduced by Senator Coffey. It is to be situated in the Thirty-first Ward, and to include the land between Gravesend Bay on the southwest, Forty-sixth Street on the northwest, Cropsey Avenue on the northeast, Stillwell Avenue on the east, and Coney Island Creek on the south, and if the Commissioners appointed under the act deem necessary they may include lands between the Atlantic Ocean on the south, West Seventeenth Street on the east, Coney Island Creek and Gravesend Bay on the north, and the land of the Norton Point Land and Improvement Company on the west.

The commission is to be created by the Controller, who is authorized to appoint three persons, one of whom shall be a resident of the Thirty-first Ward, and each to receive a salary of $1,500 a year. The cost of the establishment of the park and the expenses of the commission are to be borne by the City of New York.

CRUSADE AGAINST BUCKET SHOPS.

Senator Sullivan Offers a Bill to Stop Stock Gambling.

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—Senator Sullivan to-night inaugurated a campaign against the so-called bucket shops by the introduction of a bill whose purpose it is to drive them out of business. It is also aimed at Stock Exchange transactions where it is claimed dealings occur without the actual delivery of stocks, and promises to be one of the most interesting propositions for legislative consideration.

The bill provides that all contracts, written or verbal, for the sale or transfer of any certificates or other evidence of debt due by or from the United States, or of any share or interest in the stock of any bank, corporation, or individual of the State, shall be void unless the party contracting to sell or transfer the stock shall be in the actual possession of such certificate or evidence of debt, share, or interest contracted for. All wagers concerning the price, present or future, of any part of any debt due from or by the United States or share of stock of any corporation shall also be void.

Every person who shall pay or deliver any money, goods, or things in action by way of premium in pursuance of any contract or wager, and his personal representatives, may recover such amount from the party receiving the same and his personal representatives.

CHANGE IN THE JURY SYSTEM.

Mr. Weekes's Bill Provides for Thirteen Men in Criminals Cases.

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—Assemblyman Weekes of New York introduced in the House to-night a bill providing for thirteen instead of twelve jurors for criminal cases. The bill embodies a plan suggested by William J. Youngs, secretary to the Governor, which is the result of his experience as District Attorney of Queens County. It provides for no change as to the number of jurors which shall decide the guilt or innocence of the accused, but makes provision for the extra juror to sit in place of one of the regular jurors, providing one is taken ill.

The necessity for legislation of this kind was suggested to Mr. Youngs during the trial of Mrs. Nack, when one of the jurors was taken ill and a delay was occasioned.

It is held by the framers of the bill that legislation of this character will save the counties of the State many thousands of dollars.

Corporations Must Report To-morrow.

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—The period during which corporations of this State must file their annual reports with the Secretary of State expires on Wednesday, Jan. 31. There has been an impression that an act of the last Legislature exempts some corporations from filing these reports, but it is held otherwise at the office of the Secretary of State.

Minton Withdraws His Resolution.

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—In the Assembly to-night Assemblyman Minton of New York called up his resolution to prohibit Italian labor from being employed on the proposed tunnel construction in New York City. He stated that he desired to amend, and then have the resolution go over until next Monday night for debate. Mr. Sullivan of New York, objecting, Mr. Minton withdrew his resolution by unanimous consent and will reintroduce it during the week.

Senate Bill for 75-Cent Gas.

Garbage Crematory for Queens County

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—The Assembly to-night passed the measure of Assemblyman Gale establishing a garbage crematory for Queens County.

May Find in McManus's Favor.

The Assembly Committee on Privileges and Elections held a meeting at the Cadillac Hotel yesterday and examined alleged defective ballots cast in the Fifteenth Assembly District, where T. J. McManus claims the seat occupied by J. E. Smith, Tammany Democrat. Members of the committee said that another session would be held next Friday. The impression seemed to prevail that the report would be in favor of Mr. McManus, but that it would not be presented until just before the adjournment of the Legislature.

MAGISTRATES' WORK IN 1899.

About 200,000 Cases Disposed Of in Manhattan and Bronx.

At a meeting of the Board of City Magistrates, held at the West Side Police Court last evening, the annual report of the clerk of the board, for the year 1899, was read by the President, Magistrate Deuel.

The report stated that during the year ended Dec. 31, 98,917 prisoners were formally arraigned in the Magistrates' courts of the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx, and all were disposed of except 194 cases which were pending when the year closed. Equally as many, if not more, cases were investigated, it was added, on summonses and applications for warrants. It was safe to say that the twelve Magistrates heard and decided 200,000 cases during the year.

Of the arrests actually made 93,863 were without process, and 5,054 upon warrants. The prisoners discharged numbered 37,607, and 61,116 were held for trial or summarily committed and sentenced. As compared with 1898 the figures show a falling off of 2,204 cases, chiefly due to the ordinance divesting the Magistrates of jurisdiction over cases of non-payment of municipal licenses.

Of the total prisoners, 77,127 were males and 21,790 females. Compared with 1898 the males were less by 5,322 and the females showed an increase of 3,028. There was a falling off in the number of female prisoners, as compared with the preceding year, in every district except the Second and Fourth.

From the fines imposed by the Magistrates in the execution of summary jurisdiction the police courts and wardens of prisons collected in all $100,637.10. This, the report pointed out, was $18,137 more than the total salaries of the twelve Magistrates.

Of those held for trial or convicted the United States gained 1,834 over 1898, Ireland lost 2,274, Germany lost 1,613, England lost 742, Scotland lost 130, France gained 162, Italy lost 1,197, Russia lost 1,426, Greece lost 656, and all other countries lost 143. There was an increase of 580 over 1898 "of persons reported black," the whole number being 2,516.

Among other business transacted before the report was read was the presentation of a resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Legislation, indorsing a bill authorising the Board of Estimate and Apportionment to buy two lots adjoining the West Side Courthouse for sanitary purposes. In discussing this motion Magistrate Flammer remarked that whatever was done in the way of spending money, he thought that the salaries of the Magistrates ought to be increased to a decent amount. In 1863, Magistrate Flammer added, there were eleven Magistrates. Now, with a population almost double what it was then, there were only twelve for the same territory.

Price of Law Printing Raised.

The law printers of this city have announced that they have been compelled to raise their general scale of prices. This follows upon the resolution of the Typothetae of the City of New York, calling attention to the necessity of a general advance in prices of printing because of increased cost of production due to decreased working hours and advanced prices of materials.

MAY PROSECUTE GEN. LUDLOW.

Havana Newspaper Will Seek to Sue Him for His Letter to The New York Times.

HAVANA, Jan. 29.—The Lucha says:

"According to existing law, the conductors of this paper have the right to take Gen. Ludlow into the courts for having attacked and gravely injured the Lucha in his letter to THE NEW YORK TIMES. This they will attempt to do, and they will also summon two local papers for having reproduced the letter. Gen. Ludlow, THE NEW YORK TIMES, and the two local papers will have to prove the statements contained in Gen. Ludlow's letter, or else pay the penalty demanded by the law, as, according to a decree of Gen. Brooke, papers are responsible for the statements they publish, even though such statements appear above the signature of the writer."

The letter referred to was printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES on Jan. 23, and was dated at Havana on Jan. 15. In it Gen. Ludlow reviewed the existing conditions in Cuba, seeking to justify his course in fining two Havana newspapers for attacks upon him in his capacity as Military Governor of that city.

ASKS THAT CUBA BE SET FREE.

THREE SOLDIERS MURDERED.

Men of Hughes's Command Found with Throats Cut.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., Jan. 29.—The Standard to-day prints a letter from its correspondent with the Twenty-sixth Infantry, United States Volunteers, dated at Iloilo, Panay Island, Dec. 16, in which he states that three men, William Dugan, Dennis L. Hayes, and Michael Tracy, who were reported missing at Calino, when the column under Gen. Hughes stopped at that town, have been murdered. The three belonged to Company F, Second Battalion, of the Twenty-sixth Infantry. The bodies were found on the ground in a cocoanut grove near the town of Calino. Their rifles and ammunition belts had been taken from them. Their throats were cut from ear to ear, and the bodies mutilated in a horrible manner.

The homes of these three men are not known here. They probably belonged in the central part of the State. Tracy's home is said to be in Ithaca, N. Y.

MAJOR ROCKEFELLER ALIVE.

Rescued Spaniard Says He Saw Missing Officer in Zambales.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The following has been received at the War Department:

"Manila, Jan. 28.

"Rescued Spanish Major reported that he saw Major Rockefeller in Northern Zambales Dec. 12. Another Spanish officer in Southern Luzon states that he saw him there a short time ago. No satisfactory conclusion can be reached."

Major Charles M. Rockefeller has been missing since April 28 last, and his fate is a mystery to the officials of the War Department. He strayed away from Gen. Lawton's command on the date given, and until to-day nothing had been heard from him, and it was not known whether he was dead or a prisoner in the hands of the insurgents.

The Major is a native of New York, a regular army officer, and a veteran of the war of the rebellion. Although to-day's dispatch gives ground for hope that he is still alive, the officials here are not entirely satisfied on that point.

Gen. Otis's Marriage Law.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—Secretary Root received to-day from Manila a copy of the marriage law formulated by Gen. Otis. Up to the date of this order, Dec. 18 last, only Catholic marriages were celebrated in the Philippines or recognized as legal. To meet the peculiar conditions in the islands Gen. Otis laid down no specific ceremony, only providing that any established form will suffice, providing there is an open acknowledgment of the marriage of the parties thereto. The form of a certificate is prescribed, and this may be attested by a priest, rector, or Judge.

ITALIAN CLERGYMAN DEAD.

The Rev. Alberto Pace, of San Salvatore Protestant Episcopal Church, Succumbs to Heart Disease.

The Rev. Alberto Pace, rector of San Salvatore Protestant Episcopal Church, died at the New York Hospital Saturday from valvular disease of the heart. Mr. Pace was the principal Italian Episcopal clergyman in this city, and his little church at 40 Broome Street was the centre of considerable religious work. He had a premonition that his death would soon occur. A few weeks ago he purchased a lot in St. Michael's Cemetery, and arranged all the details of his funeral, even to the point that his body should lie in state in the church.

Mr. Pace was born in Italy fifty-four years ago. He was at one time a prosperous merchant and was considered wealthy by his countrymen. He gave up his business, however, and devoted himself to church work. He came to the United States twenty years ago, and for eight years did missionary work in Brooklyn. Twelve years ago he took charge of San Salvatore Church, which was then in Mulberry Street, near Bleecker. The opening of Elm Street caused the destruction of this church, and for nearly three years he had been holding services in a little chapel in Bleecker Street. He had worked hard to have a new church built, and in a short time he would have preached in a fine new building in Broome Street. When he first came to the United States he left his wife in Italy. She came here after he had been established in San Salvatore Church, and she, with the two children, a son and a daughter, are living at Rosedale, N. J.

Mr. Pace was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in compliance with his request the services of the order will follow those of the Episcopal Church next Sunday morning, when the funeral will take place at the chapel. The body is now in the church, and up to the time of the services on Sunday the young men who are members of the church will take turns in watching over it. It has not yet been decided who will have charge of the church services.

First Aid to the Injured.

The report of the Society for Instruction in First Aid to the Injured shows that since its establishment by the State Charities Aid Association, in 1882, it has given instruction to 11,929 persons, including members of the Police and Fire Departments. Many men and women in private life have also attended the classes of the society and received its diplomas. The society's methods are not intended to supplant the surgeon or physician, but to enable those who have received its instruction to make application of simple rules and remedies until medical aid can be obtained. Subscriptions may be sent to Charles H. Marshall, President of the society, at 7 Nassau Street.

Harbor Hill Golf Clubhouse Burned.

EAST RIVER TUNNEL PLAN

Hearing on Long Island Company's Franchise Application.

ONLY ONE CITIZEN OPPOSES IT

Others Point Out Benefits That Will Result—Councilman Cassidy Asks Questions.

The application of the New York and Long Island Terminal Railway Company for a franchise for a tunnel between the intersection of Maiden Lane and Broadway, in the Borough of Manhattan, under the East River, to the present location of the Long Island Railroad station at Atlantic and Flatbush Avenues in the Borough of Brooklyn, was considered at a hearing before the joint Committee on Railroads of the Municipal Assembly yesterday. Nearly one hundred residents of Brooklyn, representatives of local trade organizations, and two or three men from the Borough of Queens spoke in favor of the granting of the franchise, and only one, a Queens Borough lawyer, opposed it. During the hearing Councilman Cassidy asked a number of questions of the speakers and gave such an impression of his opposition to the project that he received answers which provoked loud applause. The committee gave no indication of its intentions as regards the application.

Senator Wagner of Kings County spoke for a few minutes in favor of the granting of the franchise as a means of relief from conditions which have been a nuisance in Atlantic Avenue for twenty years. "We are all looking for more bridges and tunnels," he concluded, "and here is a corporation that is willing to build a tunnel at no cost to the city. You ought to jump at the chance."

President Baldwin of the Terminal Company and also of the Long Island Railroad Company, explained that under existing law the tracks in Atlantic Avenue cannot be changed unless the tunnel franchise is granted. As a mode of relief for the congestion on the Brooklyn Bridge, he said, the tunnel would be of great importance, especially as it can be completed much sooner than any of the bridges now in course of construction or contemplated. When Mr. Baldwin had finished his argument Mr. Cassidy asked him if the Terminal Company has any other than a "paper" existence.

"That's what we're here for," Mr. Baldwin replied.

"Then," pursued Mr. Cassidy, "it's your understanding of the law that a company which exists only on paper can come here and ask for a valuable franchise? I don't understand it that way. I believe that such a company must be the actual operator of a railroad."

Mr. Baldwin smiled blandly as he answered: "Yes, we can come here and ask for this franchise."

After Eugene G. Blackford, President of the Atlantic Avenue Improvement Commission, had explained how the decision to remove the railroad from Atlantic Avenue depended upon the construction of a tunnel to Manhattan, the Rev. Dr. McConnell, rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity of Brooklyn, presented a petition, signed by the pastors of forty-six congregations, with a total membership of 60,000, asking for the granting of the franchise. Present conditions on the Brooklyn Bridge, Dr. McConnell said, were "debauching and demoralizing." Young men growing up, he said, were in danger of losing their respect for womanhood in their efforts to crowd aboard the congested trains on the bridge.

On behalf of the Manufacturers' Association of New York, W. C. McConnell argued that the present system on Atlantic Avenue was a menace to life, and the cause of great depression to property interests. Gen. Alfred C. Barnes, for years a Trustee of the Brooklyn Bridge, declared the ordinary objections of damage to abutting property would be eliminated by the proposed improvement. Instead, property would increase in value.

"The granting of this franchise," Gen. Barnes continued, "will have an important effect in solving the question of trans-river communication by showing the feasibility of tunnels under water. In my opinion, the era of bridge building is at an end. Three bridges, proposed or in course of building, will cost us enormous sums of money—one of them $22,000,000. It seems wicked to spend the taxpayers' money in this way."

So far during the hearing, none of the speakers had even intimated any impatience with the committee for having held up the appropriation for months, but the next speaker, ex-Judge William Watson, began by saying, "I can't conceive where any opposition should lie in this committee to the making of a favorable report. What objection should there be that should allow this proposition to lie in committee for seven months? There are so many reasons why the committee should favorably report this application that it would be an insult to the committee's intelligence to go into them further."

Just as Judge Watson was about to take his seat he turned to Mr. Cassidy and said, "Is there any question you would like to ask me?"

"Why do you single me out?" was Mr. Cassidy's reply.

"You seem to be asking all the questions," Judge Watson answered.

"Well, I'll ask you this," Mr. Cassidy responded. "You say there are no objections to this franchise. How do you know? The committee is here for the purpose of finding if there be any."

"This is the first time," said Judge Watson, "that I have had any reason to hope that your intelligence predominates at last."

"Do you know of any reasons why we should act hastily on the application, which is for the benefit of the Long Island Railroad Company, and which is not even asked for through that company?" Mr. Cassidy inquired.

"How do you know about the Long Island Railroad?" Judge Watson replied.

"We all know that no other company could benefit by this franchise. It may sell it. How do we know it'll build?" Mr. Cassidy responded.

"Well," said Judge Watson. "Give us the franchise and put the onus where it belongs. Give us the benefit of the doubt."

R. Horak of Queens, speaking in opposition to the project, said the Long Island Railroad could not be depended upon. He practically charged that the company was trying to gobble up all franchise rights in connection with East River transportation, and said that it already held the Ranney bridge franchise and the right to build a tunnel from Hunter's Point, Long Island City, to Forty-second Street, Manhattan. This was denied a minute later by President Baldwin, who asserted that his company never had the slightest interest in either of these franchises.

Charles N. Chadwick, who followed, said: "We have come here to ask why, after the Legislature has authorized it, this franchise application has rested in your hands since June. The temper of the people of this community is beginning to get decidedly ugly over these delays. We demand an answer and a quick one to this question, Will we get the relief we seek?"

Councilman Oakley, the Chairman of the committee, then inquired of President Baldwin if the construction of the tunnel would not help his railroad. "Yes," said Mr. Baldwin, "but it would have to increase our business a great deal to carry the cost of the tunnel."

"Would you be willing to release the city from paying its share of the Atlantic Avenue improvement if we grant this franchise?" Mr. Oakley continued.

"No," said Mr. Baldwin. "Under the law the city must pay half of the cost of the lowering and raising of the tracks, or about $1,250,000."

Judge Watson, addressing Mr. Oakley, asked, "If you believed that the sentiment of Brooklyn was unanimously in favor of this franchise, would you, under existing law, vote to grant it?"

Mr. Oakley admitted that in such circumstances he would favor the franchise. Judge Watson as he took his seat observed, "I haven't heard a remark dropped by a member of the committee that indicated that the committee favored this project." This called for an explanation from the Chairman, who said the committee was in search of information and not looking for a chance to show favor or disfavor.

Judge Watson accepted the explanation, and then Mr. Cassidy said to him, "If you wanted to sell me a horse, would you tell me all its faults?"

"Not you, I wouldn't," Judge Watson replied. "In that case I'd apply the principle of 'caveat emptor.'" Amid the laughter which this retort aroused the hearing was adjourned.

Jersey Central Ferry Franchise.

Corporation Counsel Whalen has decided not to act upon the instructions of the Sinking Fund Commission, to bring suit to enjoin the Central Railroad of New Jersey from operating a ferry between Whitehall Street and Communipaw, until the Municipal Assembly has had an opportunity to act upon the application of the company for a franchise for the operation of a ferry there.

REFORM CLUB AND SCHOOLS.

Committee to Represent the Organization at Albany in Behalf of Remedial Legislation.

The Reform Club has appointed a committee of three to appear on behalf of the club at the joint meeting of the Senate and Assembly Committees on Cities at Albany to-day, when the Ford, Elsberg, and Marshall bills relating to the public schools of this city will be discussed.

The committee consists of Messrs. E. Ellery Anderson, Jacob W. Mack, and John G. Agar.

The Reform Club favors the unification of the schools under one general Board of Education, uniform salaries throughout the city, uniform courses of studies, uniform discipline and supervision, a definite sum provided by law, not less than four mills on each dollar of assessed valuation of city property, to be devoted to the public schools of the city for purposes other than building and sites, and power lodged in the Board of Education to disburse that sum free from interference and restraint of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, but subject to their rigid inspection.

The Reform Club also favors the Ford and Elsberg bills because, in its opinion they provide the means best suited to accomplish the above results. The club is strongly opposed to the scheme of the Marshall bill, whereby the Board of Estimate and Apportionment would be substituted for the Board of Education in most important educational functions, and whereby four independent and disjointed systems would be forced on the city.

WANTS THE GOVERNOR TO ACT.

Mr. Metcalfe Asks that Richmond County Teachers Get Their Pay.

ALBANY, Jan. 29.—Assemblyman George Metcalfe of Richmond to-night offered a resolution in the House in the interest of the school teachers of Richmond County, which reads:

"The misery and distress caused by the non-payment of salaries due the public school teachers of Richmond County being apparent to the members of the Legislature, therefore be it and it is hereby

"Resolved, That the Legislature request the Governor to send to the Assembly an emergency message containing a provision for the payment of salaries owing to said teachers of Richmond County for 1899."

CONSUMERS' LEAGUE WORK.

Edwin Markham Reads His Poem and Declares the Man with the Hoe Type Is Here.

Remarkable interest was evinced in the meeting of the Consumers' League held yesterday afternoon at the Assembly Hall, 156 Fifth Avenue. The hall was much too small to seat the great number of women who attended. Edwin Markham spoke and read his poem, "The Man with the Hoe," and addresses were made by Dr. Felix Adler and by Mrs. Florence Kelley, Secretary of the National Consumers' League.

Mrs. Frederick Nathan, the President, presided and reviewed the work of the league, which has succeeded in ameliorating the condition of employes in many establishments. The white list, giving the names of houses which refuse to use the products of sweat shops, was shown to be a growing one. Mrs. Nathan made a plea that members should give preference to houses on the white list and to goods having the league label.

Mrs. I. N. Phelps Stokes of the Auditing Committee read the Treasurer's report, which showed expenses for the year of $1,308.20 and a balance of $6.74.

Mrs. Kelley discussed factory labor and reported a condition in this State which compared very poorly with the conditions in Massachusetts and Maine.

Dr. Adler said that the thing to do to accomplish the league's purposes was to compel the Inspectors to do their work and to carry the fight into the lawmaking bodies. "You can reach your object," he said, "when you reach the conscience of the State." He advocated that the landlords should be required to have licenses. "The most effective way," said he, "to get at tenement house evils is to go straight for the landlords."

Mrs. Nathan introduced Mr. Markham. Before reading his famous poem, he said: "I am in deep sympathy with any movement which looks to the welfare of the laboring classes, though I do not look for the solution in anything short of co-operative industry.

"My poem is not a protest against labor," said he. "If I know my heart, I thoroughly believe in labor. Who does not? But it is an appeal against drudgery—that which destroys hope, manliness, aspiration, rest, and the soul itself.

"The Man with the Hoe," he said was a type common to all nations, and he was found in the sweatshops of New York and in the mines of Virginia.

The league yesterday elected the following officers, most of them old officers re-elected: President—Mrs. Frederick Nathan; Vice Presidents—Mrs. Hugh Munro Dewees and Mrs. I. N. Phelps Stokes; Treasurer—Mrs. J. G. Croswell; Secretaries—Miss Bertha H. Seccomb and Miss Emma Brace.

M. CAMBON RETURNS.

French Ambassador Attempted to Overcome Opposition to Reciprocity Treaty in France.

M. Cambon, the French Ambassador to the United States, who has been absent from this country since last August, arrived here yesterday on the French liner La Normandie from Havre. The Ambassador was expected to arrive a week ago, but, according to a statement made by one of his friends yesterday he remained in France in an endeavor to overcome opposition to the Franco-American reciprocity treaty, against which there is reported to be much protest on the part of Chambers of Commerce all over France.

The Ambassador remained on the pier but a few moments after the steamer arrived, and declined to be interviewed. He went to the Holland House, and will leave this city for Washington this morning. On the steamship pier to meet M. Cambon were M. Thiébaut, French Chargé d'Affaires; M. Taigny, Secretary of the Embassy; Henry Gourd, President of the French Chamber of Commerce; Edmond Bruwaert, French Consul General at New York; Louis Lurienne, manager of the French Cable Company, and M. Chartran.

COULD NOT DISCHARGE WEAPON.

Rim-Fire Cartridges in Centre-Fire Revolver Prevent a Murder.

Joseph E. Manuel, an Italian shoemaker, did not know that a centre-fire revolver would not explode rim-fire cartridges and to that fortunate bit of ignorance John Richardson, the colored janitor of the flathouse at 2,009 Lexington Avenue, probably owes his life. For the same reason Manuel was held in the Harlem Police Court yesterday in $1,000 bail for felonious assault instead of being locked up on a charge of murder.

Manuel, who lives at 2,269 Second Avenue, visited Little Italy Sunday afternoon. Returning somewhat intoxicated about 7 o'clock he entered the vestibule of 2,009 Lexington Avenue and there conducted himself in a manner that aroused the protest of the janitor, Richardson, who was in the hallway. Richardson ordered the Italian to leave the place, and upon the latter's refusal, threw him out upon the sidewalk. Manuel returned and broke his cane over the janitor's head. Then they grappled. It was at this juncture that the Italian drew a large bulldog revolver, and placing it close to Richardson's breast, pulled the trigger. There was no report. The click of the trigger punctuated the janitor's frightened outcries three times more, but there was still no shot. Then Richardson succeeded in knocking his would-be murderer down, and a policeman, who had by that time arrived, led both men to the East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street Station. There the fact that the revolver was a centre-fire weapon and that the cartridges were of the rim-fire variety was discovered, and Richardson's escape was explained.

POOLROOMS IN BROOKLYN

High Police Officials Consider Reported Conditions Exaggerated.

MAGISTRATES HANDICAP RAIDS

Commissioner Abell Says Even Proprietors Are Generally Discharged —He Accuses Moss's Men.

President Bernard J. York of the Police Department and Commissioner Henry E. Abell were both questioned last night as to the alleged presence in numbers of poolrooms in Brooklyn, a condition of things charged by a Brooklyn newspaper to be the fact, and both declared that such poolrooms would be promptly raided if discovered. Mr. Abell also said that it was almost impossible to secure the retention of persons accused of running poolrooms in this city, because of the attitude of the Magistrates.

Mr. York refused to admit or deny that poolrooms existed in Brooklyn, though he said he had taken notice of the publication by a Brooklyn newspaper of the addresses of places where it was charged they were maintained.

"I wont discuss the matter now," said he. "I may have something to say later."

"Is it because it might hamper the work of the police to discuss it now?" he was asked.

"I won't say that, either," said he. "Nor will I tell you whether the police are investigating the places mentioned. I will say this: Any poolroom that I discover will be closed up, and just as soon as I get satisfactory evidence of one I will proceed against it. Brooklyn's condition is much better than that of Manhattan, which is a big cosmopolitan place, with people of all sorts in it, while Brooklyn is a city of homes. In Manhattan some poolselling does exist. It is one of those sores that cannot quite be eradicated in such a city. One of the reasons it is difficffiult to stop it is that so much of it is done under the guise of licensed clubs. We have places in Manhattan under surveillance, but it is one thing to be sure a place is a poolroom and another to get legal evidence of the fact."

Commissioner Abell said that he did not know of any poolrooms in Brooklyn. "If I did," said he, "I would give orders to have them promptly closed up. I have been confined to my room for the last two weeks suffering from heart trouble, and I have not been reading newspapers in that period and have not noticed these charges, but if that paper will bring to the Police Board evidence of a single place run as a poolroom it will be closed. The Police Board is a unit in its determination to attempt to exterminate gambling. It cannot, however, wipe out the gambling passion in men's hearts, and it is impossible to suppress the vice altogether.

"These stories about poolrooms are by no means always well founded, however. A man of my acquaintance, not connected with the police force, either, told me the other day that a report had been spread of the existence of a poolroom on Fifth Avenue, Brooklyn, near Fifth Street. He said he knew every nook of every building in that vicinity, and he knew the charge couldn't be true. Often people who have audaciously threatened to own poolrooms in spite of us, and who have been driven out by the police, start such stories as this to get square.

"There is no city in the world, in my opinion, where disorder is so rare in consideration of the size and the kind of the population as it is in New York. There are fewer offenses here in proportion to the population than in the rest of the State. I wouldn't be afraid to walk from Coney Island to Spuyten Duyvil at night if I behaved myself. At the same time, men will gamble to some extent, and it is very difficult to get evidence against them. If the Magistrates would determine to co-operate a little more with us we might be able to do more. But we can't even get the poolroom keepers held; so, of course, we can't get them indicted.

"The law forbids gambling, except in a race-track inclosure. The very fact that it is permitted there provokes men to visit poolrooms. I have directed poolroom raids myself. The place is pulled, the paraphernalia seized. Next morning the prisoners are arraigned. The Magistrate asks the officer if his let was registered. He has to admit that his name and the amount of the bet and the terms were not entered in a book. 'Discharged,' says the Magistrate; 'no violation of the law.' We have even had corroborative evidence, but the prisoners are discharged.

"Then places are run as clubs, and we cannot prevent their being resumed, even after one raid. If a policeman arrests a poolroom keeper again and again, the Magistrate discharging him each time, the cry goes up that this man is being hounded because he won't give up to the police. These men, whom we know to be bad, claim that they are hounded, simply to get square. Moss had plenty of such men up to testify at his investigation. The investigation was all a part of this reform movement in politics. Why, we have sworn testimony that the poolrooms existed without number in the reform administration, testimony of men who ran them and played them. They are less frequent now.

"Talk about this being a wide-open town! What do you think of the towns up the State—full of vice. Take Albany, with dens of every sort near the Capitol. There is only one way to stop poolrooms. Pass a law forbidding the Western Union Telegraph Company to furnish news of races by wire to clubs, and give us the right to tap the wires and every poolroom in the city would close."

Mr. Abell said that recently two young men were arrested for stealing wire, and were found to be employes of Frank Moss. "They had been hired to tap wires leading to poolrooms," said he, "and had been stealing it instead. That is the kind of men he put on the witness stand."

SERGT. DALY TRANSFERRED.

"Police Reasons" the Only Statement Vouchsafed by Capt. Thomas.

Sergt. John Daly, who has served under the four Captains preceding Capt. Thomas in command of the Nineteenth Precinct, was transferred last night to the East Thirty-fifth Street Station. "Police reasons" was all Capt. Thomas would say regarding the transfer.

Sergt. Frederick Carlson, who a week ago was sent from the West Thirtieth Street Station to the West Forty-seventh Street Station, was ordered back to the former station last night. Sergt. Conboy is now the only Sergeant left in the Nineteenth Precinct who served under Capt. Price. He said yesterday that he expected to be transferred in the near future.

Woman Dies in the Street.

In Trinity Place, near Rector Street, yesterday afternoon about 4 o'clock, Roundsman Sherwood of the Church Street Station found a woman, very ill, on the sidewalk. Before the arrival of an ambulance from the Hudson Street Hospital the woman died, and the surgeon took the body to the police station. There was $38.05 in the woman's dress bosom. She was about forty-five years old, 5 feet 6 inches tall, weighed about 160 pounds, and had slightly gray hair. She was clad in a black dress, skirt and waist, black hat, black knit jacket, black cashmere shawl, black stockings, and rubbers. The body was sent to the Morgue, where it awaits identification.

Georgia Society Organized.

More than a hundred persons formerly citizens of the State of Georgia and citizens of that State temporarily living in this city met last night in the Townsend Building, Broadway and Twenty-fifth Street, and organized the Georgia Society. The officers elected are: President—Robert G. Erwin, the President of the Plant Railway System; Vice President—Edward T. Charlton of the Ocean Steamship Company; Secretary and Treasurer—David Robinson. The next meeting was arranged for Feb. 1. It will be held in the Fifth Avenue Hotel.

The Rev. W. E. Needham Resigns.

The Rev. William E. Needham has tendered his resignation as pastor of the Calvary Baptist Church, Brooklyn, with the request that it take effect May 1. Mr. Needham, it is said, desires to engage more extensively in evangelistic work. He has been quite successful in this field. Mr. Needham is known as the "artist preacher," having made quite a reputation by his work in drawing rapid crayon sketches to illustrate points in his sermons.

SEPARATE CHILDREN'S COURT.

Plan Regarded by Several Magistrates as Impracticable—Gerry Society Favors It.

Although a good many of the City Magistrates are in favor of the project for a separate court for children, such as has been advocated by Commissioner Keller of the Charities Department and by the Gerry society, it seems to be the general opinion among them that there is no likelihood of the plan ever materialising. Magistrate Deuel declared that he had always been in favor of a special court, at which the young might be kept apart from adult prisoners and saved from contact with hardened offenders.

"But," said Magistrate Deuel, "I do not believe that any such plan would be considered by the powers that be. Politics are against it. I talked with Mr. Gerry about the matter years ago, and it would be an excellent thing if such a court were established. You have got to remember, however, that even were youthful prisoners isolated in this way, it would not prevent all children from contact with hardened criminals in court. Mothers take their children to the courts with them every day when asking for summonses or warrants.

"If the plan for a separate court were ever adopted it would not mean that one or two Magistrates would make a specialty of children's cases. The Magistrates would preside at the court in rotation, just as they do at the other courts. But two more Magistrates would be needed, and, as I said, I don't expect to see anything come of the idea."

Magistrate Hogan is one of those who oppose the scheme. He said that he considered a separate court unnecessary. In the courts as at present constituted children could be isolated in separate rooms, if desirable, and that plan was sometimes followed. It would be a good deal better, Mr. Hogan added, to make a rule that all cases of children should be heard in the Gerry society's rooms at the courts.

Magistrate Mott said that he did not believe that any such plan as that proposed would ever be considered.

The Gerry society has definitely declared itself in favor of a separate court for children. Superintendent Jenkins of the society has included in his annual report, which is soon to be issued, a plea for such an institution. He declares that the removal of children from the regular courts would do much toward helping them to maintain their self-respect. One who had been arrested would not feel so much disgraced if tried simply with other children.

OPPOSE FITCHBURG LEASE.

Massachusetts Central Directors Appeal to Gov. Crane.

BOSTON, Jan. 29.—The Globe will say to-morrow:

To the existing complications regarding the big projected railroad leases in which all New England is just now interested, has been added a new feature. The threat which certain Massachusetts Central interests have recently been making against the Boston and Maine in connection with the proposed lease by the latter of the Fitchburg, took material form yesterday in the forwarding to Gov. Crane of a letter protesting against the lease on the ground that if carried out it will be likely to adversely affect the interests of the Central Massachusetts stockholders.

It is expected that Gov. Crane on receipt of the letter will refer it to the Attorney General for such action as he may see fit to take.

President Tuttle of the Boston and Maine has formally renewed his propositions to the Directors of the Fitchburg to lease the road for nine years, but no date has yet been set for a meeting of the Fitchburg Directors to act upon the proposition.

SALOONS HIT HARD.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Jan. 29.—A decision which will close two-thirds of the saloons in Iowa was handed down by the Supreme Court to-day. It is considered the most generally important decision given out in ten years.

In 1894 the Legislature passed the so-called "mulct liquor law," which did not repeal the old prohibitory statute, but suspended its penalties on condition of filing a petition of a majority of the voters and securing consent of the Town Council to the operation of saloons. In 1897 the Legislature published a new and complete code, which changed in a few minor respects the mulct law. The old mulct act had no provision for a canvass of the consent petition; the new code provided it must be canvassed and approved by the County Supervisors.

Lorenzo Ill, a Des Moines saloonkeeper, was assailed by the Anti-Saloon League on the ground that he could not operate his saloon under the new law without getting a new consent petition and having it canvassed by the Supervisors. The District Court, Judge C. A. Bishop, presiding, decided in Ill's favor, and the case went up on certiorari proceedings. The Supreme Court, through Judge Waterman's opinion to-day, decides the whole matter.

It holds that the code of 1897 repealed all laws heretofore passed; that the old mulct law was repealed; that consent petitions secured and filed under the old law are regdered worthless, and that any saloon keeper operating under a petition filed prior to Oct. 1, 1897, when the new code took effect, is liable to be fined for contempt and have his place closed.

JUDGE TAKES CHILD IN HIS LAP.

There was a pretty scene in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, yesterday, when, on the return of a writ of habeas corpus, Justice Maddox heard testimony in the application of Cornelius L. Sullivan of 583 Fifth Avenue to recover his daughter, Adelaide Sullivan, who has been living with her aunt, Mrs. Adelaide Johnson, at 275 Prospect Avenue, since the death of her mother.

The child is nearly four years old. Her mother died three years and nine months ago. About a year ago Sullivan married again. Since that time, according to the testimony, he had not been to Mrs. Johnson's house and had not paid the expenses of the child's keep.

While the hearing was going on yesterday, the child, who was handsomely clothed, sat in the lap of her aunt, whom she called "Mamma." Justice Maddox beckoned to the little one to come to him. The child looked up inquiringly into her aunt's face, and the latter placed her on the floor, indicating to the little one that she could go to the Judge.

The little girl toddled timidly up to the bench, and Justice Maddox took her up into his lap. She was a little frightened at the proceeding, and laying her head on the Judge's shoulder, began to cry.

"There, there, my little maid, don't cry," said the Judge, soothingly.

The child looked up into his face, brushed away her tears, and smiled. In reply to his Honor's questions, the little girl said that she did not want to go and live with her father, but preferred to live with her "mamma."

Justice Maddox said he thought that under the circumstances the child should not be given to the father. He thought it would be to the girl's interests to stay with the aunt, who so carefully provided for her and whom she loved. The father might see the child at intervals, and the parties were left to arrange between themselves as to what times he could see his daughter.

New Opposition Paper Mills.

PATERSON, N. J., Jan. 29.—The Industry Mills, owned by the Paterson Savings Institution and formerly used by the Adams Cotton and Buckram Company, have been leased to the Gledhill Paper Company, now of Thirty-fourth Street, New York. At the time the wall-paper trust was formed, the company entered the "combine," but recently withdrew from it and will now move its plant to this city, and operate outside of the trust. Most of the employes will have to be brought from New York.

Plant Estate Nearly $17,000,000.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 29.—Judge Lynde Harrison, one of the executors of the will of the late Henry B. Plant, filed the inventory of his estate, with the appraisal, in the Probate Court to-day. It amounts to $16,952,548, and includes all of his estate, except the real estate which belonged to him in Florida, and which is not subject to appraisal and inventory, except in the courts of that State.

Four Lost in Oyster Schooner Wreck.

FALL RIVER, Jan. 29.—The oyster schooner Nausett, which was wrecked yesterday off Watch Hill, was owned by Joseph Marks of Dighton. She left that port on Tuesday last, having aboard Marks, his two children, Willie and Eddie, aged twelve and ten respectively, and Thomas Meldin, an elderly sailor. It is believe that all on board were lost.

Healer James Surrenders.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 29.—Christian Science Healer James, indicted for manslaughter for complicity in the death of Ethel Yates at Council Bluffs early in January, to-day surrendered to the authorities. Mrs. Yates, mother of the girl, who was indicted at the same time as James, is out on bail.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN'S AMBITION.

Tells a Rhode Island Audience He Has a Higher Aim than to be President.

PROVIDENCE, Jan. 29.—Col. William Jennings Bryan began a week's tour of New England for the purpose of discussing the questions of the day to-day, speaking at Pawtucket and Woonsocket in the afternoon, and this city in the evening. As the State of Rhode Island is just on the eve of a Gubernatorial campaign, which will close with an election in April Mr. Bryan's coming is regarded as timely by the Democrats.

The speeches he delivered to-day did not differ much one from another. In the course of his address at Pawtucket he said:

"I have a higher ambition than to be President. That is, to do something to make the Government better. I have no doubt that the time will come when the principles of the Chicago platform will be a part of the law of the United States. I believe in their ultimate triumph."

At Woonsocket, where he addressed a large crowd in the Opera House, Mr. Bryan declared that the newspapers of the East were not entirely fair to the party he represented, and asserted that the policy of the Republican Party was not argument, but coercion, and this was particularly noticeable in 1896.

Touching briefly upon the subject of trusts, he said the Republican Party had amended the commandment to "Thou shalt not steal—on a small scale." Imperialism was defined as a government thirteen inches in diameter, round, and fired out of a cannon.

Mr. Bryan in closing said: "The Republicans believe that it is the destiny of this country to enter into the international land-grabbing trust and imitate the European nations to carry on a war of conquest. The Democrats believe that it is the mission of this Nation to stand erect and show by its example the blessings of self-government."

Mr. Bryan's address in Infantry Hall to-night was considered the first of a series of rallies arranged by the Democratic State Committee in its efforts to carry the State. Moreover, as the Legislature will meet to-morrow, the gathering brought together prominent men of both big parties from all over the State, to hear the doctrines of Jeffersonian Democracy expounded by a National Democratic leader. The speech was listened to by an audience that taxed the capacity of the hall to the utmost. There was plenty of music and enthusiasm.

Congressman Lanter, who is a member of Col. Bryan's party, also made a speech.

BASEBALL MAGNATES MEET.

Promoters of the New American Association Assemble at Philadelphia to Organize.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 29.—Baseball men from various sections of the country who are interested in the new American Association, which is to meet here to-morrow for the purpose of organizing and to lay out a circuit, began to arrive to-day. Most of them are now on the ground.

Those here to-night are H. D. Quin, President of the association; C. S. Havener, and Joseph D. O'Brien of Milwaukee; Adrian C. Anson of Chicago, A. G. Hoeckel of St. Louis, Thomas McCarthy and J. H. Drewson of Boston, and Phil Peterson, Conway W. Sams, and John McGraw of Baltimore.

Detroit will be represented at the meeting by proxy in the hands of the Milwaukee people, and it is expected that representatives from Providence will arrive to-morrow.

Philadelphia's interests at present are looked after by Frank Richter. The Baltimore contingent arrived late to-night, and soon thereafter the new magnates retired to an upper room of the Hotel Hanover, where an informal conference was held. It was said that the conference was held for the sole purpose of becoming acquainted, but it is known that plans for the meeting to-morrow were discussed and that a rough programme was mapped out.

It is believed that there will be considerable difficulty encountered when it comes to making up the circuit. It is known that the association has more than enough applications for admission to complete the organization. Louisville is among the applicants, and Washington and New York are also knocking for admission. There is a rumor around the hotel corridors to-night that William Barnie is the moving spirit that is pushing New York for membership in the new organization.

When President Quin was seen to-night regarding the dispatch from Washington which stated that President Young of the National League had received applications for protection and membership under the National agreement of the American Association from various clubs, he emphatically denied that any such application had been made. Mr. Quin said that the new association is fully able to take care of itself, and does not intend to ask favors of the National League.

CLUB OWNERS INTERESTED.

National League Men Watching Events Very Closely.

The club owners of the National League and American Association of Baseball Clubs are much interested in the meeting of the prospective new American Association, which is scheduled to be held in Philadelphia to-day. If the association is successfully launched and McGraw and Robinson assume the management of the rival club in Baltimore it will aid the National League in reducing the circuit to eight clubs.

As the affairs of the National League now stand, the Baltimore Club is the only obstacle to prevent the adoption of an eight club circuit. The Circuit Committee of the major league considers the determination of nearly all the players of the Baltimore Club to desert the National League for the new association a point in its favor.

It practically leaves the Baltimore Club without a team, and as the new combination in Baltimore has secured the ball grounds, the Baltimore Club is without assets and has practically nothing to offer for the money consideration asked some time ago to drop out of the League. The League was ready to pay a reasonable price to the Baltimore Club for its players and franchise, despite the denials of several club owners that such a plan had been arranged.

The management of the New Yorks claim that the chances for a circuit of eight clubs this season are very favorable. The club shows that the circuit at present has already been reduced to nine clubs, Cleveland and Louisville having been disposed of and Baltimore being without a team or grounds.

It is not thought likely that the Baltimore Club, when it finds itself practically reorganizing a team for the two years still remaining before the ten-year agreement of maining before the ten-year agreement of twelve clubs expires. It is a patent fact that Baltimore was to be excluded from the circuit when the reorganization takes place in 1902.

The Baltimore-Brooklyn combination is not at all worried over the situation, apparently. It is probably awaiting the result of to-day's meeting, and believes, as many other club owners do, that the new association is a myth, as up to the present time there has not been enough money pledged to organize a single club, and it requires a vast amount of capital to organize a rival to the National League and secure the latter's players by offering better salaries.

which went into effect last week, and therefore means no additional profit to any of the running companies.

BROOKLYN RAPID TRANSIT.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit was strong yesterday on buying by Flower brokers, and new interests identified with the property. Stock Exchange houses which some time ago were said to have advised short selling of the stock were yesterday counseling buying.

Discussing the meeting of Directors for the election of officers, to be held this week, a Director said: "I anticipate no changes. President Rossiter will be re-elected—you may depend on that."

MISSOURI PACIFIC'S SALES.

In relation to the recent active movement in Missouri Pacific, it was rumored in Wall Street yesterday that it was due to the selling of the Countess Castellane's holdings in the property to Standard Oil interests. This story, however, received little credence. An officer of the company pronounced it as absurd. The general opinion is that the movement was due to what was more or less apparent to close observers of the situation, namely, a bull pool organized to advance the quotation.

Yesterday, on dealings of 4,400 shares, the stock advanced ⅝ of a point.

LONDON BUYS ATCHISON.

Atchison preferred was one of the few stocks bought by London yesterday, though here the stock was somewhat depressed by the report that about sixty brakemen on the Eastern Division of the system, between Emporia and Kansas City, had been laid off. As an offset to this, it was reported from Chicago that Atchison officials there say that transcontinental business has been heavy and that January earnings should make a good gain over January, 1899.

PREDICTING GOLD EXPORTS.

The fact that the sterling exchange market was firmer yesterday than it has been for some time led to renewed talk of the probability of gold exports, and several exchange brokers gave it as their opinion that when England's war loan is called for the flow of money from this country to London will certainly begin.

ANTI-TRUST LAW DECISION.

The Street yesterday, in view of recent talk and proposed legislation affecting trusts, paid more than passing attention to the decision by Judge Kohlsaat of Chicago, declaring unconstitutional the law which said that a trust has no right to sue or recover on any contract made in Illinois. Officers in this city of several companies commonly known as "trusts" declared it as their opinion that as time passed the courts would more and more incline to a broader interpretation of all laws touching upon corporations and so-called "trusts."

ERRATIC AND WEAK.

Third Avenue was again erratic and weak yesterday, due in a large measure to the doubt as to the nature and probable result of the financial negotiations now pending in respect to the debt of the company. The range of prices was from 107½ to 110¾, with the close 109¼—a net decline of a half point. The opening was more than two points under the closing figure of Saturday.

EARNINGS GROW LARGER.

The same interests which lately have been buying Southern Pacific were yesterday again purchasers. The next report of the company, it is officially stated, will make a very encouraging showing, and will show steadily increasing earnings. Notwithstanding the absence of official information on the subject, talk of a dividend continues.

SPECULATING ON THE RESULT.

Pending the announcement of the result of the meeting yesterday of the American Steel and Wire Directors in Chicago, much speculation as to probable action was heard, and as a result of that speculation more or less trading followed, with a net gain for the common stock of 1¼ points on sales of some 35,000 shares, and of ⅞ on the preferred on sales of 2,000 shares.

HOW ONE ROAD PROSPERS.

The strength of Northern Pacific yesterday was due to the fact that the published earnings of the company for the month of December showed an increase over the same month last year of $65,140. From July 1 to Dec. 31 the total net earnings were $8,237,200, and the increase $633,130.

TALKING OF PURCHASE.

The buying of Evansville and Terre Haute yesterday, the stock advancing 1¼ points, was on a revival of the rumor that the Southern was negotiating for the purchase of the road, and had recently been quietly acquiring stock in the open market.

PRESSED WITH ORDERS.

Tennessee Coal and Iron was strong yesterday on reports from Alabama from official sources that the company was pressed with orders. Directors of the company, it is said, are now on a tour of inspection of the properties of the company.

ANTICIPATING INTEREST.

The Chicago and Northwestern, which last month anticipated payment of its January interest, is now anticipating the interest due Feb. 1 on its funded debt.

INCLINED TO HEAVINESS.

The trading in St. Paul yesterday was limited, and the stock was rather inclined to heaviness, though the close was at the same figure as on Saturday. During the day a statement was put out from Chicago from Chairman Roswell Miller to the effect that in addition to expenditures for the improvement of the property, "the December decrease was partly due to the increased cost of material."

AS VIEWED IN LONDON.

Discussing the financial statement of Louisville and Nashville for the first half of the current fiscal year, which was published in these columns some time ago, and showed a profit for the twelve months ended June 30, 1899, of $2,627,000, and an increase for the six months to Dec. 31 of $595,000, The London Statist says:

"The prospects of the present half year are good. The iron trade is very active, and the South generally is in a state of prosperity. The holding back of cotton by Southern planters for higher prices means a larger cotton traffic than usual in the June half year. Moreover, there is the possibility that the cotton may be marketed at better prices, which would bring increased profits to planters and further stimulate trade in the Southern States. It is, however, probable that liberal expenditures will be made upon the property. The company closed its construction account on July 1, 1894, and up to June 30, 1899, had charged over $2,500,000 to expenses for permanent improvements. So far as can at present be seen, the policy of the Directors is to maintain 4 per cent. distributions, and to apply surplus profits beyond the sum required for this purpose to improvements. Considering the very large amount of money spent by the competitors of the Louisville in reducing grades, &c., the necessity for such outlay is apparent. In the course of a few years the value of Louisville property would be greatly improved were it able to spend money freely upon betterments with the object of working more economically hereafter. The betterment outlays must therefore be regarded as tending to increase the probability of the maintenance of 4 per cent. distributions."

NEWS OF THE EXCHANGES.

The Cotton Exchange had an active and somewhat erratic day yesterday. Well over 400,000 bales changed hands. Cotton opened up 2 to 3 points on cable advices, which were better than had been expected in view of the war news. As the day's larger receipts began to become apparent, however, the market rapidly sold off, even though their proportions had been somewhat forecasted on Saturday. Cotton lost its advance and to a certain extent fell still further. In the majority of months cotton closed with a net loss of 2 points. The next crop months from September to December inclusive—were in strong contrast with the rest of the market, however, closing with a net gain of 3 to 4 points. The receipts for the day amounted to 40,210 bales, as against 33,392 a week previous, (considered a good day's receipts at the time) and 34,818 of a year previous. There is promise of large receipts for to-day also.

Coffee was fairly active yesterday and weak in spite of the moderate Brazilian receipts of 20,000 bags. It opened barely steady, 5 to 15 points off, and closed steady, with a net loss of 10 to 15 points.

Dealings on the Consolidated and Produce Exchanges were also fairly good. The Granger stocks were largely speculated in on the Consolidated, and they as well as the rest of the market showed more firmness than recent British disasters in South Africa had led many to expect. Wheat opened ⅝ up, on the Produce Exchange, and under the influence of profit-taking, which was induced by the slight advance and weak Liverpool cables, it lost this gain. Foreign buying in the later hours of the market raised it again, and at the close it had gained a cent a bushel. It went even higher in the desultory dealing which followed the regular market's close. Several cables confirming the news of the partial closing of the port of Rosario, Argentine Republic, were read by the trade.

Corn and oats were both steady. Oats were dull, but 400,000 bushels of corn were taken for export.

WALL STREET TOPICS.

Roswell Miller of the St. Paul Road quoted as saying that the decrease in net earnings of the company for December was mainly due to improvements made on the property.

Advance of half a cent in the posted rate for sight sterling exchange.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—There was an all-around despondency on the Stock Exchange to-day, opening with a general decline of two points in Rands and from one-quarter to one-half in other securities. Later there was a slight recovery, but business was inactive.

American railway shares opened weak, but later the market reacted and prices became generally harder, closing firm.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Trading in the market for outside securities was more active yesterday than it had been in many days, but by far the larger part of the day's business was supplied by one stock—Bay State Gas. In a few other issues also transactions were in fairly large amount, but the market generally was little different from that which prevailed all last week. Some disposition was shown to sell Amalgamated Copper, Distilling of America, and a few other stocks, and in these closing quotations were substantially below those of Saturday, but in other quarters of the market some net gains of consequence were recorded.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS was again actively traded in, principally in the common stock, which sold from 26 to 26⅝, and closed unchanged for the day at 26 bid. On this light fluctuation several thousand shares of the stock were traded in, but, notwithstanding the large supply, it held very firmly at 26. The sharp advance which this issue had made since last Thursday called a large amount of stock into the market, which was taken in a manner seeming to indicate that the buying of the stock was with the object of accumulating stock rather than advancing the price. Traders apparently made no effort yesterday to force the stock up. Offerings of the preferred stock as low as 46 were made early in the day, but later these were withdrawn and the stock closed at 45 bid, offered at 48. There was very little trading in the bonds, which ended the day with a slight net loss, at 92¾ bid. No news of importance in regard to the local gas companies was had during the day, and no further explanation appeared for the large buying of New Amsterdam common which has been noted for the past three or four days. Much less demand appears for the preferred stock, and the bonds also are weaker than they were a short while ago.

BAY STATE GAS was notably active, the transactions for the day reaching a total of more than 10,000 shares. Many lots of 500 shares changed hands, and the demand for it through the day was considerably in excess of the supply at the prevailing figures. It sold from 1⅞ up to 2¾ and closed at 2 bid, a net gain of a quarter of a point. Business in the stock broadened a good deal, and commission houses not usually prominent in Bay State were large buyers. The impression is general that a movement of some importance is indicated by the large demand that has developed for this stock during the past week, but what the reason for the demand is does not appear. A large part of the business represented transactions by traders who appeared to profit by the slight fluctuations without taking any decided position in the stock.

STANDARD OIL was fairly active, but more irregular than it had been at any time since the present upward movement began. It sold up to 519¼ and dropped back to 517, and at the close the best bid was 516, a net loss of 2 points. The reaction, in view of the large advance in the stock during the past ten days, was considered a very small one. It attracted no particular attention.

ELECTRIC VEHICLE sold to the extent of 350 shares at 43½ and closed at 43 bid, a net gain of 1 point. Forced liquidation seems to have been the most important factor in the recent decline in this stock, for no explanation of it is found in any news in regard to the company's condition.

GENERAL CARRIAGE, after selling as high as 5½, was offered down, and at the close sold as low as 4. It closed at 3⅝ bid, showing a net loss of half a point. The execution of a market order at a time when there was no active demand for the stock was the cause of the sharp decline.

TRUST COMPANY OF AMERICA sold in a full lot at 195, and later odd lots changed hands at 194. It improved fractionally at the end of the day, closing at 194½ bid, a slight recession from the nominal bid recorded at the close on Saturday.

CALIFORNIA COPPER was active, and on buying that seemed to be for insiders sold up to 4. It showed an advance of three-quarters of a point, closing at 4 bid.

AMALGAMATED COPPER was traded in to the extent of only 300 or 400 shares, and on these transactions suffered a net loss of a quarter of a point, closing at 82½ bid.

AMERICAN CHICLE preferred sold at 80. This was said to be the first sale of this issue made on the curb.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 29.—Trading was neither particularly active nor excessively dull in to-day's market. There was more strength than weakness. The coppers, although quiet, were firm, and had one or two fair gains to show at the closing. The railroad shares and United States Oil were the best spots in the list. Central Massachusetts common stock sold up to 14⅛ this morning on rumors that an injunction may be served on the Boston and Maine by Central Massachusetts stockholders to prevent a lease of the Fitchburg by the Boston and Maine, on the ground that the lease of the Fitchburg might be detrimental to Central Massachusetts stockholders.

At the Clearing House to-day 4 per cent. was still the nominal rate between the banks, but the business doing was small in amount. New York funds sold at 5 cents premium and par.

Money on call is loaning as low as 3½ per cent., though the more general rate is 4 per cent., and many banks are not quoting under 4½ per cent. Time money is in large supply at 4 per cent. on the very best names and collateral, and this rate might even be shaded in exceptional cases. The best mercantile names pass at 4@4½ per cent. Note brokers believe that the highest grade of mill paper might find a market as low as 3½ per cent. on four months.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 29.—There was little interest manifested in the market to-day outside of the dealings in Western New York and Pennsylvania securities, all of which were strong, touching the highest prices made on the present advance. The unfavorable war news from South Africa seems to have spent its force as far as its effect upon the local market is concerned. United Gas advanced to 150. This stock was in demand at 149½, with very little offered. Electric Storage Battery receded 1, to 77, but was again bought by a prominent Drexel Building house, which has been a conspicuous buyer for some time past. About the only other feature to the market was the strength of Asphalt securities, which, although unchanged in price, showed a decidedly strong undertone. Brokers are reported to be making fresh loans preparatory to what looks to be a more active market in the near future.

RAPID TRANSIT SITUATION

August Belmont & Co. Back Contractor McDonald.

STATEMENT OF MR. BELMONT

Big Surety Companies Reported to be Ready to Accept the Security—Labor's Attitude.

The construction company which John B. McDonald will form to build the rapid-transit tunnel and enable him to qualify with the surety companies will be backed by the banking firm of August Belmont & Co. This firm, it is understood, will head a syndicate to give Mr. McDonald the necessary support to go on with the work. Mr. McDonald made the admission yesterday afternoon that Mr. Belmont is his financial agent, but for further particulars referred all inquiries to Mr. Belmont.

"Yes, I am Mr. McDonald's financial agent," said Mr. Belmont some time later, "but at present I am not at liberty to make a further statement. As soon as the proper time arrives, I shall issue a statement setting forth our position in the matter."

The admissions of the contractor supported the prevailing belief that negotiations have so far advanced that the surety companies will accept the security offered and that Mr. McDonald will not need more than the extra ten days' time granted to him by the Rapid Transit Commissioners.

Nothing definite could be learned as to whether the firm of August Belmont & Co. will be Mr. McDonald's sole backers. De Lancey Nicoll, Mr. McDonald's counsel, the contractor himself, and representatives of the surety companies were in conference the greater part of the day and last evening. With the fact of solid backing in view, affairs seemed to assume a more tangible shape.

Andrew Freedman, resident Director of the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company of Baltimore, after a long talk with Mr. Nicoll, said he and Mr. McDonald had come to a practical agreement and that his company could take a certain amount of the required sum, just how much he was not yet prepared to say. There had been some technical difficulties in the way, he said, but they had all been brushed away.

The statement was again made that no difficulty or disagreement had prevailed on the question of the percentage required. It is now thought that, in addition to the original companies named in Mr. McDonald's bid, other companies will come in and divide among them the amount of the bonds. John A. Sullivan, representing the City Trust, Safe Deposit, and Surety Company of Philadelphia, after talking with counsel for Mr. McDonald, and also the Rapid Transit Commissioners, said his concern would take $500,000, and it was further said that the American Bond and Trust Company and the National Surety Company might also take a part of the guarantee.

On the other hand, however, rumor had it that a solution of the difficulty might be made in other ways, the suggestion being repeated that the construction company might provide the necessary security, and another to the effect that the entire guarantee on the bonds might revert to the original companies mentioned by Mr. McDonald.

While Mr. Nicoll would not admit that the formation of the construction company has advanced beyond the stage of a suggestion, he seemed hopeful that everything would be settled soon.

"We are getting along smoothly," he said, "and it is very likely that this business of the bonds will be settled by the end of the week, when Mr. McDonald will be ready to go ahead with the tunnel."

Mr. Nicoll begged to be excused from discussing affairs concerning Mr. Belmont as a backer of his client.

President Alexander E. Orr was asked if the Commissioners would give Mr. McDonald more time to qualify. His reply was that he was in favor of allowing Mr. McDonald all the time he needs consistent with the terms of the bid. This matter was discretionary with the board, he said. Both Mr. Orr and Edward M. Shepard, of counsel for the board, signified, however, that the contractor would not be allowed such leeway as would deprive the board of the privilege of taking advantage of the bid of Mr. Onderdonk. Mr. Shepard said he had every expectation that Mr. McDonald would qualify certainly by the end of the second ten days.

In view of the resolution passed by the Central Federated Union on Sunday that none but citizens shall be employed on the tunnel, the question came up as to how far the possible influx of foreign labor might affect the home market. Mr. Shepard, in answer to a question, said one of the requirements of the contract is that the provisions of the labor laws of the State must prevail and that the rate of wages to be paid must not be less than the prevailing rate. Mr. McDonald has said that inasmuch as he will let to sub-contractors they will employ such labor as they see fit, subject, of course, to the requirements of the law and the contract. Mr. McDonald contented himself with the remark that he would be more in a position to discuss the labor phase of the problem after he has signed the contract, but he said he did not propose to have any strikes on the tunnel if he could help it.

PUPIL'S CHARGES HEARD.

Mr. Jasper Investigating Case of Teacher Swick Accused of Violence Against Young Emil Niglutsch.

Borough Superintendent Jasper yesterday began an investigation in the case of David A. Swick, a substitute teacher in Public School No. 39, 235 East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, who is accused of severely beating Emil Niglutsch, a fifteen-year-old pupil, on Friday afternoon last. The boy is the son of Francis R. Niglutsch, a publisher at 39 East Nineteenth Street, and who lives at 331 East One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Street.

Swick was graduated from the City College in June last. According to his statement, the boys in his class tried to have fun at his expense. They were so unruly on Friday afternoon, he alleges, that he kept half a dozen of them in after school hours. Among the boys was Niglutsch.

The teacher at 4:10 o'clock was about to let him go, when he noticed paper under his desk and ordered him to pick it up. Young Niglutsch refused. Thereupon, the boy says, Swick struck him. Then he called Swick several opprobious names. Swick, he says, struck him in the eye. He ran down stairs, Swick in pursuit. In the street he threw a stone at the teacher. Then he dropped, and Swick fell over him. A man passing by held Swick, and Niglutsch ran home. One of his eyes was closed, his lips were cut, and his nose was bleeding.

As soon as the boy's father returned home and heard the news he called on the Principal of the school, Dr. John P. Conroy, who promised to make an investigation. The Vice Principal asked Swick for an explanation. Swick would not admit striking the boy, but admitted chasing him. Mr. Niglutsch insisted that the teacher should apologize before the school. Swick refused to do so. Mr. Niglutsch then complained to Superintendent Jasper.

"If I find that the teacher was in the wrong," said Mr. Jasper yesterday, "I can prevent him from acting as a substitute, and when his name is reached on the eligible list for regular teacher I can prevent his appointment."

NOT MRS. McKINLEY'S MAID.

Story Alleged Shoplifter Was in President's Household Denied.

Louise Berger, forty-two years old, of 428 West Thirty-ninth Street, and Ernestine Luciane, thirty-three years old, of 122 West One Hundred and Twenty-second Street, were arrested in a Sixth Avenue store on Dec. 21 charged with shoplifting. They were accused of stealing $59 worth of gloves, silks, ribbons, &c., and were put on trial in the Court of General Sessions yesterday.

George Barnard, a detective employed by the store, called at the West Thirtieth Street Police Station last night and told Sergt. Daly that he had learned that the Berger woman was until thirty days before her arrest maid to Mrs. McKinley, the President's wife. He declined to say anything to reporters "for business reasons."

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—Nothing is known at the White House of Louise Berger, who is on trial in New York for shoplifting. The statement that she was Mrs. McKinley's maid up to November last is declared to be false. Mrs. McKinley has the same maid now that she had before she came to Washington, and there has been no change since her arrival here.

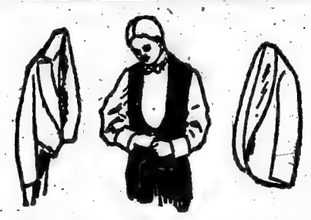
HOW NOT TO DO IT.

Buy a small lot of well-known desirable goods of which you think competitors have many—advertise them below cost, sell as slowly as possible, and when loss becomes serious, back out. —Thus a good thing may be spoilt, manufacturer injured, customers annoyed and reputation lost.

MORAL.

'Tis easy to invite a quarrel unless One has Courage. Unless you're game, don't try for fame.

EXAMPLE: DIMITIES.



No matter who makes your evening clothes, they're no good unless they fit. No matter who makes them, you can't get more than good cloth and fit.

Our cloths are the very best money can buy. We make to fit.

Evening dress suits $30 to $50. Tuxedo coats $16 to $27. White waistcoats $4 to $6. Dress shirts; shirt-studs; silk hose; pumps; white gloves; opera or silk hat—all the dress requirements.

Jack Frost is a good fellow if you get on the warm side of him.

Ulsters $15 to $30; overcoats $15 to $50.

The Big Furniture Sale

Will Continue All This Week!

We believe we sold more Furniture yesterday than all the rest of the retail houses in New York combined, and we ought to, for never in the history of the Furniture trade have such bargains been given. Think of it! Selling Furniture cheaper than the cost of making it two years ago, when prices were at their lowest.

If you want a piece of Furniture to complete the furnishing of some room, nook or corner, this is your opportunity. Come any day this week. You'll not be disappointed, for the stock is large enough, we believe, to last until closing time Saturday. Remember, that although every article on sale is an extraordinary bargain,

Early Buyers Will Secure the Best Choice.

PULLAR'S LOVE FOR LIQUOR.

Man Who Accuses ex-Gov. Waller and A. R. Page Admits Drinking Forty Glasses a Day.

Joseph W. Pullar made his first appearance on the witness stand yesterday in the suit which he has instituted against ex-Gov. Thomas M. Waller of Connecticut, Alfred R. Page, and others in the Supreme Court, before Justice Bischoff, to set aside his transfer to them of his fifty-thousand-dollar interest in the estate of his second wife, Mrs. Johanna Pullar, and which he asserts they obtained from him under duress, at a midnight meeting at the Hotel Imperial, Oct. 14, 1897. One of his contentions is that they knew at the time his mental faculties had been so impaired by the use of alcoholic stimulants that he was in no condition to transact business and another that he signed the paper under threats of prosecution for bigamy in marrying the woman who had left him the property when he had another wife living. His drinking habits during 1897 were the subject of examination yesterday.

"How many drinks of whisky did you take in the course of the day?" he was asked by his counsel, W. D. Benjamin.

"Oh, thirty or forty," he responded. He also testified that it was his custom to fill a quart bottle with whisky from a demijohn before he retired, and he always drank it all during the night. The only time he ever stopped drinking was when he was taken ill as a result of it. He said he was forty-six years old and had left school at fourteen and gone to work as an errand boy. He was for nearly twenty years in the employ of the Adams Express Company.

He said that he first met Mr. Page socially at a Republican club which had its headquarters over a saloon at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and Seventh Avenue, and retained him when his wife's relatives threatened to break her will on account of his alleged bigamy. Mr. Page, he said, was the first lawyer with whom he had had any business dealings. He had received $15,000, but soon lost it. "I lent money to my friends when they wanted it," he said.

Gen. Burnett, counsel for the defense, made application for permission to have Pullar examined by a physician who, he said, had been watching the proceedings and who would take the stand. Mr. Benjamin vigorously opposed this, and Justice Bischoff left the matter in abeyance.

John C. McKnight, a lifelong friend of Pullar, testified to efforts he had made to restrain him from drinking during the latter part of 1897. He had considered him irrational.

Mrs. Annie Donnelly, the nurse who had attended Mrs. Pullar during her last illness, corroborated Pullar's own story about his filling the whisky bottle every night, and said it held more than a quart. She said Pullar was always plainly under the influence of liquor when he came home in the evening, yet had taken the sick woman out driving in Central Park at such times as long as her condition would permit. Mrs. Donnelly said she had never seen him sober except on the day of his wife's death. She had to engage a lawyer to get her pay.

The case continues to-day.

SOPHIE LAD COUR'S CASE.

Health Board Not to Blame for Delay in Burying Diphtheria Victim.

Officials of the Board of Health yesterday disclaimed responsibility for the delay in the burial of little Sophie Lad Cour of 216 West Twenty-seventh Street, who died of diphtheria on Thursday and whose body was not buried until Sunday owing to the delay in the issuing of a death certificate. It was said, however, there had been no danger of the contagion spreading, as the case had been quarantined.

The child was five years old. Her parents, who are French Canadians, are poor. The mother took the girl on Wednesday to the Northwestern Dispensary, at Thirty-sixth Street and Ninth Avenue. Dr. H. G. Mac-Adam told her to take the child home, as it was suffering from diphtheria. He visited the house and prescribed for the little girl, and as he was about leaving town he gave the address of an associate who was to be summoned in case of need. He then notified the Board of Health, which sent a diagnostician to look into the case.

The Health official who called found the child improved and as the mother refused to have it removed to a hospital he gave her an order by which she could have the department remove it should she change her mind. She was instructed also as to maintaining quarantine.

The next day the woman called at the Health Department and said the child was dead. She wanted a death certificate and was told that it would be necessary first to get permission from the Coroner to remove the body. The Coroner's office was notified and Dr. Williams took the case. When he reached the house no one was in to give the necessary information on which to make out a certificate, and he left word for some one to be sent to his house in West Fourteenth Street.

The father of the child failed to find the Coroner's physician at his private office, and it was the next day, Saturday, when the case was again called to the attention of the Board of Health. The necessary permit from the Coroner was then procured and the child was taken away Sunday by the Health Department.

MRS. LATHROP'S CANCER HOME.

Criticism of Mr. Carnegie—Three Years' Work and Contributions.

Mrs. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop made public yesterday an account of the past three years' work of the St. Rose's Free Home for the cancerous poor. Incidentally, she criticises some of Mr. Carnegie's public utterances in the following language:

"I am sure that if Mr. Carnegie would spend three months of hard labor among the poor he would refrain from misleading his hearers and readers by statements of policy that are unjust to suffering. If his words were received with careful attention they would do no harm, but who is listened to by the many with a careful attention?

"Mr. Carnegie uses the words 'indiscriminate almsgiving, and no one, scarcely, will keep the 'indiscriminate' qualification in mind, but suppose that he means to veto, from his Parnassus, almsgiving in general. The idolator of libraries must have left one book unopend, more or less. A millionaire who should toss his million-dollar largesse into the streets of New York slums would be a madman; the millionaire who should devote $1,000,000 to the relief of suffering, sick, and starving women and children today would be no more mad than if he invested the money for the benefit of the business success of young men.

"I do not know but that Mr. Carnegie would be interested in the care of the sick; I never asked him. But as a companion of the poor in the slums, I believe that his careless words will do harm to truth of a very delicate and a very holy nature, in so far as he is listened to and remembered."

Mrs. Lathrop's report shows that the total number of persons helped at the home was 462. The expenditures were $29,100. The following money gifts were received: Miss Ogden, $1; J. Warren Greene, $25; Mrs. David B. Insin, $25; Mrs. Mary Lee, $5; Miss M. Augusta Rohda, $4; Miss Mary Eleanor Miller, $1; A Friend, Chicago, $500; David C. Townsend, $5; Miss Emma Linahan, $5; Charles G. Irish, $10; John Innes Kane, $25; C. A. Starbuck, $100; J. A. C., $2; Mrs. Eliza A. Bulkly, $50; Miss Elizabeth Harper, $10; In His Name, $10; M. A., $5; H. J. Douglas, $5; Mrs. F. A. Moulton, $25; Mrs. M. R. Greenleaf, $5; J. Warren Greene, $25; Christian Herald Readers, $23.15; Anonymous, $1; R. Tyson White, $10; Anonymous, $2; Mrs. Charles B. Camp, $5; Miss E. Griffiths, $1; Mrs. Kate McCrea, $5; Mrs. G. M. Cortis, $20; Miss Burke, $1; Mrs. Gillen, $1; Miss Goddard, 50 cents; Mrs. Lathrop, $1; Mrs. Gorman, $1; Mrs. Townsend, $5; Miss Rohda, $4; Miss E. C. Regliter, $5; small sums received in December, 1899, $75; total, $1,084.65.

MR. PAGE FORGIVES ELOPERS.

The Gibsons Will Be Received with Open Arms at Author's Home.

Preston Gibson, the Princeton student, and Miss Mina Field, stepdaughter of Thomas Nelson Page, the author, who were clandestinely married, will be received with open arms at the Washington home of the Pages. Mr. Page, who came to the city on Sunday, on hearing of the marriage, said yesterday:

"Everything is all right. I was advised of the marriage by telegraph. A little more romantic than necessary, but then all is forgotten and forgiven. I would tell you all about it, but the fact is we desire to avoid publicity. Where are the young couple? Well—I can't say, but I rather expect they will be in Washington very shortly."

PARK MENAGERIE EXECUTION.

Death Warrant of Hybrid Buffalo Signed and Carried Out.

The big hybrid buffalo of the Central Park menagerie was formally executed at dawn yesterday morning, "for the good of the service," as his keepers put it. The executioners were Keepers Shannon and Snyder, and the place of execution was the camel house, of which the buffalo had been an occupant for some time. The buffalo had outlived his usefulness as an exhibit. The animal was presented to the city three years ago by the Barnum Circus, in which the bison had been for many years. Hybrid buffaloes had ceased even then to be an attraction, but Superintendent Smith of the menagerie had spare room for the buffalo, and the city accepted the gift. The buffalo had a ring in his nose, and by this he was led around the circus rings in his younger days. The Park menagerie has a surplus of buffaloes of the higher type, and for some time Superintendent Smith has had to give up a part of the camel house to accommodate his hybrid guest, much to the annoyance of the camels.

In a few days some of the animals in the Park will have the flesh of the buffalo served to them for their meals.

STAGE STUDENT'S FATAL JUMP.

Prostrated by Hard Study, Lafroy Lough Killed Himself.

Lafroy Lough, twenty-one years old, a boarder at 236 West Forty-fourth Street, killed himself yesterday afternoon by jumping from the window in his room, on the fifth floor of his boarding house.

Lough was a native of Nova Scotia. He came to this city eighteen months ago to study for the stage. Of late, it is said, he desired to become a physician, and to others said he wanted to be an artist.

During his residence here Lough studied very hard, and it is believed that his mind became affected. For the past few days he had betrayed signs of disordered mental condition. Yesterday afternoon, soon after luncheon, he was visited by his friend, Fred D. Streeter, of 152 West One Hundred and First Street. He complained to Streeter that he was not well, and the latter said he would go for a physician. Streeter had barely left the room when Lough opened the window and deliberately threw himself out.

George Good, who lives at 234 West Forty-fourth Street, saw the man fall, and, summoning help, had him carried into the kitchen of No. 236. Policemen Wolstenholme and Glennon of the West Forty-seventh Street Station were summoned, and they sent to Roosevelt Hospital for a physician. Dr. Clark of the hospital staff was soon attending Lough, but the latter died within a half hour after he had jumped.

NEW YORK LEGISLATURE.—A caucus of Republican Senators voted unanimously to confirm the nomination of Francis Hendricks to succeed Louis F. Payn as Superintendent of Insurance. Among the bills passed was one offered by Senator Humphrey amending the banking law, and one by Assemblyman Hill providing $100,000 for a State building at the Pan-American Exposition. A compromise measure has been agreed upon which will insure the payment of the overdue salaries of school teachers.—Page 5.

CONGRESS.—One witness was heard by the Senate committee in the Clark investigation. He said he voted for Clark, but while he received money from other sources, he got none for his vote. Senator Bacon argued for his Philippine resolution yesterday. The House session was short. John De Witt Warner of New York appeared before the House committee having the matter in charge to protest against the passage of the Shipping Subsidy bill. The delay of the Senate in ratifying pending treaties is being criticised.—Page 5.

FOREIGN.—Gen. Buller reports that his casualties on Jan. 20 and Jan. 21 were 256 in killed, wounded, and missing. The Boers are accused of firing on the hospital at Kimberley. Gen. French reports a slight skirmish with the Boers near Colesberg. It is reported that the Boer shell factory at Johannesburg has been blown up. Russia has authorized the taking up of a 225,000,000-ruble loan in Persia. A tornado in Newfoundland yesterday blew a train of cars from the track into a bog. A Scotch prizefighter died yesterday from a blow received in a fight Monday.—Pages 1 and 6.

MAY BE OVERDUE STEAMERS.

State of Nebraska and the Ethiopia Thought to Have Been Sighted Off Fire Island.

A steamer was sighted off Fire Island at 8 o'clock last night which is believed to be the long-overdue Anchor liner Ethiopia, from Glasgow, Jan. 11.

The vessel was so far away from the observatory at the time this report was made that her signals could not be made out distinctly.

Up to 1:30 o'clock this morning nothing further had been seen of the steamer. The steamer is evidently coming very slowly, as the run from Fire Island to Sandy Hook is usually made in about three or four hours.

Another steamer passed Fire Island at 1:20 o'clock this morning which is probably the State of Nebraska. She made no signals but from her appearance and rig she is in all probability the overdue vessel.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION ROW.

Mayor of Philadelphia to Appoint a New Citizens' Committee.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 30.—Fears are entertained that this city might lose the Republican National Convention, and the outcome of the meeting of 100 citizens to-morrow with Mayor Ashbridge is awaited with anxiety. The situation was made more complicated by the action of the old Citizens' Committee, now in power, which to-night condemned the Mayor's interference. Mayor Ashbridge has sent out invitations asking 100 of Philadelphia's public-spirited citizens to attend a meeting to-morrow, when the matter of the convention will be discussed and the new committee organized. This was done in spite of the fact that the old Citizens' Committee has been successful in raising the $100,000, and its members refuse to be deposed by the Mayor. His radical action is likely to cause great trouble, and Senator Hanna is expected to be present to-morrow in order to settle the dispute finally.

Edward Everett Hale's Successor.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 30.—The South Congregational Church, at a largely attended special meeting to-night, accepted the resignation of the Rev. Edward Everett Hale, making him pastor emeritus, and then elected to the pastorate the Rev. Samuel A. Eliot, the Secretary of the American Unitarian Association. The tribute to Dr. Hale's services, which the Secretary presented, is an eloquent testimonial to his worth. The newly elected pastor is the son of President Eliot of Harvard University, and is thirty-eight years of age. Previous to his election to his present official position he was pastor of a Unitarian church in Brooklyn.

Chicago Imports Belgian Hares.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—More than 700 Belgian hares, the animal that English poultry dealers sell as a substitute for chicken and turkey, were brought to Chicago in a special stock car yesterday. The hares came from England. Each weighs in the neighborhood of eight pounds, and is colored somewhat like the common rabbit, but with a ruddier tinge. Some of them are valued at $100 each.

Cincinnati Gives Up the Convention.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 30.—The project to obtain the National Democratic Convention for Cincinnati has fallen through. W. B. Melish of the committee says the railroads favor Kansas City or Milwaukee, and these cities have offered substantial donations to the campaign fund.

GREAT BRITAIN FEARS NEW FOES?

Troops Are Kept at Home Awaiting Eventualities.

THE FLEET MAY BE MOBILIZED

Would Be a Warning to Europe Not to Interfere.

Talk Now in London of Calling Out All the Available Remaining Militia of the United Kingdom.

LONDON, Jan. 31.—It is now known that the Cabinet devoted much of its discussions on Saturday to the mobilization of the fleet. Nothing was settled except that, until further security to the home coasts has obtained by naval preparations, the Eighth Division shall not be sent to South Africa.

On Monday the Admiralty issued orders that the Channel Squadron, instead of leaving Portland this week for Gibraltar, as previously directed, shall assemble on Feb. 5 off Eddystone and proceed to Bantry for a fortnight's exercises, off the Irish coast, thus keeping in home waters for a time.

This decision to delay the Eighth Division at a time when reinforcements are so urgently required may only mean that transports are not yet available, and that the division will embark when the shipping is ready; but this is causing much comment.

The mobilization of reserve warships, if such a course shall be determined upon, would be of the utmost importance. There is nothing in the intelligence possessed by the public to cause the Cabinet's prolonged discussion of this matter; and the inference is that the fleet may be mobilized as a general warning to other countries to keep their hands off the Transvaal question, or the Ministry may have definite knowledge that the neutral powers purpose to take some advantages elsewhere, while England is busy in South Africa.

One thing is certain. Ten thousand men, all ready to go to South Africa, are detained for reasons of which the public has no knowledge.

There is talk of forty-seven militia battalions being embodied. These are all of the militia not previously warned.

GEN. BULLER NOT DISCOURAGED

LONDON, Jan. 31.—The Cape Town correspondent of The Daily Mail, telegraphing yesterday, says:

"Gen. Buller yesterday (Monday) read the following message from the Queen to Sir Charles Warren's force:

"'I must express my admiration of the troops during the past trying week, especially of those regiments you specify, and of the accomplishment of your arduous march.'

"Gen. Buller then told the men that they ought not to think, because they had retired from their position, that all their work was of no avail. On the contrary, in his opinion, they had gained the key of the road to Ladysmith, in which he hoped to be within a week.

"Gen. Buller then called for cheers for the Queen, which were heard for miles around."

A dispatch to The Times from Frere Camp, dated Jan. 26, and describing the capture of Spion Kop, says:

"It is impossible to exaggerate the strategic importance of the hill. It was held by the Boers in weakly fashion only because Gen. Warren's attack during the last three days had been one on the extreme left, two miles away."

The dispatch adds but little to what has already been cabled.

ROBERTS'S PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.

LONDON, Jan. 31.—Spenser Wilkinson, the war expert, reviewing the military situation in The Morning Post, says:

"There is again a remarkable scarcity of information about what is taking place in the theatre of war. There must be more than one hundred war correspondents at the front; but they are kept silent.

"The column under Gen. Kelly-Kenny has occupied Thebus, about ninety miles by railway from Colesberg, where Gen. French is operating, and about forty-five miles from Stormberg Junction, where the Boers opposed to Gen. Gatacre are believed to be. The strength of Gen. Kelly-Kenny's column is not told, but as that officer commands the Sixth Division the whole of which has reached Cape Town, and as there is no word of any part of it having gone to Natal, the probability is that the column is identical with the division.

"At any rate, it is to be hoped that this is the case and that the last has been heard of breaking up divisions into fragments. The dispatch of this column, if, as must be presumed, it is strong enough for independent operations, portends a great deal.

"In the first place, it means that the campaign in Natal is to be left to take care of itself. For, if the Sixth Division is at Thebus, there is no other force at Cape Town capable of turning the balance in Natal. Ladysmith, then, is not to be relieved. Its garrison must hold out as long as possible or make a desperate attempt to fight its way out, unless, indeed, Gen. Buller with such forces as he has, tries a third time to drive back the Boer Army.

"This decision implies that the war will be prolonged, and that the Boers are to be given time to push their advantage in Natal. They will try to overcome Sir George White's force, and to take the offensive against Gen. Buller, whose army they would in that case, perhaps, be able to hold by putting several parts of their own more mobile force in positions on his front, flanks, and rear. Gen. Buller would keep them occupied as long as his supplies and ammunition lasted.

"During these operations the British forces in Cape Colony and the reinforcements on the way would be collected into an army to march through the Free State. If that march could be rapid enough to produce an effect on the mind of the Boer Commander in Chief, while Gen. Buller's force is still occupying him, the plan might lead to a decisive result, but there can hardly be a start for another month, and a march through the Free State must take a month at least. It is not easy to-day to foresee what can happen in Natal by the end of March.

"Meanwhile the mission of Gen. Kelly-Kenny does not altogether explain itself. It seems a little strange that the new column should not first have been sent to the assistance of Gen. French, who has hemmed in a force of Boers, but finds them reinforced from the north. Anything like a division added to Gen. French's force ought to enable him to destroy the Boer forces with which he is dealing, by completing his circle around them and then gradually closing it in upon them.

"The formation of a fresh column while this kind of concentration was possible looks like a continuation of the old policy of dispersion instead of concentration. Gen. Kelly-Kenny will have to mend the railway bridge at Steynsburg as he moves eastward, and as his advance continues he will enter a hilly and perhaps difficult country."

BOER SHELL WORKS BLOWN UP.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—A special dispatch from Durban says a refugee who has arrived there from Johannesburg reports the destruction of the Boer shell factory at that place on Jan. 20. The loss, it is added, is irreparable.

SHARP FIGHT NEAR MAFEKING.

LORENZO MARQUES, Jan. 29.—Special dispatches from Pretoria, dated Thursday, Jan. 25, report that a collision occurred at Crocodile Pool between Boer outposts and the British, who were in overwhelming force.

The burghers at first retired, but, on being reinforced, drove the British from their position. The Boers had two wounded.

BOERS FIRE ON A HOSPITAL?

KIMBERLEY, Jan. 26.—The wholesale bombardment which lasted all day long yesterday was resumed this morning. The Boers sent 380 shells into all parts of Kimberley. There were several casualties, including a woman and child.

The favorite target appears to have been the hospital. A shrapnel shell exploded close to a hearse which was proceeding to the cemetery, and a shell burst in the cemetery during the funeral.

DR. LEYDS WILL GO TO RUSSIA.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 30.—The newspapers here announce that Dr. Leyds, the Diplomatic Representative of the Transvaal, will spend a few days in this city next week.

BERLIN, Jan. 30.—Berlin financiers assert with reference to the report that Dr. Leyds came to Berlin to raise a loan that there would not be the slightest possibility of his succeeding, as the Transvaal has no guarantee to offer.

A correspondent has information, however, that since his arrival Dr. Leyds has repeatedly conferred with the Foreign Secretary, Count von Bülow, regarding the situation created by the war.

MORE CASUALTIES REPORTED.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—Gen. Buller reports that the casualties to the non-commissioned officers and men in the two actions of Jan. 20 and Jan. 21 were 17 killed, 233 wounded, and 6 missing.

BRITISH OFFICERS ARE BLAMED.

BERLIN, Jan. 30.—The British defeats in South Africa continue to engross public attention. Gen. von Bogus[illegible] is a leading military writer, said to-day:

"What strikes military men as most unfavorable is the total lack of topographical knowledge among the British officers. Under analogous conditions, for example, our General Staff would long ago have studied the topography of Spion Kop. We admit the bravery of the soldiers, but utterly condemn the incapacity of their leaders.

"As for Great Britain's prestige, she must be counted a world power so long as her fleet is intact, but the reputation of her army is absolutely gone. Moreover, it is quite certain that the British Navy has failings, which will appear the first time there is a serious collision. For instance, the naval guns are not up to requirements."

According to reliable private reports received here, the Cape Dutch are still joining the Boer forces.

The German press expresses the belief that Great Britain has about reached the end of her military resources and would do well to acknowledge defeat and to conclude peace. The Kreuz Zeitung, which attributes her reverses largely to the absence of compulsory military service, says:

"Among the most interesting results of the South African campaign is the much-denied truth that the worth of nations is weighed in war's balance, and England is already in the midst of catastrophe."

The Deutsche Tages Zeitung says it is evident that not only Gen. Warren, but Gen. Buller's whole force has been defeated on the Tugela. This it calls the "beginning of the end."

GEN. FRENCH HAS A SKIRMISH.

RENSBURG, Cape Colony, Jan. 26.—Gen. French reconnoitred yesterday beyond Basstard's Nek with a force of Hussars, Inniskillings, four guns of the Royal Artillery, mounted infantry, the Yorkshire, Wiltshire, and a portion of the Essex regiments.

Turning to the northeast, he approached the Boer position at Rietfontein, nine miles beyond Colesburg, on the wagon bridge road, which the enemy have been fortifying with a view of falling back when they evacuate Colesburg.

Cautiously approaching, Gen. French shelled the enemy, who replied with artillery and infantry fire.

The British, who were well protected, suffered but little. An officer and nine men were wounded, one of the latter of whom has since died, and three men are missing.

As the Boers were found in great force, confirming the reported reinforcement, and in a strong position, Gen. French discontinued the attack and returned to camp.

PRETORIA, Jan. 27.—A dispatch from Colesburg, Cape Colony, says Commander Delaroy reports that a large body of British advanced Thursday, Jan. 25, and he attacked them, causing the British to retire after suffering severe loss. The Boer casualties were two men slightly wounded.

Gen. Grobler reports heavy fighting since daybreak, the British, in great force, endeavoring to surround the Boer positions. Gen. Schoeman hastened to the assistance of Gen. Grobler. Gen. Schoeman returned this evening, and reports that the British were repulsed, and that the Boers maintained their positions. The Boer loss was four men slightly and one man severely wounded. The British loss is not known, but must be severe.

TRANSVAAL WAR RELIEF FUND.

Committee to Receive Contributions from British Sympathizers.

"The Transvaal War Relief Fund" is the caption of an appeal which has been issued by the New York committee which has been formed to obtain contributions to the fund opened by the Lord Mayor of London. The fund is designed to relieve the suffering and destitution resulting from the war in South Africa. Specifically, it is used to relieve the widows and orphans, the sick and wounded, disabled soldiers and sailors, and wives and children in temporary distress.

The committee appeals for subscriptions to residents of New York and vicinity who have British affiliations or are in sympathy with the object, and small sums are solicited as well as large ones. They can be sent to any of the members of the Executive Committee, whose names and addresses are as follows: Almeric Paget, Chairman of the General Committee, 80 Broadway; R. M. Stuart-Wortley, Chairman of the Executive Committee, 70 Broadway; Cecil Baring, Treasurer, Baring, Magoun & Co., 15 Wall Street; John Foord, Secretary, 312 Manhattan Avenue; the Rev. W. S. GOEBEL WINS THE KENTUCKY CONTEST

The Board Finds for Him on a Strict Party Vote.

DRAWS UP ITS REPORT

Legislators Try to Take Immediate Action, but Fail.

No Quorum Could Be Gathered for Night Session—Republicans Will Resort to the Courts.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 30.—While William Goebel lay at the point of death in his room as the result of an assassin's bullet, the contesting boards, which for two weeks had been listening to the evidence in his contest for the Governor's chair, declared him entitled to the seat.

The boards having in charge the contests between Goebel and Taylor for Governor and Beckham and Marshall for Lieutenant Governor met at 7 o'clock to-night in the City Hall to consider the evidence submitted to them and prepare their report to the Legislature.

A few legal authorities were read to them at the request of Senator Allen, who wished light shed upon a few doubtful points. The vote was then taken, and by a strict party vote of 10 to 1 William Goebel was declared to have been legally elected Governor of Kentucky.

The Beckham-Marshall contest was then voted upon, and a vote of 9 to 2 settled this matter. No announcement was made of the reasons leading up to the report being made to-night, the boards taking everything at one leap. Each one of the members of both committees announced that he had made up his mind as to the merits of the case, and voted promptly as his name was called.

In the contest for Governor, Representative Garberry was the one to vote in favor of Taylor, and in the Beckham-Marshall contest Reid and Lilly were with Marshall.

Prior to the night session a session had been held late in the afternoon at which counsel for Gov. Taylor asked a postponement, saying that in the state of the public mind it would be idle to argue the case. Postponement being refused, it was agreed that argument should be dispensed with and the board meet at 7 o'clock to receive citations of authorities and consider a verdict.

DEPLORES THE SHOOTING.

Messrs. Edelen and W. C. P. Breckinridge of Taylor's counsel said they did not fear for their personal safety, but Gov. Taylor's counsel had been threatened with the same fate as Goebel. Chairman Hickman said he thought the attorneys were perfectly safe.

Mr. Lilly, the Republican member of the Lieutenant Gubernatorial Board, then addressed the board, saying:

"No heart is more pained than mine over the occurrence of to-day. I want to say that my mind is made up in this case, and ten years of argument could not change it.

"Assassination is a crime of the most heinous character, and I can under no circumstances fail to express the profoundest contempt for its perpetrator and instigator. The political debates arouse passion, I feel it myself, and so does each of you. Nothing that could be said would have a good influence."

Senator Allen, Democrat, followed Mr. Lilly. He said he had not made up his mind and had depended on the argument for his opinion. He was in doubt, he said, as to the law involved. He said he wanted legal authority as to military interference and irregular ballots. On his motion the boards agreed to consider the authorities cited by counsel.

WANT IMMEDIATE ACTION.

Only a few members of the Legislature attended the session at which the verdict was reached. An effort was made by a number of Democrats to get together a quorum of both Houses, hold a night session, hear the reports of the two committees at once, and adopt them, and declare Goebel the Governor of Kentucky before morning.

They were anxious to give him the honor before he died. So many legislators had gone to Louisville and Lexington for to-night that it was found impossible to carry out the programme. It is a certainty that Goebel will be made Governor to-morrow if he is alive.

A clash between the members of the Legislature and the military was narrowly averted to-night. The rumor was carried to the office of the Adjutant General that the Democratic members of the Legislature had determined to hold a night session in the Opera House, receive the report of the contesting board, declare Goebel Governor, and seize the State government. No such thing was contemplated, although it had been discussed by different members of the House.

When the word was received by the militia officers it was determined to break up the meeting. The "Assembly" was sounded and the troops formed for a march to the Opera House. They had reached the south gate of the Capitol grounds when word was brought that no meeting was to be held and the soldiers returned to their quarters.

The Republicans will probably as soon as the decision is rendered in favor of Goebel make application in the United States Circuit Court at Cincinnati for an injunction restraining Goebel and Beckham from taking their seats, and the battle will then be continued before Judge Taft of that court.

The Republican attorneys and Gov. Taylor are confident that at least a temporary injunction will be granted and that the ultimate victory will be in their favor.

The grounds upon which the injunction will be asked are the prejudice of the Legislative body, the alleged unfitness of several members of the board to sit in judgment upon the case, and several other grounds which the attorneys decline to-night to discuss.

The following report was made out late to-night by a majority of the contest board. The minority reports will be drawn up to-morrow:

THE BOARD'S REPORT.

"The undersigned, the board appointed and selected by the General Assembly to determine the contested election for the office of Governor for this Commonwealth between William Goebel, contestant, and William S. Taylor, contestee, beg leave to report that we have heard all the evidence offered by both parties, and we now respectfully report to the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky that in our opinion William Goebel was legally elected Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky on the 7th day of November, 1899, and that he then and there received the highest number of legal votes cast for any one for the office of Governor of Kentucky at said election, and we therefore respectfully suggest that this report be approved, and a resolution adopted by this joint assembly declaring the said William Goebel Governor-elect of the Commonwealth of Kentucky for the term commencing the 12th day of December, 1899.

"We decide that the said William Goebel has received the highest number of legal votes, and is adjudged to be the person elected to said office of Governor for the term prescribed by law."

The report in the case of the contest for Lieutenant Governor is identical, with the exception of the names.

TORPEDO BOAT'S CREW LOST.

Goes Down with the Vessel, Whose Name Is Unknown.

CORUNNA, Spain, Jan. 30.—A report has reached here from Finisterre that a torpedo boat, name and nationality unknown, has been totally lost with all on board.

HYDROPHOBIA STILL SPREADS.

More Cattle in Pennsylvania Are Becoming Diseased.

Special to The New York Times.

BELLEFONTE, Penn., Jan. 30.—The hydrophobia epidemic among the cattle in this county continues to spread, and especially in the vicinity of Miles and Brush Townships. Dr. Riter of the State Live Stock Sanitary Board and his assistant, Dr. Burd, who arrived here yesterday from Harrisburg, are making every effort to prevent the disease from spreading, but with little success.

All the farms in that part of the county are quarantined, and the cattle are running wild in the stables, breaking stalls and knocking off their horns. One animal is known to have broken its neck. The disease is found to exist in its worst form. Some of the cattle have been killed and their brains sent to Harrisburg for a chemical analysis.

It is the general opinion that the disease originated in the bite of a mad dog that ran wild through the valley last week. While authorities are determined to overcome it, it has gained such headway that there is little chance of its being conquered for some time.

THE BROOKLYN DINNER PLANS.

Stated that It Will Not Be a Sound-Money Gathering.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Representatives Clayton and Fitzgerald, who have been looking after the arrangements for the Democratic banquet in Brooklyn on Feb. 10, have secured promises from several prominent Southern and Western Democrats in the House of Representatives that they will attend and speak. They are Mr. Richardson, the Democratic leader in the House; Swanson and Hay of Virginia, Williams of Mississippi, Clayton of Alabama, and De Armond of Missouri. Mr. Ryan of New York has also accepted an invitation.

The political and geographical make-up of this list of speakers disposes of the idea that it is to be a "sound-money dinner." Mr. Driggs said to-night that the impression that it was to be so limited was erroneous. It was to be a Democratic dinner and was to afford an opportunity for the Democrats of the Greater New York to make the acquaintance of the Democrats of the South and West.

THE STANDARD OIL LOSES.

Ohio Supreme Court Upholds Valentine-Stewart Anti-Trust Law.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 30.—The Supreme Court to-day handed down a decision which sustains what is generally known as the Valentine-Stewart anti-trust law, which prohibits the combination of companies or firms for illegal purposes, which are therein outlined.

The decision is given in a demurrer filed by the Standard Oil Company, on the ground that the law was unconstitutional. The litigation was that instituted by Attorney General Monnett against the Standard Oil, Buckeye Pipe Line, and Solar Refining Companies.

PROFESSOR WAS TOO HONEST.

Chicago Board of Review Cuts Down His Personal Property Return.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—Herman E. Von Holst, anti-expansion Professor of History at the University of Chicago, was surprised by his personal property tax bill last week. Instead of having to pay $478.15, Collector Magee's notice called for only $127. Investigation revealed that the Board of Review had revised the Professor's estimate and cut it down over $17,000.

Revenue officials recalled that Prof. Von Holst livened up tax matters last Summer by publicly reproaching himself for having filed an honest schedule. When the Hyde Park assessments were published Prof. Von Holst discovered that he was the richest man in the neighborhood, and it led him to discourse vigorously on the evils of telling the truth.

NO WESTERN MARYLAND SALE.

Mayor of Baltimore Will Recede from His Determination.

Special to The New York Times

BALTIMORE, Jan. 30.—Pressure of public sentiment and the protests of the leading mercantile and commercial bodies of Baltimore have compelled Mayor Hayes to reconsider and recede from his determination to force the immediate sale of the Western Maryland Railroad to the New York syndicate or other parties.

The Board of City Finance Commissioners will meet to-morrow, and it is believed will agree to postpone any action looking to the sale of the road for one year and to pledge protection of the floating debt. The resolution prepared by the City Solicitor declares, it is stated, that unless assurances are given that the city will protect the floating indebtedness of the road, the appointment of a receiver to take charge of its affairs will be necessary. Such a course will entail heavy expense, the value of the road will be greatly diminished, and the loss to the city will exceed the amount of the floating indebtedness, now reported to be $225,000.

In view of these facts, therefore, the resolution goes on to say that the Finance Commissioners recommend that provision be made in any legal action looking to the foreclosure of the road either for the city to pay the debt or have it fully protected.

To Distribute Beveridge's Speech.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—The Republican National Executive Committee has decided to use Senator Beveridge's speech on the Philippines as an educational document during the coming Presidential campaign. So many requests from the Northwest and points South have been made for copies of the speech that it was thought advisable to order the speech printed and circulated. As a clear and interesting description of the islands the address is considered by the party leaders as a valuable contribution to political literature and it is proposed to print thousands of copies for distribution.

Vanderbilt Horses to be Sold.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, Jan. 30.—The horses of the Cornelius Vanderbilt estate, which are for the greater portion at the Vanderbilt farm in Portsmouth, will be sold to a New York dealer, who was inspecting the string a few days ago, and on every side there is evidence that Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt and her family, save Alfred G. Vanderbilt, intend making a prolonged visit to Europe.

Found Dead in a Saloon.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., Jan. 30.—This afternoon Isaac Fox, a saloon keeper, found George J. Van Horne of Sound Beach lying dead in the toilet room of the saloon, a pistol by his side. He had evidently been dead an hour, but no one had heard the pistol shot, though there were a number of men but a few feet away. Those in the place said that Van Horne had been sitting about all day in a despondent mood, and they did not know when he disappeared. The police and Coroner are investigating.

GOEBEL IS SHOT BY AN ASSASSIN

Mortally Wounded While Going to the Capitol.

DEATH IS VERY NEAR

Bullet Came from Building in Which Is Taylor's Office.

CITY IN AN UPROAR.

Republicans Denounce the Shooting—All Kentucky Troops Called Out—Perpetrator of Deed Is Unknown—One Arrest Made.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 30.—William Goebel, the Democratic contestant for Governor of Kentucky, was shot by an assassin this morning while on his way to the Capitol. One ball struck Mr. Goebel, and latest reports are to the effect that he has very little, if any, chance of recovery.

At midnight Mr. Goebel was resting easily but was very weak. All of the physicians are agreed that, if he lives through the night, the chances are in his favor, but, with one exception, all of them say he is almost certain to die before morning.

Senator Goebel was wounded by a rifle ball of small calibre, not over .38, which struck him in the right side, just below the armpit. The ball passed through the back part of the right lung, across the body in a diagonal line, passing out below the left shoulder blade. He was on his way to the Senate Chamber in company with Col. Jack Chinn and Warden Eph Lillard of the Frankfort Penitentiary. Mr. Lillard was a few feet in advance of Goebel and Chinn, who were walking side by side, Goebel being on the right and Chinn upon the left.

FIRST SHOT TAKES EFFECT.

From the outer edge of the Capitol grounds to the steps of the Capitol Building the distance is about 300 feet. Two-thirds of this had been passed, and the men were walking slowly, when suddenly a shot rang out from a large three-story building which stands fifty feet east of the Capitol Building. This building is used for offices by nearly all the leading officials of the State, Gov. Taylor and the Secretary of State having rooms on the first floor. As the shot was heard, Goebel gave a quick involuntary exclamation of pain and made an effort to draw his own revolver. His strength was unequal to the task, however, and he sank upon the pavement. With great rapidity several more shots were fired, the bullets striking the brick sidewalk close to where Goebel lay. None of them touched him, however.

Lillard hastily turned around to aid Goebel, who was supported by Chinn, who had his arms about him almost as soon as he touched the pavement. "Get help," said Chinn to Lillard, and, turning to Goebel, he asked:

"Are you hurt, Goebel? Did they get you?"

"They have got me this time," said Goebel. "I guess they have killed me."

In less than a minute a crowd of men was around Goebel. He was losing much blood and was becoming very weak. He was hastily carried to the office of Dr. E. E. Hume, in the basement of the Capitol Hotel, about a thousand feet from the spot where the shooting occurred. Here he was laid on a sofa, while Dr. Hume made a hasty examination, pronouncing the wound to be of a nature that must cause death in a short time. Goebel, who showed great fortitude and courage throughout, smiled weakly as he heard the verdict and feebly rolled his head from side to side in token of dissent from the opinion expressed by the physician.

DEATH IS CERTAIN.

The wounded man was then carried to his room on the second floor of the Capitol Hotel, and in addition to Dr. Hume, Drs. McCormick and Ely were summoned to attend him. After a careful examination of the wound, the doctors announced that while exceedingly dangerous, it was not necessarily fatal unless complications or blood poisoning should set in. Goebel kept up his courage, insisting again and again that he was not going to die. It was decided by his friends to call in also the services of Dr. McMurty, a prominent surgeon of Louisville, and urgent messages were at once sent for him. After the wound was dressed Mr. Goebel showed great exhaustion, and it was announced by the physician that in all probability he would die within a short time. He rallied, and under the influence of an opiate sank into a gentle slumber which lasted for several hours.

WHERE SHOT CAME FROM.

The window in the centre of the third story of the building, from which the shot was fired, was raised about eight inches from the sill to permit an unobstructed passage for the bullet when Mr. Goebel should come within range. Both Chinn and Lillard assert that while the first shot came from the direction of the window in the third story, there were other shots fired from different portions of the same building. Some of those who heard the shots say that at least one shot was fired from the office of the Secretary of State. This, however, is not true, as there were men in the office of the Secretary of State who rushed to the window as soon as the shots were heard, and all of them declare that there was no shot fired from that part of the building.

The window in the third story was left open, no effort having been made to close it by the would-be assassin, while not another window in the building was opened, nor were there any places where bullets had been fired through them.

FARMER UNDER ARREST.

Harland Whittaker, a farmer from Butler County, the home county of Gov. Taylor, is now in jail at Louisville, charged with the crime. There is no direct evidence against Whittaker, and he was placed under arrest more because he was caught around the Capitol building when the shots were fired than for any other apparent reason. He denies in the most positive manner that he had any connection with the shooting or knew anything about it. He was running toward the scene of the shooting when he was arrested.

Whittaker was arrested as he came down the steps on the east side of the State office building, directly below the window from which the shots had been fired. As he reached the sidewalk and was hastening toward the scene of the shooting, he was met by John E. Miles, who is seventy-six years of age. Without hesitation, Miles threw himself upon Whittaker, winding his arms around him, and calling loudly for help. It was right at hand, and in an instant Whittaker was surrounded by a group of men, many of them with drawn revolvers. He made no attempt to escape, knowing well that the slightest attempt to do so would have brought a dozen bullets into his body.

PRISONER WELL ARMED.

The man submitted quietly to a search, which was quickly made, the proceeds being three revolvers and one big knife. A quick examination of the revolvers showed that none of the cartridges had been used, and there was no powder smut on any part of his weapons, proving conclusively that he could not have used any of his three revolvers. In addition to this, all those who heard the shots join in the statement that they were from a rifle and from a smaller weapon. Whittaker was quickly led away and placed in the jail, while a guard was placed at the outer entrance to keep out all people who had no direct connection with the institution.

The prisoner is a man slightly over the medium size, with sandy hair and mustache. He was disposed to take things calmly, although he repeated again and again that he knew nothing whatever about the shooting.

SAYS HE IS INNOCENT.

"I was on the first floor of the building," he said, "when I heard Gov. Taylor tell that man Davis, the Capitol policeman, to go over at once to see Gen. Collier. I said I would go with him, and that was where I was going. I wanted to know, too, what the shooting was about. When I stepped outside that man grabbed me, and that's all I know, and that's a fact."

Few people believe that Whittaker is guilty of the crime, but the fact that he was hastily leaving the building from which the shooting was done was enough to make trouble for him.

"That man Davis," to whom Whittaker referred, is Col. John Davis, the custodian of the Capitol grounds. His story agrees with that of Whittaker.

"I was just outside of Gov. Taylor's office," said Col. Davis, "when I heard the shots, and heard Gov. Taylor say: 'My God, what have they done?' He called to me at once to go over to the office of Adjt. Gen. Collier, and Whittaker went along. I am positive that he could not have done the shooting. We were at the door of the building in too short a time for that."

DOORS BRISTLE WITH GUNS.

As soon as it was known that the bullet which struck down Mr. Goebel had come from the building to the east, a group of men gathered in front of the door on the east side. Others ran around to the door on the west side to prevent the escape of anybody from there.

Several men attempted to enter the doors from the outside, but were prevented by groups of mountaineers, who stood in the doorways. Some of these men held Winchesters in their hands and presented an aspect so generally uninviting that no attempt was made to search the building and nobody gained entrance to it for several minutes after the shooting had been done and the assassin had ample opportunity to escape.

WAS IT A PLOT?

That the shooting of Mr. Goebel was the result of a carefully laid plan is without question. The man who did the work had evidently taken his stand at the window and waited until his victim was in full sight before firing.

Ever since the influx of mountaineers last week, a large number of them have been sleeping in the upper part of the State House. It is not known, however, that any of the men did the work, or that they had any knowledge of the premeditated crime. There has not, so far, been discovered the slightest direct evidence pointing to any man, and it is not likely now that any will ever be found.

The man who fired the shots took the precaution to conceal his location by using smokeless powder cartridges. A score of people were where they had a full view of the side of the building from which the firing was done, and all of them declare that not a sign of powder smoke was visible. Both Chinn and Lillard are men of experience in affairs in which powder smoke is a more or less prominent feature, and both declare that while they could tell the general direction from which the bullets came they could not guess at the spot from which they were fired.

SMOKELESS POWDER USED.

"I tried hard to get a sight of the fellow," said Lillard. "He kept pouring the lead down at us, and I will swear there was not a sign of anything to indicate from where he was shooting. As many shots as he fired would make considerable powder smoke if ordinary cartridges were used, but never a sign of smoke could I see."

"I looked around a mighty brief spell," said Col. Chinn, "but there was nothing for me to look at, so I paid attention to Goebel. The fellow used smokeless powder all right enough, and I guess he was pretty wise to do it. Somebody might have got him if they had known where to look for him. By the time we knew where to look he had gone, and it was time to look somewhere else."

TROOPS BEFORE THE CAPITOL.

The Republican State officials and members of the Legislature, without exception, denounced the shooting in the most unmeasured terms. Gov. Taylor immediately caused a small address to be published, in which he declared the affair to be a disgrace and an outrage, and calling for the most sober condemnation. He sent orders at once to Adjt. Gen. Collier, directing him to take steps for the preservation of order.

Gen

possession of them and the approaches, allowing nobody to enter the gates. Twenty minutes after the shooting Capt. Walcott and his men marched across the front of the Capitol building and halted at the foot of the steps.

REPUBLICANS THREATENED.

Orders were issued to outside companies throughout the State to make ready at once to come to Frankfort, the entire State Guard being called into service. It was feared that the news of the shooting would so inflame the Democrats that they would come to Frankfort in swarms, while the mountaineers would lose no time in coming to the capital for the purpose of upholding their party principles.

"It makes no difference to me," said Gen. Collier, "who starts anything, we will preserve order on both sides."

Great excitement among the followers of Mr. Goebel was great, and for a short time immediately following the shooting of their leaders there was more than a possibility that some hotheads would seek vengeance upon their political enemies. Threats were made against Republican leaders and attorneys during the excitement, but the leading Democratic members of the House and Senate soon brought them to calmer talk.

ANOTHER SHOOTING AFFRAY.

As the news spread through the streets that Goebel had been shot, men began to pour toward the Capitol grounds from all sides, one throng being led by two firemen, one of whom carried a Winchester rifle, which the other finally prevailed upon him to lay aside. A shooting affray occurred in a saloon about this time. Craig Ireland, a sporting man, fatally wounding Ike Williams, a negro. The men were in an altercation, when Williams struck Ireland, who promptly sent a bullet through the negro's stomach. Ireland was locked up. This second shooting caused great excitement for a time, and it was thought the long-threatened political shooting all along the line had at last been inaugurated. The affair, however, had nothing to do with the political situation.

GATLING GUNS POSTED.

Three hundred men of the Second Kentucky Infantry are camped around the Capitol building and 1,500 more are expected during the night and before to-morrow noon.

Word was received that the Louisville Legion, the First Kentucky Infantry, would bring with it the famous Gatling gun that has figured so extensively in the evidence presented by the Democratic attorneys in the Gubernatorial contest case.

All through the building in which the Adjutant General's office is situated lay sleeping soldiers, every man with his cartridge belt still buckled around his waist. Outside the door, rifles were stacked, sentries walking beats beside them. The Gatling gun of the Lexington company was posted just to the west of the Capitol steps, and a tall Sergeant who had it in charge had carefully calculated the range to a row of small stores and dwelling houses south of the Capitol grounds.

For weeks it has been the story that, when an attack should be made upon the State Government by the discontented of either party, the firing would commence from the upper windows of these buildings. Night after night they have been dark, and rumor has garrisoned them alternately with desperate mountaineers, all of them for Taylor, or with fighting men from Henry and Owen Counties, who were ready to die for Goebel. The story was always the same. Its nature depended entirely upon the political bias of the man who told it.

Rumors were thick that armed bodies of men were forming upon the outskirts of the town, and that before morning they would pass into the city "just for a little bombardment." Col. Williams, commanding the troops gathered around the State House to-night, took very little stock in any of these stories, but he was none the less ready to join in the "little bombardment," whenever it proved agreeable to the other side. Every preparation was made to resist an attack, although it was not believed that one would be made.

Ex-Mayor Ira Julian was early on the scene advising the crowd to disperse.

"Let the blood be on the head of the assassins. They have openly boasted for months that Senator Goebel would never be Governor of the State. They always intended to prevent it in this way. Let us have no rioting; if we do, they are prepared to rush in the Federal bayonets."

The Democrats are keeping exceedingly close watch over the person of J. C. W. Beckham, the contestant for the position of Lieutenant Governor. Now that Goebel is dying he is their only hope, and they declare with earnestness there will be no Governor but Beckham. He is kept in his room at the Capitol Hotel and will be guarded very closely until the trouble is over. He declares that he needs no guard, but the Democrats pay no attention to his remonstrances.

SKETCH OF GOEBEL'S CAREER.

Senator William Goebel was born in a small hamlet in Sullivan County, Penn., forty-four years ago. He never married. With his parents he came to Covington when quite a boy. William started to learn the jewelry trade in Cincinnati, but after remaining there a short time, about 1873 he entered the law office of Stevenson & Myers. After the dissolution of this firm he continued with the firm of Stevenson & O'Hara, and afterward became the law partner of ex-Gov. John W. Stevenson. Later he became the law partner of John G. Carlisle, the ex-Speaker, Senator, and Secretary of the Treasury. He served as a member of the Democratic State Committee for years. The Democratic State Convention at Louisville last June that nominated Senator Goebel for Governor over Stone and Gen. Harding was one of the most notable gatherings of the kind in the history of the State.

Senator Goebel drafted the present election law of Kentucky, a measure which has attracted unusual attention on account of its peculiar provision. On the returns of the county boards, afterward affirmed by the State Board of Elections, the certificate of election was given to Taylor, the contestee.

Mr. Goebel's first advent in politics was as a candidate for State Senator to fill the unexpired term of J. W. Bryan, who was elected Lieutenant Governor with Buckner in 1887, and since then he has continuously represented Kenton County in the Senate. He steadfastly refused to have his picture taken up to his candidacy for Governor, and persistently refused to write an autobiography, and none is found in the many histories and lives of famous men of Kentucky. He has made his home for years with Mrs. M. Bryson, on Sixth Street. Simple in his manners and a close student, most of his life until he ran for Governor was given to his law books or literature.

Goebel has been characterized as a man of overweening ambition and one who enjoyed no close friendships. It was after he had secured the passage of a bill which reduced the tolls of a bridge over the Ohio River to 1 cent for a foot passenger that he became involved in a quarrel with Col. John Sanford, a popular ex-Confederate officer, who owned stock in the river bridges. The Colonel had threatened to kill him on sight, according to Goebel's supporters, because of an article which Goebel had written, and Goebel armed himself. They met and Sanford asked if he had written the article in question. Goebel said that he had, and shot Sanford. He was released on the subsequent inquiry, the testimony showing that Sanford had made a movement as if to draw a revolver. The decision was that it was a case of self-defense. Col. Sanford's widow went insane, and this was placed on the score against Goebel.

NEWS REACHES WASHINGTON.

Kentucky Shooting Distresses the President—He Will Not Interfere—Republican Senators Talk.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The news of the shooting of William Goebel was received at the White House while the Cabinet was in session. Upon reading the bulletin the President expressed his sorrow, and remarked that it was a great calamity. He was much distressed at the news, and so were all the members of the Cabinet. All agreed that it was a most lamentable occurrence.

After the Cabinet meeting adjourned each of the members expressed his deep regret that the political differences in Kentucky had brought about bloodshed.

The President had been kept well informed as to the situation in Frankfort, and knew that public feeling was running high, with danger of disturbance, but the possibility of the shooting of one or the other of the men prominently engaged in the contest had never entered his mind.

There is not the slightest disposition on the part of the Administration to interfere in Kentucky affairs even in view of the lamentable events of to-day. In the words of a member of the Cabinet, Kentucky will be left to manage her own affairs. There will be no Federal troops sent into the State, except upon a call from the Legislature after the regular constitutional method and the officials here regard the possibility of such a call as too remote to be entertained.

In the event that troops are needed the Government would be obliged to go as far as St. Louis for them. The nearest post to Frankfort is Fort Thomas, where there are only four companies of the Second Infantry; at Chicago there are one battery of artillery and four companies of the Fifth Infantry; at Columbus Barracks there is one company of the Seventh Infantry, and at Jefferson Barracks one troop of the Sixth Cavalry. Not all of these could be spared at one time, even if they were wanted.

Various opinions are expressed here as to what would be the result of the attempted assassination. A Republican Senator who spoke of it said very emphatically:

"If Goebel lives, this will make him Governor; if he should die, it will put the Democratic candidate for Lieutenant Governor in the chair. It may be that the Republicans won the fight at the polls, but they ought not to have let this method of removing an obnoxious officer to be practiced. Goebel was an assassin himself, but there is seldom sufficient excuse for fighting fire with fire."

Another Senator said: "I regret it as a Republican, but I do not think the reckless and criminal act of a ruffian should be allowed to change the election. The Republicans plainly won in Kentucky. The people knew they had won. I fear that they have contributed too much to bring about the state of feeling that made this shooting possible and that graver news is to come."

BLACKBURN ON THE SHOOTING.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Senator-elect Blackburn of Kentucky, who was one of the first in Washington to receive word of the shooting of Mr. Goebel, made the following statement to-night:

"It is impossible for me to express the feelings produced by the news just received from Frankfort. The assassination of Goebel has been predicted for months, so that it would hardly be correct to say that it was altogether unexpected. The reorganization of the militia of the State by Bradley during the latter part of his administration, placing the military affairs of the State upon substantially a Republican partisan basis; the importation of armed ruffians from the mountains into Frankfort within the last few days; their indefensible conduct while in the capital city, coupled with threats of resort to violence and force, all pointed to a culmination like this.

"Whether significant or not, it is peculiarly unfortunate that the shots of the assassin should have been fired from the building exclusively occupied by Gov. Taylor and other Republican State officials. Unless the assassin can be identified, the public will naturally conclude that it was prearranged and the building filled with those who would protect the perpetrator from identification. I doubt not that the greatest excitement prevails in the city of Frankfort, but sincerely trust that the supporters of Mr. Goebel will not allow themselves to be betrayed into any act of violence or any transgression of the law.

"The situation is, indeed, a serious one, but their course is perfectly plain. They should proceed with the contest for State officers until a final decision is reached by the tribunals established by law for its determination. The Democrats of Kentucky up to this time have kept themselves in the prosecution of this contest strictly within the limits of the law. This I hope and doubt not they will continue to do.

"It cannot be doubted that the attack upon Mr. Goebel's life was deliberately planned and attempted, because of the conviction in the public mind that the close of the testimony in the contest case insured the award of the Governorship to him by the Legislature.

W. J. BRYAN IS SHOCKED.

BOSTON, Jan. 30.—At the close of the reception in his honor given by the Democratic State Committee in Faneuil Hall this afternoon Col. William J. Bryan, who previously had been shown the dispatch announcing that Senator Goebel of Kentucky had been shot, made the following statement:

"It is shocking, shocking! I trust that the shot will not prove fatal. Mr. Goebel made a great fight against fierce opposition, and feeling was wrought up to a high pitch, but I had no thought of assassination being resorted to. It probably was the individual act of some bitter political opponent. I cannot assume or believe that any considerable number of Republicans or anti-Goebel Democrats would counsel or excuse such an act.

"I sincerely hope that the Democrats will not allow excitement or resentment to lead them to acts of violence. We can afford to permit the Republicans to enjoy the monopoly of force and threats. Let the law deal with those who violate the law."

BLAMES THE REPUBLICANS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—Mr. Walsh, Secretary of the National Democratic Committee, gave out the following statement to-day anent the attempted assassination of Senator Goebel:

"I do not care to express myself as to the political effect of such a damnable outrage. I cannot believe that the Republican Party, as a party, can be held directly responsible for this attempted assassination, although I do believe that the unwarranted course pursued by the Republican press and Republican leaders of Kentucky throughout the whole proceeding and the false impressions caused by them have tended to inflame the minds of their lawless followers to such an extent as to make the attempt to murder Goebel possible, if not directly provocative of it.

"I trust that Mr. Goebel may recover speedily and eventually take the office to which he was elected by the people of Kentucky."

THE PRISONER IN LOUISVILLE.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 30.—The First Regiment, Kentucky National Guard, known as the Louisville Legion, left here for Frankfort at 8:45 o'clock P. M., under command of Col. C. C. Mengel. About 325 men occupied the special train. Two Gatling guns were taken.

The Chesapeake and Ohio train which reached here at 8 o'clock from Frankfort brought Harland Whittaker. The prisoner, in custody of Frankfort officers, was taken to the county jail at once. The incident occasioned no excitement, and only the usual crowd was gathered at the station.

The news of the attempt upon Senator Goebel's life caused considerable excitement, but the only outward demonstrations were frequently heard expressions of regret and indignation.

Why Call It Assassination?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Why should any one in Kentucky call the killing of Mr. Goebel "assassination"? Is homicide punished by the laws of the State of Kentucky? F. H. C.

CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION ROW.

Young Women's Organization Gets an Injunction Against Seceders.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—By a decision of the Branch Appellate Court, the International Committee of Young Women's Christian Associations was forbidden to use that name. This action was taken on the request of the Young Women's Christian Association, which claims that the former organization has deceived the public by its name into believing that it is affiliated with the plaintiff association. In this way, it is claimed, the international association has received several subscriptions which it would not otherwise have obtained.

The trouble rises out of a division of opinion regarding the advisability of sanctioning an evangelical test as a prerequisite to membership. The majority of the Young Women's Christian Association's members were opposed to the test, and the organization was split. The seceders established two branches under the general name of the International Committee of Young Women's Christian Association.

HEINE MONUMENT MUTILATION.

Rewards Offered for Apprehension of Vandal—Meetings Held.

There was a meeting of the Heine Monument Committee yesterday afternoon at 5:30 at the café of August Luchöw, 110 East Fourteenth Street, for the purpose of taking steps to find the perpetrators of the mutilation of the monument, at One Hundred and Sixty-first Street and Mott Avenue, on Sunday night. Beyond a reorganization of the committee nothing of moment was accomplished. The committee offered its services to the Arion Society.

A reward has been offered by Louis Windmüller of this city for the apprehension of the vandal. Dr. Ernest Richard, President of the committee, said that at a gathering of citizens, whose names he did not know, it had been decided to offer a reward of $100, and resolutions were drawn invoking the aid of the Mayor.

The members of the Tammany Hall General Committee of the Thirty-fifth Assembly District held an indignation meeting last night over the defacement of the monument on Sunday night. Resolutions were adopted calling upon the police to exercise the utmost diligence in seeking to arrest the perpetrator of the outrage.

TRUST COMPANIES TO UNITE

International Banking Company to Absorb Others.

GOULDS HEAVILY INTERESTED

Century, Federal, and Produce Exchange Companies Mentioned in Connection with the Merger.

The financial world learned yesterday of the progress of negotiations for the consolidation of several of the new trust companies of the city into one big trust company, with formidable capital and surplus. The International Banking and Trust Company, organized last Summer, is to absorb one or more of the other companies and to enter its offices in the handsome building now being completed at Broadway and Cedar Street as a consolidated corporation, retaining its present name. The assumption is that it will also retain its present officers.

The Century Trust Company, which is not yet started in business, but has powerful interests behind it, is practically sure of entering the consolidation, a good majority of its incorporators having actually consented to the merger. The Trust Company of New York, the Federal Trust Company, and the Produce Exchange Trust Company are also mentioned as probable factors.

It will be noticed that the Gould interests are strong in these companies. Edwin Gould is one of the incorporators of the Century Trust Company and has been President of the Produce Exchange Trust Company since it took a new lease of life after its failure, succeeding Turner A. Beall. George J. Gould is at the head of the Federal Trust Company, in which Frank J. Gould is also interested.

The Directors of the International Banking and Trust Company met yesterday afternoon at their offices and heard the report of a committee which had been appointed to conduct negotiations. Progress was reported, and the Directors adjourned to meet later. After they shall have formally voted approval of the plan of consolidation the matter will be referred to the stockholders for their vote. The Century Trust Company stockholders will also be asked to vote on the consolidation. This is in fact the only concern which is practically sure to be absorbed, as the negotiations with the others are still pending and the outcome therefore uncertain.

The International Banking and Trust Company has a capital of $1,000,000 and a surplus of $500,000. The surplus was provided by the manner of subscribing for the stock, which was paid in at 150. There are 10,000 shares of it. The concern has several branches in different parts of the city. The Century Trust Company, incorporated a few months ago, has taken offices at Wall and New Streets, and now will probably sublet them. It was organized by Amzi L. Barber, who controls the Barber Asphalt Company, and Avery D. Andrews, now President of the Asphalt Company. The other incorporators are John T. Hegeman, Edwin Gould, Silas B. Dutcher, Charles Cooper, J. C. McGuire, William Berri, P. H. Flynn, William H. Ziegler, Joseph B. White, A. M. Young, Millard F. Smith, B. Sherwood-Dunn, George A. Morrison, Frank Sullivan Smith, J. E. Knapp, Lucien C. Warren, and John Joy Edson. The Century Company, which has never chosen officers, has a capitalization of $2,000,000, with a surplus of $1,000,000.

The chief cause for the consolidation is that the trust companies have concluded that to join forces would not only give them strength and stability and increase public confidence in them, but would enable them to put through bigger deals than they can now handle. A Director of the International Banking and Trust Company said yesterday:

"I cannot tell you what corporations beside the Century may come in, but it is safe to say that there will be one great, big consolidated company, and it will bear our name. If it was a good thing for the Bank of Commerce and National Union Bank to consolidate, why should not trust companies get together?

"Trust company stock was held unusually high a short while ago. Since the Produce Exchange Trust Company had to close its doors, and since the revelations about the State Trust Company, the public has become to lose confidence to a certain extent in all trust companies. This consolidation will mean a company the public can trust in, and one that can handle large deals."

Another of the men interested in the negotiations between the international and the Century Companies said: "The International will probably slightly increase its capital stock, and the Century stockholders will take the new stock, turning over their funds in the International in payment. If the Century has $1,000,000, the International will probably issue $500,000 in new stock. If it puts in $2,500,000, as it may, the International will make a somewhat larger increase. If other companies come in the capital stock of the International will probably be between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000."

The apparent discrepancy in this statement, according to which $1,500,000 of added funds would only cause an increase of $500,000 in new stock, is explicable on the ground that a portion of the money turned over by the Century shareholders would be used to buy some of the old stock. It may be decided by International shareholders to sell some of their old stock to the Century people in effecting the merger.

Of the other companies concerned, the Trust Company of New York, a recently incorporated concern, now doing business with a capital of $1,000,000 and a surplus of $1,000,000, seems most likely to come in. President Willis S. Paine declined yesterday to either admit or deny that negotiations were pending. The stock of this corporation was paid in at 200, thus making the surplus. It is quoted in the market at about 185.

The Federal Trust Company has taken offices at 80 Broadway, but it is reported that the subscribers to the stock are having their subscriptions returned and that the company will not enter business. If so, it would probably sublet its offices. Frank J. Gould, on being asked last night whether the people behind the Federal Trust Company would go into the International, said he did not care to discuss it.

The officials of the Produce Exchange Trust Company deny any knowledge of the deal. "I was formerly in favor of consolidation with one or more other companies," said one of the Produce Exchange Trust Company Trustees, "but now that we are on our feet and in good shape I see no occasion for it."

The International officials do not admit, however, that it is out of the question that the Produce Exchange Company may come in. Another corporation which has been mentioned as likely to figure in the deal is the North American Trust Company. There is no foundation for this report.

The last financial statement of the International Banking and Trust Company, which began business on July 1, 1899, was that made at the close of business on Dec. 30, when the company had 578 accounts outstanding. It follows:

RESOURCES.

Cash in office and due by branches	$52,346.75

The company in its circulars has called attention to the investment of its entire capital and surplus, amounting to $1,500,000, in Government or city bonds. This is practically shown in the statement, the items set opposite to United States Government bonds and New York City 3½ gold corporate stock, in the column of resources, aggregating $1,485,000, and indicating such an investment.

The officers of the International Banking and Trust Company are Stewart Browne, President; W. H. Chesebrough, Vice President; John B. Duer and T. H. Froehlich, Secretaries, and M. F. Walsh, Assistant Secretary.

At the last election the seven Directors of the class of 1903 were re-elected. The board now stands as follows: Frank Rockefeller, George Crocker, Robert A. Chesebrough, H. B. Hollins, Charles R. IN MEMORY OF CHARLES I.

Services Held in Boston in Honor of the "Martyr King."

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 30.—In commemoration of the martyrdom of Charles I. of England, who on Jan. 30, over 250 years ago, was beheaded, about 100 persons gathered at the Church of the Advent, Brimmer Street, this evening. It was the annual service held under the auspices of the Order of the White Rose in this city. The Rev. Walter Frisby, rector of the Church of the Advent, conducted the simple and impressive service. He was assisted by the Rev. J. Wynne Jones, Assistant Pastor of that church. The service was in the form of the evening prayer service of the Episcopal Church.

Father Frisby made a short address, in which he said that, although he was not a member of the order, he was glad to welcome the organization to his church, and said he was in sympathy with the object of their organization.

After the prayer by Father Frisby, the benediction was pronounced. A secret session of the chapter was held at the home of Ralph A. Cram, 67 Pinckney Street, in the evening.

CHARGES AGAINST A JUDGE.

Said to Have Acted as Though He Was Counsel for Defendant.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 30.—Representative Mellen has presented in the Massachusetts House the petition of Francis W. Fitch, now of Millis, but formerly of Lowell, for the removal of Justice Edgar J. Sherman of the Superior Court, alleging misconduct in a case of the petitioner against Mariette A. Jefferson in 1898.

The allegation is that Judge Sherman refused to continue the case in order that depositions from two witnesses then in Colorado might be presented. It is stated that Sherman allowed the defendant Jefferson to amend her answer to the suit of plaintiff, and that generally, Sherman acted in a way to give the impression that he was, while sitting as Justice on the case, acting as leading counsel for the defendant, interrupting the counsel for the plaintiff, and arguing the case for the defendant.

By reason of what is alleged as the unusual and unfair action of Judge Sherman, the counsel for the plaintiff, one Colwey, withdrew, it is said, from the case, expecting that his client would be non-suited, but instead the court ordered the case to go on, and directed a verdict for the defendant. This is what is alleged. He also refused to set aside the verdict.

Dr. Herbert Jefferson signs a statement which is submitted. Judge Sherman is charged in the case in point with indulging in "unseemly levity and boundless loquacity."

Increase in Chicago Telephone Stock.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—The Chicago Telephone Company, by John M. Clark, President, and Charles E. Moseley, Secretary, to-day filed with Recorder Simon a certificate of increase of capital stock of the company from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000, in 150,000 shares of $100 each. The increase was determined upon by the Directors of the company at the annual meeting, held Jan. 17. It is said that the increase in stock was made in order to extend the system of the company and for forming a stronger opposition to the rival lines.

FOR ART AND LITERATURE

The First Public Meeting of the National Institute.

HISTORY AND AIMS EXPLAINED

Addresses by Charles Dudley Warner, Horatio William Parker, and the Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke.

A select audience, including many women, gathered in Mendelssohn Hall last night to enjoy the programme of music and addresses on literature and art arranged for the first public meeting of the National Institute of Arts and Letters. The addresses were by Horatio William Parker, head of the musical department of Yale University, and the Rev. Dr. Henry van Dyke. The music was furnished by members of the American Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Henry K. Hadley.

In the absence, through indisposition of Charles Dudley Warner, the First Vice President, William Dean Howells, presided, and among those present were F. Marion Crawford, George W. Cable, Bronson Howard, G. O. Roberts, F. Hopkinson Smith, Elliot Gregory, Theodore Sutro, Francis W. Halsey, Frank H. Dodd, Hamilton W. Mabie, St. Clair McKelway, Howard Pyle, Daniel French, and Hamlin Garland.

The history and objects of the institute were set forth in the President's address, which was read by Hamilton W. Mabie. The original members were selected by an invitation from the American Social Science Association, which acted under the power of its charter from the Congress of the United States. The members thus selected, who joined the Social Science Association, were given the alternative of organizing as an independent institute or as a branch of the Social Science Association.

At the annual meeting of the Social Science Association on Sept. 4, 1899, at Saratoga Springs, the members of the Institute voted to organize independently.

The object is declared to be the advancement of art and literature, and the qualification notable achievement in art or letters.

The address went on to declare that the chief concern of the institute is with the production of works of art and literature and with their distribution. Dealing with the relations between authors and publishers, Mr. Warner wrote:

"The author's sole capital is his talent. His brain may be likened to a mine, gold, silver, copper, iron, or tin, which looks like silver when new. Whatever it is, the vein of valuable ore is limited; in most cases it is slight. When it is worked out the man is at the end of his resources. Has he expended or produced capital? I say he has produced it and contributed to the wealth of the world, and that he is as truly entitled to the usufruct of it as the miner who takes gold or silver out of the earth.

"The copyright of a book is not analogous to the patent right of an invention which may become of universal necessity to the world. Nor should the greater share of this usufruct be absorbed by the manufacturer and publisher of the book.

"A method that prevailed in the early years of this century was both fair and wise. The author agreed that the publisher should have the exclusive right to publish his book for a certain term, or to make and sell a certain number of copies. When those conditions were fulfilled the control of the property reverted to the author. The continuance of these relations between the two depended, as it should depend, upon mutual advantage and mutual good will."

The so-called syndicating of an author's products in the control of one salesman, in which good work and inferior work are coupled together at a common selling price and in common notoriety, Mr. Warner acknowledged insured a wider distribution, "but," he asked, "what is its effect upon the quality of literature? Is it your observation that the writer for a syndicate, on solicitation for a price or an order for a certain kind of work, produces as good quality as when he works independently, uninfluenced by the spirit of commercialism? The question is a serious one for the future of literature."

Horatio William Parker spoke for music. He observed that although music was a baby art as compared with sculpture and painting, and was a little neglected, yet it got nearer to the heart than its elder sisters. For one person that could really glow with enthusiasm for a beautiful statue or painting, a dozen would get warm for music.

Like all forms of art, however, music lost its highest effect unless addressed to the cultivated and refined. Its real purpose was to purify, ennoble, sustain, and nourish the imagination. It was true it spoke to the imagination through the senses, but it was not worthy of educated men and women to listen to it merely for the pleasure it afforded the senses.

Of the status of American music Mr. Parker said: "We go to Europe and brag splendidly about our mechanical and industrial achievements, but in speaking to foreigners about American music we do so deprecatingly and apologetically. Thank God, it is not necessary to be apologetic about American sculpture and painting.

"By American music I mean American composers. We have a school of literature, and we have made large strides toward a school of painting. We must have a vigorous school of music. It is impossible that this great country will always remain a parasite on the artistic nations of Europe.

"I for one do not believe in mute, inglorious Miltons. If a man have genius, it is like smallpox. If it be a genuine case it is sure to break out. Money getting in early life has a similar effect on the creative spirit that vaccination has on smallpox. The artist, to be encouraged, should be young and poor. Sympathy and understanding are more to him than good food and clothing. The latter will follow upon the former."

Dr. Van Dyke spoke of the relation of the people to literature.

"In the realm of letters, as elsewhere, I hold to the principles of democracy," said he. "Art for art's sake is heartless, and soon grows artless. Art for the public market is not art at all, but commerce. Art for the people's service is a noble, vital, permanent element of human life.

"Whatever this institute may do in the way of technical work for the confederation of authors, or the conversion of publishers, it must aim to do something broader and better for the welfare of the people. It must seek to strengthen, deepen, and improve the relation of American literature to the American people, that it may really enrich the common life, promote the liberty of the individual from the slavery of the superficial, and wisely guide and forward men in the pursuit of happiness in pictures, statues, and music.

"The condition of the realm of letters is better, its relation to the people is closer, and its influence on the world is greater than ever before. But this does not mean that there are no evils to be removed, no dangers to be averted, and no further steps to be taken in advance.

"All that is necessary, at present, to sell an unlimited quantity of a new book is to sell the first hundred thousand, and notify the public. The rest will go by curiosity and imitation. Is there no danger in substituting popularity for perfection as the test of merit?

"There is no reason why a book which appeals only to the author should be considered better than a book which appeals only to the public. Neither is there any reason why a publisher of popular books should go to the opposite extreme and say that there is no use under heaven for the critic; the man who buys the book is the real critic, and so discriminating is he that a publisher cannot sell a bad book.

"The true cause for blushing lies in the fact that criticism has been so much confused with advertisement; that so many of the journals which should be the teachers of the public have become its courtiers; that realism in its desire to be dramatic has so often turned to the theatre instead of to real life, and thus has become melodramatic; that virility, which is a good word in its place, has been so much overworked, and used as a cloak to cover a multitude of sins, and that the distinction between books and literature has been so often overlooked and so largely forgotten."

The Third Avenue's Finances.

A Director of the Third Avenue Railroad Company said yesterday that the plans of the syndicate to take up the floating debt include three-year mortgage notes at 6 per cent. The percentage has been the subject of considerable discussion. Mr. Lauterbach said yesterday that negotiations were progressing well, and that no peculiar system of keeping the company's books had been found, as had been reported.

LIBERALS ATTACK THE GOVERNMENT

Salisbury's Policy Assailed at the Opening of Parliament.

ROSEBERY IS CHIEF CRITIC

Henry Campbell-Bannerman Leads the Fight in the House.

Both Parties Advocate the Prosecution of the War, but Differ as to the Course Thus Far Pursued.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—At the opening of Parliament severe attacks were made to-day in both houses on the policy of the Government in South Africa, the occasion being the discussion of the speech from the throne.

In the House of Lords the Duke of Somerset moved the address in reply to the Queen's speech, and the Earl of Shaftesbury seconded the motion.

During the course of his remarks the Duke of Somerset said he looked forward confidently to a successful termination of the war. He urged the necessity for reform in the military administration, and said that hitherto the army seemed to have existed for the benefit of the War Office, and that in future the War Office must exist for the benefit of the army.

The Duke then eulogized the loyalty of the colonies, especially Canada, and strongly deprecated the adverse criticism of Gen. Buller, his remarks in this connection being cheered. He said he had every confidence in Gen. Buller and in Lord Roberts.

The Earl of Shaftesbury, Conservative, emphasized the debt of gratitude which Great Britain owed to her colonies, and expressed satisfaction at the settlement of the Samoa question.

CRITICISED BY A LIBERAL.

The Liberal leader in the House of Lords, the Earl of Kimberley, followed. He said he was glad to learn that Great Britain's relations with other States were friendly. He added that he believed the term could be justly applied to the relations with European Governments and the United States, and deprecated undue attention to the attacks of the foreign press. His Lordship congratulated Lord Salisbury on the conclusion of the agreement with Germany, but strongly disapproved of the tone of Mr. Chamberlain's speeches. In that connection, however, he paid a warm tribute to the conduct of the soldiers in the field and to the loyalty of the British colonies.

Baron Balfour of Burleigh said the Jameson raid had closed the mouth of the Government and prevented it from protesting against the arming of the Transvaal. But, he added, the Government must have known armaments were accumulating to an extent unjustified by fears of another raid, and it was the duty of the Government to communicate on the subject with the Boer Government; but, as the first step, it ought to severely punish the raiders. The country had not reached a pass that if the Government appealed to it it would not have supported the Government in any preparations it thought necessary. He would do nothing to prevent the Government from carrying the war to a successful conclusion.

Lord Kimberley also urged that the Government ought to have been aware of the importation of arms into the Transvaal and ought to have informed the Transvaal that unless it desisted it must result in Great Britain sending a large force to South Africa. He could not believe the Government was so ignorant of the preparations of the Transvaal, and they could not divest themselves of the responsibility.

Continuing, he said that although the moment was one of the deepest gravity, he would entirely abstain from criticising the conduct of the Generals. It was the duty of the Government to select men to conduct these operations, and it was their duty to support the Government. It was, therefore, unwise to criticise the Generals in these operations. He did not mean to imply that the Generals were not doing their utmost to fulfill their arduous duties, but the Government would be wise if it made every effort to prepare thoroughly for what might occur in the future. Continuing, Lord Kimberley said:

"We might meet a period of disaster, and, although our relations with the other powers are friendly, it would be well to consider the possibilities of the future, and it would be well if the Government prepared for all eventualities and all dangers and be ready with the means to surmount them. The Government does not seem to have been aware of the scale of preparations of the South African republics."

LORD SALISBURY REPLIES.

Lord Salisbury, in reply to the Earl of Kimberley, asserted that there was nothing in the stipulations of the conventions to limit and hinder the importation of arms and ammunition into the Transvaal through Lorenzo Marques.

Continuing, the Premier said:

"Why were we to know about the importation of arms? I believe guns were introduced into the Transvaal in boilers and munitions of war in piano cases. We had a small Secret Service fund. If you want much information you must give much money. Consider the enormous amounts spent by other Governments, especially the Transvaal, which, I have heard on high diplomatic authority, spent £900,000 ($4,000,000) in a single year, and the small sums spent by England, making it impossible for us to have the omniscience attributed to us by Lord Kimberley. I am glad he has not pressed an immediate inquiry into the action of the military authorities at a time when our Generals in the field and many of those who could give the most valuable information are unable to appear. We should defer an inquiry to a more convenient season."

Later, the Premier admitted the deficiencies of the existing system, remarking that the Treasury had acquired a power which was not to the public benefit. He had not thought of looking into past history or examining the amount of blame to be attached to this or that Minister.

"It is," he said, "quite the right way of dealing with the present crisis. We must join together and exercise all our powers for extricating ourselves from a situation full of humiliation and not free from danger. I will not say the danger may not have easily been exaggerated. Many a country has commenced a war with difficulties of the kind we experience. We have only to look at what the Northern States of America went through at the beginning of the civil war to see how easy it would be to draw a mistaken inference from the reverses we have met at the outset. We have every ground to think that if we set ourselves heartily to work and exert all the undoubted instruments of the power we possess we shall bring the war to a satisfactory conclusion. We have work which appeals to us as subjects of the Queen, and it must throw in the shade all thoughts of party expediency."

Lord Salisbury then said he regretted that Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice, in the House of Commons, was about to bring this great issue into party controversy, adding that the only place where his action would meet with sympathy was in Pretoria.

"Our effort," the Premier continued, "must be to retrieve ourselves from the present situation, which cannot be allowed to last. This empire is a valuable and splendid but responsible possession. We must concentrate our efforts. If we do not tame all the smaller passions into one great duty we run the danger of convulsions which will tarnish the empire's lustre and perhaps menace its integrity."

ROSEBERY ATTACKS SALISBURY.

Lord Rosebery, who followed Lord Salisbury, spoke with great force and earnestness. He asked why the Premier made it so difficult for the Man-in-the-Street to support his policy. The past conduct of the Government would come up for investigation some day, he hoped, adding:

"We have the right to know if, before the crisis, the Intelligence Department supplied the Government with sufficient information. If not, dismiss the department. If the Government possessed the information, their responsibility is heavy. I hope that when the time for the investigation arrives, those who have served the Queen will be covered with such glory that the eyes of the investigators will be dazzled.

"I was appalled at the nature and style of Lord Salisbury's speech. We have now 120,000 men in South Africa, yet we are with difficulty holding our own. The attitude of foreign nations is described as friendly. But that does not strike me as being so amicable as the word would imply. I deem it necessary to know what the Government is going to do. Lord Salisbury said the cause of our disasters was the smallness of the Secret Service fund and the British Constitution. But what is the Government's duty? Some form of compulsory service must be introduced to meet the growing exigencies of the empire, and I am sure the nation will not shrink from either that or any other sacrifice to preserve the empire's predominance. That we should not shrink from sending away vast masses of troops, situated as we are in the centre of a universe by no means friendly to us, without having a hint from the Government of the military measures it proposes taking to face the disasters we have met and the sacrifices we have made, is one of the most extraordinary features of the British Constitution. I agree with Lord Salisbury that the country can carry this thing through, in spite of all the impediments of men and methods that have shackled it in the past, but I venture to say it will have to be inspired by a loftier tone and truer patriotism than that shown by the Prime Minister."

The Marquis of Lansdowne, Secretary of State for War, followed. He said he was prepared to make a statement at a future date. The Government, he added, was not prepared and had excellent reasons for not pushing its arrangements further.

In his opinion the Intelligence Department had accurately estimated the numbers and armaments of the enemy, but not their fighting power.

"The Boer forces," said Lord Lansdowne, "have shown an amount of resource, mobility, and tenacity upon which the Government did not calculate."

With regard to the charge of unpreparedness for war, he declared that the Government had hoped and believed the negotiations would end in peace and that overt preparations for a conflict would only have tended to precipitate it.

The address in reply to the speech from the throne was then adopted.

During the discussion the galleries of the House of Lords were thronged, many women being among the spectators. Lords Northcote and Avebury (the latter was formerly Sir John Lubbock) took seats with the United States Ambassador, Joseph H. Choate, in the Diplomatic Gallery. The Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught, and the Duke of Cambridge were seated on the cross benches.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

In the House of Commons the members began to arrive at an unusually early hour. The Hon. William Massey-Mainwaring, Conservative, Member for Central Finsbury, was the first to arrive, entering the precincts of the House at 4:30 A. M., half an hour ahead of Mr. John Cumming Macdona, Progressive Conservative, Member for the Rotherhithe Division of Southwark, the second arrival. The other members then began to appear at shortening intervals.

The session opened at 2 P. M., after the customary formalities.

The Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, Gen Sir M. S. Biddulph, summoned the Commons to the House of Lords at 2:05 P. M., where the Lord High Chancellor, Earl Halsbury, read the Queen's speech.

After the reading of the speech Parliament adjourned until 4 P. M.

When the House reassembled A. J. Balfour, the First Lord of the Treasury and Government leader, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the Liberal leader, and others were loudly cheered by their respective followers.

Mr. James Lowther made his annual motion relative to the interference of peers at elections. It was rejected by a vote of 337 to 101.

Capt. Ernest G. Pretyman, Conservative, member for the Woodbridge Division of Suffolk, then moved the address in reply to the speech.

He expressed the deepest sympathy, which, he said, was shared by both sides of the House, with the sufferers from the war and the sufferings in Natal. He further referred to the feeling of admiration for the gallantry of the troops which was felt by all parties, and remarked that additional common ground for pride was the gallantry and national spirit shown by both Great Britain and her colonies. He also expressed the hope that after the war all race antagonism in South Africa would be obliterated.

Continuing, Capt. Pretyman, who is a retired Captain of artillery, said an inquiry was necessary as to how the requirements of the war had been so underestimated.

He then appealed for the union of all parties in support of the Government in its efforts to satisfactorily conclude a just war.

Herbert P. Pike Pease, Liberal-Unionist, member for Darlington, seconded the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

LIBERAL LEADER REPLIES.

The Liberal leader in the House of Commons, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, then rose to reply, amid cheers from the Opposition benches.

Commenting on the Queen's speech, he said he had seldom known so little to be said in such a large number of words. As, however, the war advanced, it became more difficult and more critical, and he was not surprised that the Government had not proposed a formidable programme of legislation, as affairs in South Africa, political and military, would undoubtedly engage the present Parliament to a great extent. The war was uppermost in all minds when the members separated in October, and it was believed there were troops enough in South Africa to rapidly clear the Queen's dominions. But their expectations had been sobered. Week after week had seen checks, disappointments, and deplorable loss of life. In every instance the advance of the British troops had been staid by large bodies of the enemy. But the country had again and again gone through greater perils with courage and composure, and would not now depart from its high traditions. The courage and fortitude of British soldiers was never more conspicuous, and they must associate with this the sons of the colonies, who had shown extraordinary aptitude in this kind of warfare. He appreciated the gallantry and devotion which led their countrymen to volunteer, but he wished to know the reasons which necessitated this unusual method of reinforcing the army. He and his friends had resolved to support a vigorous prosecution of the war, that the integrity of the Queen's dominions be speedily vindicated, and he imagined there would be no difficulty in obtaining the additional supplies necessary.

"Here my agreement with the Government ceases," said the Liberal leader.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman then proceeded with a bitter condemnation of the administration, and the tone and temper in which it had approached the whole South African problem, saying that the narrowness of the Government's provision for military requirements necessitated hostilities, and asserting that its policy made war probable. He believed this feeling was largely shared by the House, and was glad of the opportunity promised to express his opinion. The speaker repudiated the idea that they should wait to the end of the war before discussing the mater. This was the very time, he declared, for effective criticism, and those wishing to disclaim responsibility should do so now.

"The Ministers tell us," Sir Henry continued, "that this war was undertaken to secure equal rights for white men. I hope they will transfer this laudable doctrine to this country. Many instances might be applied where too little consideration has been shown under Mr. Chamberlain's administration to the loyal Dutch of Cape Colony. The Cape Ministers, who are as much Crown Ministers as Mr. Chamberlain, treated them in a manner ill-calculated to allay doubts and fears."

"The recess brought many speeches on this subject, and astonishment succeeded astonishment at their statements. They now declare that it was inevitable, which is obviously an ex post facto opinion; and, if not, the Ministers are hopelessly condemned and ought to be hurled from power."

Arthur J. Balfour, after a vain attempt to draw Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman into an admission that he did not advocate pushing the war into Boer territory, reproached him with waiting until the country had become involved in military difficulties to bring a vote of censure of the Colonial Secretary, which might have been brought, Mr. Balfour declared, at any time since 1895. In general defense of the Colonial Secretary and the Government's policy, Mr. Balfour said that at one time the Government believed the war would be avoided, but had subsequently become convinced that the Boer Government never from the first intended to give those franchise concessions, the withholding of which meant war.

He denied that Gen. Buller had expressed the opinion that the forces sent out were inadequate. On the contrary, Gen. Buller held the common military opinion that the forces were quite sufficient. If the Government had asked Parliament last August, he continued, to authorize the dispatch of a large army, it would have been not only extremely bad diplomacy, but it would probably have been impossible to persuade Parliament of its necessity.

"Mr. Balfour repeated his assertion made outside of the House of Commons that the Government had not directly or indirectly interfered with the discretion of the Generals in the field." (This leads up to Campbell-Bannerman's question.)

Replying to the direct question put by Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, "Did Gen. Buller go to Natal purely in the exercise of his military discretion?" Mr. Balfour answered in the affirmative. He then proceeded to rebuke the Opposition for criticising the War Office, declaring that it was solely due to the efforts of the Government during the last three years that the army and armaments were greatly improved.

"The Opposition," said Mr. Balfour, "is apparently ready to take upon its own shoulders the government of the country and the conduct of the war. I wish it well through the task. The Government has not disguised from itself the magnitude of the task, and if Parliament should think it advisable to change the Government at the present juncture, I can only say that I would support any succeeding Government in the steps necessary to prosecute the war to the conclusion we all desire. But the Government will endeavor to discharge this great responsibility so long as it retains the confidence of Parliament."

Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice then moved the following amendment to the address:

"And we humbly express our regret at the want of foresight and judgment displayed by her Majesty's advisers, as shown alike in their conduct of African affairs since 1895, and in their preparation for the war now proceeding."

Lord Fitzmaurice attacked Mr. Chamberlain's policy, especially his failure to punish the raiders, and the retention of Mr. Cecil Rhodes as a member of the Privy Council, together with "irritating and reckless methods that plunged the country into war before any adequate preparations were possible."

The debate was then adjourned.

THE SPEECH OF THE QUEEN

Insists that the Transvaal War Must Be Brought to a Victorious Conclusion.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—The speech of the Queen, read at the opening of Parliament to-day, was substantially as follows:

"My Lords and Gentlemen: The peace which had recently been broken in South Africa when last I addressed you has, unhappily, not been restored, but otherwise my relations with other States are friendly. In resisting the invasion of my South African colonies by the South African Republic and Orange Free State my people have responded with devotion and enthusiasm to the appeal which I have made to them, and the heroism of my soldiers in the field and my sailors and marines who were landed to co-operate with them has not fallen short of the noblest traditions of our military history.

"I am deeply grieved that so many valuable lives should have fallen a sacrifice, but I have witnessed with pride and with heartiest gratification the patriotic eagerness and spontaneous loyalty with which my subjects in all parts of my dominions have come forward to share in the common defense of their imperial interests. I am confident I shall not look to them in vain when I exhort them to sustain and renew their exertions until they have brought this struggle for the maintenance of the empire and the assertion of its supremacy in South Africa to a victorious conclusion.

"A treaty has been concluded with the German Emperor for the adjustment of the rights claimed by the two countries in Samoa, Tonga, and other Islands in the Pacific. To a portion of these stipulations the Government of the United States has also been a party.

"A bill will be introduced at an early date to give effect to the scheme of federation which has been adopted after most careful consideration by five of my Australian colonies.

"I have watched with cordial satisfaction the gradual development of my greater colonies into self-governing communities. I feel confident that the establishment of the great Federation of Australia will prove advantageous not only to the colonies immediately concerned, but also to the empire at large.

"The brilliant courage and soldierlike qualities of the colonial forces engaged in South Africa have already earned high admiration and patriotic offers of assistance which it was not possible to accept have come from many other colonies with populations of various races. I have received from the ruling chiefs of native States of India numerous offers to place their troops and the resources of their States at my disposal for service in South Africa. These proofs of their loyalty to myself and their devotion to the cause of my empire have afforded me much gratification.

"I regret that owing to insufficient rainfall in the Autumn over a great part of Western and Central India the harvests and pasturage have failed to such an extent as to create a famine. Timely measures have been taken by my Government and by the rulers of the native States affected to relieve the suffering and prevent starvation.

"I regret to add that the epidemic of plague continues, and that although its severity has not increased since last year, there is at present no prospect of its diminution.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons: The estimates for the public service of the year will be laid before you. The provision for military expenditure must be largely increased on account of the charge for military operations in South Africa. The experience of a great war must necessarily afford lessons of the greatest importance to the military administrations of the country. You will not, I am convinced, shrink from any outlay that may be required to place our defensive preparations on a level with the responsibilities which the possession of so great an empire has laid upon us. At a time when several other nations are perfecting their naval preparations at the cost of increasing efforts and sacrifices, the solicitude with which you have provided for the efficiency of our navy and our coast defenses will assuredly not be relaxed."

The rest of the speech, recognizing that the time is not propitious for domestic reforms involving large expenditure, recommends amendments to the agricultural, educational, company, railway, and accident laws, and concludes:

"It appears that service in South Africa may have the effect of disfranchising those taking part in it, and you will be asked to sanction a measure by which this injustice will be prevented.

"I commend your deliberations at this anxious time to the blessing and guidance of Almighty God."

PRESS COMMENT PESSIMISTIC.

LONDON, Jan. 31.—The general tone of the morning paper editorials is that the reopening of Parliament has afforded little or nothing to give the country assurance or to relieve it of a heavy load of anxiety. The Times says:

"The country is offered nothing but one more specimen of the ancient game of 'ins and outs.' The so-called reunion of the Irish party means little beyond the fact that nothing more is to be squeezed out of the Radical Party, and that the coffers of Ireland in America are empty."

The Daily Chronicle says:

"The Opposition ought to have abstained from a resolution of censure. They might, in all conscience, be content with the fresh crop of self-revelations which Ministers disclosed last night."

The Daily Telegraph, commenting upon the opening of Parliament yesterday, says:

"It would require the lime light of a Balzac, combined with the penetrating levity of a Horace Walpole, to give a just description of this strange sitting. In one of the darkest hours the empire has ever known, while the victorious enemy has thrown back our armies at every point, the supreme council of the nation, meeting to deal with these things, fills itself with the east wind of party recrimination and devotes itself to an excited and confused discussion of ancient history. Never was there a more ironical suggestion of how empires may be lost by sheer lack of imagination."

IRISH MEMBERS ARE UNITED.

All Sections Agree to Oppose the Continuance of the South African War.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—All sections of the Irish Nationalists were absent from the opening of Parliament, owing to their attendance at a meeting in Committee Room 16, Room 15 being avoided owing to its association with previous discords of the party. Timothy Harrington, member for the Harbour Division of Dublin, presided. The attendance included Messrs. Dillon, Healy, and John Redmond, and many of their followers.

Messrs. Harrington and Redmond urged that the time had come to restore unity in the ranks of the Parliamentary representatives of Irish nationalism. Mr. Redmond described the prestige of Great Britain as practically shattered, and said there seemed to be no better time for promoting union upon a sound and enduring basis, coupled with a policy of unity in combat and entire independence of all the English political parties. He then moved a resolution declaring at an end the division of the Irish Nationalist representatives, and that henceforth they should act together as one united party. The resolution was carried unanimously.

On Mr. Healy's motion, three whips were elected for the reunited party.

Later, Mr. Redmond made the following statement:

"The crisis in imperial affairs, the consequences of which no man can foresee, has caused a reunion in the Irish ranks. My resolution was accepted unanimously, chiefly because of the desire to enable Ireland to make herself felt, at this juncture, in pushing Irish reforms and in assisting the gallant South African republics to maintain their independence. The first act of the reunited Irish will be to move an amendment to the address, in favor of the Boers. This duty has been confided to me. I regard the reunion on Parnell's principles of independence as genuine. One question, that of the Chairmanship, will not be settled for some days. But I think a unanimous selection will be made."

Lobby gossip at Westminster this evening attaches more than usual importance to the meeting of the Irish Nationalists, inasmuch as the event formally ends the former alliance between the larger section of the Irish Nationalists and the supporters of Gladstone. To-day's reunion is based upon the principle that the united party must be "absolutely independent of all British parties."

One of the articles of the new agreement is that the Chairman is to be taken from the Parnellite section, and there are many things which indicate the selection of John Redmond, whose amendment to the address will be as follows:

"That the war now being urged in South Africa is unnecessary and unjust and has already entailed grievous suffering not only on the peoples of the South African Republics, but the people of the United Kingdom, and that the time has come when it should be brought to a close upon the basis of a recognition of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State."

It is assumed that, whether Mr. Redmond is selected or not, the Parliamentary tactics of the party will assume more of the combative character which he favors.

Of the eighty Nationalist members, fifty-three were present at to-day's meeting.

GEN. LAWTON'S BODY ARRIVES.

With It on the Thomas Came Mrs. Lawton and Children, and the Bodies of Other Officers.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 30.—With her flags at half mast, the United States transport Thomas entered this harbor to-day, bearing the bodies of Gen. Henry W. Lawton, Major John A. Logan, Jr., Lieut. Bennett, and Dr. J. J. L. Armstrong. In the cabin of the Thomas were about twenty passengers, including Mrs. Lawton and her children.

The vessel was met at the Golden Gate by Gen. Shafter and Lieut. Wilson, Major W. F. Tucker, brother-in-law of Mrs. Logan; Robert Bentley, a friend of the Logan family, and Capt. Barneson of the transport service. The Thomas was passed by the Quarantine authorities, and Gen. Shafter then escorted Mrs. Lawton and her children to the home of friends. The caskets containing the bodies were landed at the transport dock, and later taken to an undertaker's under an escort of artillery. It has been decided that no funeral services will be held here.

Arrangements have been made to convey the bodies of Gen. Lawton and Dr. Armstrong in a special train. Gen. Shafter has been especially detailed to accompany the remains East. The train is to consist of a baggage car, a composite car, and two Pullmans. The bodies will be placed in the composite car, and there will be a guard of infantrymen. One of the Pullmans will be placed at the disposal of Gen. Lawton's family. Gen. Shafter and Lieut. Wilson will be accommodated in the same car. The other car is for the widow and children of Major Logan and relatives and friends.

Mrs. Armstrong, who arrived on the Thomas, will accompany the body of her husband East.

QUAY'S CHANCES IN THE SENATE.

Different Reports Current in Washington as to the Outcome.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Two reports about the chances of Mr. Quay to be seated in the Senate were heard to-day. One is that Senator Proctor, who voted to seat Corbett in a former case of appointment by the Governor after a Legislature had refused to elect, will vote against Quay, with nine other Senators who voted for Corbett. Report has it that he has devoted a good deal of his time to increasing the negative vote.

Another announcement is that Representative Sibley of Pennsylvania declares that Quay will be seated by a large majority. He predicts that "Quay will be voted for by considerably more than a majority of the Republican Senators, and will secure a large number of votes on the Democratic side."

"I have not been working in behalf of Mr. Quay," Mr. Sibley adds, "but I have many friends in the Senate who have told me that they intend to vote to seat him. I am confident that I know Senators who will vote for Mr. Quay that he is not counting upon, and I know more than one Democratic Senator who intends to speak in his behalf. For every Republican vote cast against Mr. Quay there will be a Democratic vote to take its place.

"Col. Quay will again triumph over his opponents, and the proper thing for them to do is to acknowledge the existing facts, and if they intend to continue their fight to prepare for their next contest with him when the Legislature meets at Harrisburg next Winter."

NAVAL OFFICERS COMMENDED.

Gen. Bates and Capt. Wildes Praise Their Work in the Philippines.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The Navy Department has made public a letter from Gen. Bates strongly commending the officers of the navy who co-operated with the army in the capture of Zamboanga. He mentions Commander Very of the Castine, Lieut. Commander Nazro of the Manila, and Commander Sperry of the Yorktown.

Capt. Wildes of the Oregon has also made a report, which the department has published, commenting on the splendid service rendered at the capture of Vigan by Ensign Mustin of the gunboat Samar, in towing the boats with the landing party under a heavy fire.

WORD OF FREDERICK HEPPE.

The Relief Officer Who Was Captured Smuggles a Letter to His Friends.

Direct news from Frederick Heppe of this city, one of the two officers of the hospital ship Relief, who were captured by Filipinos while sailing in Manila Harbor last Decoration Day, has been received by his aunt, Miss Ella M. Sauer, of 226 East Fiftieth Street. The news is in the form of a letter to Capt. Harding of the Relief, to whom it was smuggled through the influence of another American prisoner.

Mr. Heppe, third officer of the Relief, was in a sailboat with Assistant Engineer Charles Blandford of the same vessel, when they became becalmed, and the insurgents put out in canoes and captured them. They have since been hurried from place to place, as the insurgents have had to flee before the American troops. On Dec. 20 they were at Lipa, fifty miles south of Manila, in the province of Batangas, and the letter to Capt. Harding is dated from that place on that day. It was promptly forwarded to Miss Sauer by Capt. Harding, for the envelope in which it arrived is postmarked Manila, Dec. 28. The letter is written with an indelible pencil, and reads as follows:

My Dear Sir: I have made previous attempts to let you know how we are, but I do not know whether you received any of my letters. So far we have fared pretty well, and are enjoying good heath. Through the kindness of Mr. Prespier, who is a prisoner here, we get this opportunity to write, and if you will communicate with Mrs. Preapier, his mother, she will forward any answer which you will send her for us.

We are very anxious to hear from you, and kindly let me know how I stand in regard to my position. May I also trouble you to send me $10. I would like to write more, but cannot at present.

Hoping to hear from you, and wishing you all a merry Christmas and happy New Year, I remain, yours respectfully,

FREDERICK HEPPE.

Mr. Heppe, before serving on the Relief, was second officer of the Red Cross ship State of Texas, when that vessel was in Cuban waters. The report of his capture in Manila harbor was duly chronicled in the press dispatches at the time, and later, his aunt said, he succeeded in communicating, through a Spanish prisoner who was released, with Gen. Otis, and Gen. Otis notified her of the fact.

Mr. Heppe, who is twenty-five years old, has dependent upon him two brothers and a sister, children, whose ages range from ten to fifteen years. Since his capture they have been kept entirely by Miss Sauer, who is Superintendent of the branch of the Free Circulating Library at Seventy-ninth Street and Second Avenue. Miss Sauer left no stone unturned to ascertain what became of her cousin. She wrote to Gen. Otis and every other American General in the Philippines, to Capt. Harding, to the naval commander of the station, and to the War Department, and she has kept up her correspondence with them, determined that he should not be forgotten and left to his fate. Miss Sauer also engaged the services of Lawyer Edward A. Sumner, who is trying to secure for the children some of Mr. Heppe's pay, due since his capture, and which could not be obtained because the Quartermaster's Department has no official information that he is a prisoner.

Mr. Sumner said yesterday that he communicated the circumstances of the case to Secretary of War Root, who at once promised to have it investigated, and sent to the military authorities in Manila ordering them to send a full report of the capture forthwith.

Farquhar Receives Venezuelans.

CARACAS, Venezuela, Jan. 30.—President Castro, the members of the Cabinet, and fifty officials visited Admiral Farquhar today on board his flagship, the New York, and later the Admiral gave a dinner in honor of United States Minister Loomis and Mrs. Loomis. Late this afternoon the New York sailed for Carthagena. The Machias will remain several days in Venezuelan waters.

THE EGLESTON WILL PROBATED

Antiquities, Books, and Scientific Apparatus Go to Institutions—Trinity a Beneficiary.

Prof. Thomas Egleston's will, which was executed on Jan. 10, 1898, was filed for probate yesterday. He asks that his body be buried from Trinity Church with as little expense and ostentation as possible, with a full choral service, and that his remains be placed next those of his wife, in the chancel of the church.

He directs that all the property received by him from his wife shall be divided among her sisters or their representatives, who are also to have such furniture from his residence at 35 Washington Square as they may select.

To Columbia College, for the department of mineralogy in the School of Mines, he leaves his collection of minerals. His tools and scientific instruments are to go to the metallurgical department of the School of Mines. He leaves $1,000 to the Grande Chancellerie de l'Ordre de la Legion d'Honneur de la France. His brother, George, is to have certain paintings and furniture.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art is to receive his ancient Japanese clocks and other ancient clocks, including one formerly owned by Frederick the Great. The town of Lenox, Mass., is to have $1,000 to care for the Patterson Egleston Monument at that place, and his brothers are to have the right to purchase his property there for $30,000. His brother George gets $5,000, and George's sons $5,000 each. George also receives a picture in silk of George Washington and a letter of Gen. Washington to the testator's grandfather. Certain paintings are bequeathed to Trinity Church for the Augustine Chapel and others for the May Egleston Rest at the Seaside Home, at Islip.

His wife's sisters are to be permitted to select books from his general library, and the rest of the books are given to Trinity Church for a lending library for any chapel the church may select.

The remainder of the estate is left to Trinity Church, the income to be used for the maintenance of its parish schools, that children may be taught to apply their faculties so as to earn a living.

WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S. WANAMAKER'S

The Present Tendency of Prices

MEN watch the market reports—stocks, produce, wheat, cotton, iron. That is to say, some men do. But all men and women personally, and nearly all through their homes also, have a direct interest in prices of the great staples when translated into manufactured articles.

The foregoing is often forgotten and losses follow. Just now is a time to consider retail prices carefully. They are certain to advance on almost everything, but the rise will not touch our Public until our present holdings are exhausted. We never speculate upon future advances, but always give our best bargains directly to the Public. They develop the tap root of our business—confidence.

In view of the future all things now offered at past prices are bargains. Thus more than ever is our present stock a museum of cheapness.

Last of the Fancy Plates

An adjourned sale—and a change in location. Continuation of last week's notable sale. Now in the basement. Gathered up many tid-bits from that table and this, and there's a fairly good assortment again. But quantities are small. Likewise prices. To-day may see the wind-up.

Re-upholstering Furniture

There can be no more opportune time for work of this nature than during February—that is, if you order it done here. First, there's a tidy sum to be saved on the price of the materials you may choose. Tapestries, damasks, and velours in small quantities, but in ample variety, are made cheaper by a third to a half. And the work itself,—skillful, high-class craftsmanship—shall cost you no more than we ourselves must pay. There's no profit for us on material—absolutely none on the labor. We keep our employes busy doing February. That's reward enough.

NO INJUNCTION FOR CAMPBELL.

Application of McGlory's Nephew to Restrain the Police Denied.

The injunction applied for by Frank J. Campbell, the nephew of "Billy" McGlory, to restrain the police from interfering with his purpose to have a piano played for the pleasure of patrons at his saloon, 315 West Fifty-ninth Street, was refused yesterday by Justice Andrews in the Supreme Court. In handing down his decision, Justice Andrews quoted Section 1,473 of the charter of Greater New York, which forbids the giving of any "entertainment of the stage" without a license. He continues:

"This court is not called upon, on an application of this character, to interpret the statute and decide in advance what is prohibited thereby, and what is permitted. If the playing of instrumental music, as the plaintiff proposes to have it conducted on his premises, shall be a lawful act, then his remedy would be to apply to a City Magistrate to have the police put under bonds to keep the peace."

CAMPBELL ARRESTED BY POLICE.

Frank J. Campbell, nephew of "Billy" McGlory, was arrested last night in his saloon at 315 West Fifty-ninth Street. Two musicians found in the place, a violinist and a pianist, were also arrested. Campbell was charged with having music in his place without a proper license. Acting Capt. Kear of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station made the arrests.

The three prisoners were released on a bond given by August Ruck, a builder, of 363 West Fifty-eighth Street.

They returned to the place at once. The police kept a close watch to rearrest them if they made a further effort to play. Campbell says it is "persecution," and that he might "fix things" if he wanted to, which he said he would never do.

Sunday Order in South Norwalk.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Jan. 30.—Mayor Bohannan of South Norwalk to-day issued an order to the police to hereafter close up all business on Sunday. When the Mayor issued his first Sunday-closing order he permitted ice cream, newspapers, and soda water to be sold and allowed his constituents to get shaved on that day. To-day he instructed Chief Vollmer to serve notice on all barber's shops, news stores, soda water and ice cream stands that they must be closed up tight on Sunday.

LOOKING FOR A CAT POISONER.

Rewards of Over $1,000 Offered by Up-Town Residents.

There is a golden opportunity up town for a second Sherlock Holmes. The case offers all the interesting details of a dime novel, mysterious disappearances, murders by the wholesale, and complications galore, but the victims are only cats and the villain a cat poisoner. However, it would go hard with this exterminator of the feline race if he were caught at the present time, for the residents in the vicinity of One Hundred and Thirty-first Street, between Lenox and Fifth Avenues, are up in arms against him, and no less than half a dozen rewards for his capture have been offered, amounting in all to over a thousand dollars.

The favorite haunt of the poisoner seems to be One Hundred and Thirty-first Street, and, although he has been at work without detection since last November, and hardly a day has gone by but what some Tabby or Tommy has turned its toes up and been cast into the gutter, the section has not been depopulated in the least, and back fence concerts occur nightly with unusual energy.

Cats of high and low degree are his prey, but so far the poisoner's identity remains a mystery, although formal action has been taken to locate and restrain him. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has been appealed to by Mrs. Mordaunt of 76 West One Hundred and Thirty-first Street, who has flooded the neighborhood with circulars offering a reward of $100 for information that will lead to the poisoner's arrest and conviction. There were no less than three cats and one dog lying dead in the street yesterday.

Mrs. Grant of 69 West One Hundred and Thirty-first Street is also interested in the welfare of the feline race. She said she had not gone out of the house in months without being faced by the body of a dead cat.

Col. Bates May Have to Report on Gen. Hawkins's Speech.

ARMY MAY ALSO INVESTIGATE

Gen. Roe's Views of the Affair—Incident Referred to as Another Coghlan Case.

The feeling is growing in National Guard circles that the making public of the remarks made by Brig. Gen. Hamilton S. Hawkins, United States Army, retired, at a social gathering of the officers of the Seventy-first Regiment may cause some serious complications. Col. W. G. Bates, commanding the Seventy-first Regiment, expressed that feeling when he said last night:

"I do not care to discuss the published speech of Gen. Hawkins, as I may be called upon to make a report on the occurrence in my official capacity. I will say, however, that in some details he was not correctly quoted in the report made public." Col. Bates also said that he anticipated an inquiry into the affair by the regular army authorities.

Other officers of the Seventy-first Regiment were equally reticent as to going into details of the meeting after the review. Last night was what is known as "headquarters night" at the armory, and the field, staff, and line officers were all present. While no official action was taken by these officers, there was a quiet effort made to find out who made public the report of the meeting at which Gen. Hawkins spoke.

Major Gen. Roe said regarding the talk of reopening the court of inquiry into the conduct of the officers of the Seventy-first Regiment at the front: "The court made its report, its findings were approved, and the court was discharged from further investigation of the matter in dispute. There has been no criticism of the line officers and the men of the regiment. In fact, in my indorsement of the findings of the court I commended the men, as did Gov. Roosevelt and others through whose hands the report passed. As Col. Downs and Capt. Whittle have left the service the only man affected by the report is Major Smith, who has availed himself of the civil courts to prevent the meeting of the board of examination appointed in his case."

Gen. Roe explained that Major Clinton H. Smith, who was Lieutenant Colonel of the volunteer regiment, had not yet been found guilty of any violation of military rules, but that the court of inquiry had ordered him before a board of examination "to examine into his moral character, capacity, and general fitness for service in the National Guard as a commissioned officer." Major Smith had avoided appearing before this board by obtaining an injunction restraining it from acting on his case.

Major Smith last night said the reason he had used the courts to prevent the meeting of the board of examination was that he feared that it would not go into a complete inquiry as to his case. "The board is only a medium to get rid of officers," he said. "Only stereotyped questions might be asked as to my age and length of service in the Guard, then the board might retire me. I would like a complete investigation of my services in the war, as I believe that I would be vindicated. I am working to obtain that investigation.

"I do not know who made public the speech of Gen. Hawkins, but I believe he was correctly quoted, and that he told the true facts surrounding the fight at San Juan Hill. I will not ask that the court of inquiry be reconvened on account of this evidence, as I would prefer that Gov. Roosevelt would give such orders of his own volition."

"Either Gen. Hawkins had his confidence betrayed at a social gathering, or else he has placed himself in a position to be court-martialed," said a regular army officer of high rank, who is stationed at the Army Building in Whitehall Street. "Gen. Hawkins," said the officer, "had a perfect right to talk in a social way among his friends about the campaign in Cuba, but if he made his remarks with the intention that they should find their way into the public press, he is amenable to the army regulations for criticising superior officers.

"The quoted speech severely arraigns Major Gen. Shafter and Brig. Gen. Kent, both superior officers of Gen. Hawkins. I believe that the present case is similar to that of Capt. Coghlan of the Raleigh, whose remarks made at a social gathering were given to the public without his authority."

GOV. ROOSEVELT WILL DO NOTHING.

Says He Has No Interest in the Kent-Hawkins Controversy.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Gov. Roosevelt will not reopen the court of inquiry of the Seventy-first Regiment on the statements made by Gen. Hawkins. He said this morning that he had absolutely no interest in the controversy between Gens. Kent and Hawkins, and that so far as Gen. Hawkins's statement went it confirmed the testimony taken before the court of inquiry rather than disproving it.

Gen. Hawkins's findings were, he said, as were the court's, that the rank and file of the Seventy-first Regiment were brave, and that the men would have fought bravely had not the officers in question deserted them.

IN EULOGY OF DR. McGLYNN.

Rev. Father Ducey on a Millionaire's View of Poverty.

Two clergymen of different creeds met on the same platform before the Social Reform Club last night to pay tribute to the memory of another clergyman, Dr. Edward McGlynn. Father Ducey of St. Leo's and the Rev. Dr. W. S. Rainsford of St. George's were the clerical eulogists, while Sylvester L. Malone, a nephew of the late Father Malone, and a number of the members who had been close associates of the dead priest also contributed reminiscences.

Dr. Rainsford confined his remarks strictly to the subject of Dr. McGlynn's work in the cause of social reform. Father Ducey, however, said a few words about "grasping avaricious monopolies" and made a few remarks about "sacrilegious teachings by some of the money powers."

"The teachings of Dr. McGlynn," he said, "were the same as those of all the Great Fathers of the Roman Catholic Church. St. Ambrose, St. Gregory and others all taught that utter destitution is the degradation of mankind. That poverty, which Christ taught was blessed, is not the destitution that the controllers of monopolies of today would have us believe.

"Not long ago, a millionaire told a Bible class in a Fifth Avenue Baptist Church of the blessings of being poor. Do you think it is a blessing to a child to be born in a dark tenement of a mother so weakened by poverty that she is scarcely strong enough to breathe? Such a teaching is sacrilegious, and it was to hear of a man who struggled to teach against such a condition of affairs that we came here to-night."

GERMAN STEAMER WRECKED.

Thirteen Sailors of the Remus Drowned and Her Cargo Lost.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—The German steamer Remus, Capt. Willems, from Philadelphia Jan. 4, via Dartmouth Jan. 22, has been wrecked at Hornsriff, near Aarhuus, Denmark, where she was bound. Her cargo is a total loss.

Fourteen of the crew were saved, but the Captain and thirteen men were drowned. Foreigners constituted the entire crew.

The Remus, hailing from Hamburg, and owned by C. Andersen, is a steel steamer, built at West Hartlepool in 1889, and registers 1,655 tons. She carried a cargo consisting of 181,562 bushels of corn, valued at $62,438, and 9,100 grain bags, valued at $455.

Appropriation for Dewey Arch.

The Municipal Council yesterday adopted a resolution calling upon the Board of Estimate to appropriate a sufficient sum of money for the preservation of the Dewey Arch for one year, the work to be done under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, Lighting, and Supplies. Councilman Cassidy of Queens alone voted in the negative, his reason being that the arch in its present location is a source of danger to human life. Mr. Cassidy explained that one of his constituents, in passing behind the arch, was run down by a carriage and seriously injured.

TARIFF FOR PUERTO RICO.

Majority of the Ways and Means Committee Decides to Impose a 25 Per Cent. Duty.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The Republicans of the Ways and Means Committee of the House to-night laid down definite lines upon which the Republican leaders of the House have decided to legislate for Puerto Rico so far as tariff duties are concerned. The decision reached commits the Republicans of the Ways and Means Committee to the theory that Puerto Rico and the Philippines are not the territory of the United States within the meaning of that section of the Constitution which provides that customs and revenue laws shall be uniform throughout the United States. In other words, it commits them to the view that the new possessions can be governed as colonies, and that discriminating duties can be laid against them.

The question arose in connection with the bill, introduced ten days ago by Representative Payne of New York, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, to extend the customs revenue laws of the United States to Puerto Rico and to make it a collection district. This bill was designed to remove all tariff barriers between Puerto Rico and the United States. Mr. Payne stated at the time of the introduction of the bill that he had offered it of his own motion after listening to the hearings before the Committee on Insular Affairs.

The Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, to which the bill was referred, discussed it at several secret meetings, and to-day decided to favor a substitute which will be offered when the bill comes up for discussion in the full committee to-morrow. This substitute provides that the tariff on Puerto Rico against goods from foreign countries, except the United States, shall be the same as that against goods entering the United States from such countries, but that goods imported into the United States from Puerto Rico or from the United States into Puerto Rico shall pay 25 per cent. of the tariff upon foreign goods. That is to say, that between Puerto Rico and the United States there shall be a horizontal reduction of 75 per cent. in the tariff. The substitute also provides that the revenue from such tariff duties shall be used to defray the expense of administration in the Island.

The action of the Republicans to-day amounts to a decision that the section of the Constitution above referred to, which has been the subject of a special investigation of a sub-committee of the Ways and Means Committee for several weeks, does not apply to our insular possessions, and that the Constitution of the United States does not extend over them.

"BADGER" GANG CLEANED OUT.

Capt. Thomas Says Tenderloin Precinct Is Now Practically Rid of the Women.

By five arrests made yesterday afternoon as the culmination of a long series the police of the West Thirtieth Street Station believe the gang of Chicago "badger" women has been broken up. The general crusade has now lasted several weeks, and as a result of it the police say ten of the women with their male companions, have sailed for Europe, twelve have gone to New Orleans, and seven others have returned to Chicago.

The police have visited the flat houses frequented by them and warned them to leave. In the case of those enumerated above railroad and steamship tickets were shown to the detectives as an evidence of good faith. Out of the twenty-seven twenty have been arrested as suspicious persons and sent to Headquarters to be photographed.

Detectives Sheehan, Glennon, and Lockwood went Saturday to a flat suspected by them at 142 West Twenty-seventh Street. They made the usual signal, a scratch on the door. A man opened the door. He was quickly overpowered and sent to the station house by Detective Glennon. The two remaining detectives entered the flat and set the safety signals by means of a lamp and a curtain.

In about an hour's time a woman appeared with a victim. Both were seized, the woman taken to the station house and the man's name secured. Two other women and their escorts were similarly secured. At the station house the man arrested, who is, according to the police, the "creeper," or man who robs the victim, gave the name of George Leonard. The women were Pearl Leonard, May Bowen, and Bessie Williams. All were photographed at Headquarters, and then discharged in court.

At the time of these arrests other members of the Chicago gang were living in the same house. Finding things becoming too warm for them, they moved to 121 West Twenty-seventh Street. Within a few hours the police had a complaint from "Frank Jones" of a two-hundred-dollar robbery at the latter address. The house was deserted when the police visited it, but yesterday the members of the gang returned and were arrested.

The prisoners were Daniel and Thomas Nelson of 121 West Twenty-seventh Street, who said they were actors; Mark Morris, 131 West Twenty-ninth Street; Nellie Chamberlain, 161 West Thirty-second Street, and Fanny Prince, 121 West Twenty-seventh Street. The police say Thomas Nelson is the leader of the gang.

"These last arrests," said Capt. Thomas, "practically breaks up the Nelson gang, and clear the precinct of 'badger' women. When I first came here complaints were almost of hourly occurrence, now they are becoming less."

The Stars and Stripes were entwined with the flags of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State on the walls of the banquet hall at the residence of Thomas St. John Gaffney, 41 Riverside Drive, last evening, at a dinner given to Montagu White, Consul General of the Transvaal to London. Among the guests were Robert B. Roosevelt, ex-Minister to Holland; Kiliaen Van Rensselaer, ex-Judge Van Hoesen, Theodore M. Banta, Andrew J. Toemey, President of the Pennsylvania Milling and Export Company, whose flour was seized by the British Government at Delagoa Bay; Gen. James R. O'Beirne, the unrecognized representative of the Transvaal in the United States; George A. Zabriskie, New York representative of the Pillsbury Milling Company; Fritz Elkan of Johannesburg, Joseph I. C. Clarke, William McAdoo, ex-Assistant Secretary of the Navy; Frederick Brown Esler, George W. Van Siclen, representative of the Africander Bund, and the Rev. Father William St. Elmo Smith, Chaplain of the Fire Department.

Controller Coler reviewed the Thirteenth Regiment of Brooklyn last evening at the regiment's armory. Besides the Controller, the guests of the evening were Brig. Gen. James McLeer, commander of the Second Brigade; Col. W. L. Watson, formerly commander of the Thirteenth Regiment, and Major George Cochran, also a former officer of the regiment. Preceding the review there was an exhibition drill by the regiment. During the evening the officers of the regiment presented to their newly chosen commander, Col. David E. Austen, a life-size oil painting of himself.

Trunk Line Meetings.

Separate meetings of the Trunk Line Freight Association and the Passenger Association were held at headquarters, in the Jersey Central Railroad building, yesterday. The freight association considered the question of revising rates, but came to no conclusion. The passenger association decided on one-fare rates for the National Educational Association meeting at Charleston, S. C., in July, and also for the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., Jan. 30.—A gang of Italian laborers employed in the gravel pits at Morris Plains, and who lived in a large shanty near the edge of the pit, celebrated the birthday of one of their number last night with serious results. When the jollification was at its height a kerosene lamp was upset. The straw used for bedding took fire, and the flames spread so rapidly the men had hardly time to escape with their lives. Seven hundred dollars which had been saved up by the Italians was burned.

W. BOURKE COCKRAN REPLIES.

Anent Bryan's Utterances He Says that Events, and Not the Leaders, Will Make the Issue.

The statement was shown to W. Bourke Cockran yesterday which Mr. Bryan was reported to have made at Pawtucket, R. I., to the effect that he was as stanch in his support of free silver coinage at 16 to 1 as ever, and answering the announcement by Mr. Cockran that he would support the Nebraska statesman if he would eliminate free silver from his platform by saying that Mr. Cockran knew better than he did himself that he would not consent to anything in the shape of a true on his financial doctrine.

Mr. Cockran said: "I have never appealed to Mr. Bryan for a truce on silver, and I have little sympathy with such appeals. I repeat now that the issues of a campaign are not made by leaders, nor even by conventions, but by the course of events.

"Events have eliminated the silver question from this campaign. Events may or may not revive it as an issue four years hence; that possibility is not worth discussing. Events have made imperialism the one paramount question that can be settled by the next election.

"To say, therefore, that the silver question cannot play a decisive part in the next campaign is simply to express a belief that the election will turn upon the issues of 1900 and not upon the issues of 1896 or on those of 1904. The American people will vote this year directly on the question of imperialism, and this question will be the one decisive issue of this election, however much Mr. Bryan or the lesser politicians who have risen to sight by clinging to his skirts might prefer to conduct the campaign on some other issue."

Mr. Cockran said that the silver question, although it cannot be made the issue of the campaign, may yet exercise a powerful influence upon it by dividing the opponents of imperialism, and thus aiding the Republicans, who have in the furtherance of imperialism trampled the principles of the Declaration of Independence under foot.

"Nobody who knows Mr. Bryan," said Mr. Cockran, "can question that he would continue in all seasons and under all circumstances to advocate the free coinage of silver, but it is important to learn if he will accept the decision of the convention as to whether the coming election is the proper time for taking the judgment of the American people on the question embodied in the Chicago platform of 1896 or on the living issue which has arisen during the last two years."

TRAVELING MEN FOR VAN WYCK.

Want the Democratic Convention to Name Him for President.

With a membership of over 33,000 traveling men the Commercial Travelers and Hotel Men's Anti-Trust League has set out on its campaign to fight the trusts. The league has openly announced its intention to secure, if possible, the nomination of ex-Justice Augustus Van Wyck of Brooklyn for President on the Democratic ticket, and will pledge its support to him during the campaign. Headquarters of the league have been established in the St. James Building, Twenty-fifth Street and Broadway.

An endless-chain system has been used to secure the large membership, and it is asserted that before Summer the membership will have become so large as to have a voice in determining the Presidential candidate. Eighty per cent. of the members are in the South and Middle West. William Hoge, Secretary and Treasurer of the league, in speaking yesterday of its plans and prospects, said:

"The league holds the trust question of paramount interest, exceeding in importance the money question. At the same time the mass of our members are soundmoney men. For that reason we favor the candidacy of Judge Van Wyck. That he is particularly well liked in the South and many parts of the West is evidenced by hundreds of letters we have received favoring him. We have received an unusually large number from Indiana. As between Bryan and McKinley, I have no hesitation in saying the league would support Bryan."

Mr. Hoge said that when Mr. Bryan was in the city the proposition to make Judge Van Wyck Bryan's running mate was discussed at a conference which Mr. Bryan attended.

In order to secure National legislation on the subject of trusts, the league is represented by a committee consisting of Joseph J. Willett, who launched the Van Wyck boom at Tammany Hall last Fourth of July; John R. McLean of The Cincinnati Enquirer, and Clark Howell of The Atlanta Constitution.

Sixty branches of the league have been established in as many cities, and the members propose to hold numerous mass meetings in the Fall and to take part in all the political parades they can.

A Bryan Vote in Slater's District.

The vote cast at the special election held in the Thirty-first Assembly District last Tuesday was canvassed by the Aldermen and Councilmen of New York County yesterday. The vote as officially announced was as follows: Samuel S. Slater, (Rep.,) 4,881; Leon Goldrich, (Dem.,) 4,042. Slater was then declared elected by a plurality of 839 votes. William Jennings Bryan received one vote in the Eleventh Election District, although he was ineligible for the office.

New Jersey State Officers Re-elected.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 30.—The Legislature in joint session to-day re-elected State Controller William S. Hancock and State Treasurer George B. Swain for a term of three years each. Both are Republicans and have already served two terms each. The Governor sent to the Senate the name of Samuel A. Atkinson for Prosecutor of Burlington County. The appointment ends a bitter factional contest for the position.

INTEMPERANCE IN INDIA.

Bipin Chandra Pal, a Hindu, Talks Before the National Temperance Society.

The National Temperance Society last night entertained Bipin Chandra Pal of the Anglo-India Temperance Society, a high caste Hindu who is at present on a lecture tour of the United States, at a reception in the society's hall at 3 West Eighteenth Street. Many prominent ministers of the city were present.

The guest of honor in a brief address said that he had come to America "to meet real Western thought, in the firm belief that in the future of India America would have a larger share." In common with all educated Indians, he said, he was grateful to England for the higher thought and the larger and nobler life which her Government had opened to India. But the English, he believed, could do no more for his country. As a suzerain power, he declared that England looked down upon the Indian peoples, and that this attitude was fatal to successful education.

Regarding the temperance question in India, he said that the problem had been solved thousands of years ago. Under the old Hindu law there had been five moral sins. The second of these was indulgence in strong drink, and the last association with a drunkard. Until the English came into power, he declared, the evil of strong drink had been almost unknown. Under English rule, however, intemperance has become one of India's greatest sins. The evil, he said, had been resisted by the educated and the high-caste Hindus, but it had a firm hold on the masses. The present excise law of the Indian Government, he declared, was a great political evil. He had been joined by many influential Hindus in a protest to the Government, asking that if they were not allowed to choose their own rulers, they at least be given liberty to free themselves from the evil of intemperance.

Medical Student Hit by a Train.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Jan. 30.—Harry Parke, a medical student, was returning home from college in New York last night, when, on alighting from the train, he was struck by the locomotive of an east-bound Royal Blue Line Express. He was thrown twenty feet and picked up unconscious. His shoulder was broken, several ribs fractured, and he received numerous bruises. It is thought he will recover.

MONTANA LAWMAKER TALKS OF BRIBERY

But Says He Received No Money for Voting for Senator Clark.

WITNESS WON AT FARO BANK

Also Found $1,100 in His Room, Which He Thinks Was Thrown Through the Transom.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—When the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day adjourned its hearing of the charges made against Senator Clark of Montana in connection with his election to the United States Senate, it was understood that the defense would be prepared to proceed with its witnesses not later than Monday next. Mr. Campbell said he would have only one or two more witnesses, and, without stating how many men he would call, Mr. Faulkner said his witnesses would follow each other in rapid succession, and there would be no delays.

There was but one witness on the stand to-day. This was J. H. Geiger, who on a contest was given the seat of State Senator in the Montana Legislature, from Flathead County, at first occupied by Mr. Whiteside, who is one of the principal movers in the fight against Mr. Clark. Geiger voted for Clark, but he insisted that he did so only because the Republican caucus had declared for him.

He confessed to taking $3,600 in money home after the adjournment of the Legislature. Of this sum he claimed to have won from $1,500 to $1,800 playing faro, and to have found $1,100 of it in $100 bills in his room. This latter amount he thought had been left for him to influence him to vote against Bills 132 and 134, relating to corporations, on the proposition to pass them over the Governor's veto, but he did not know who had left it there. He thought the envelope must have been thrown through the transom of the room.

Geiger said he had received no money to vote for Mr. Clark, and while he admitted to having been approached with the view of bribing him on other propositions, he refused to give the names of persons who had talked with him, because to do so would incriminate himself.

Upon being questioned concerning his financial condition when he was nominated, he said it was "just moderate." He had been in the hotel business and had sold out; he could not remember just how much he received, but after much questioning said he thought the amount was about $25. He had also received $200 from his mother's estate and had borrowed about $300 for the campaign.

After he was given his seat he had voted twice for Leonard for Senator and then for W. A. Clark. Mr. Geiger hesitated considerably over a question as to what money he had deposited in the First National Bank at Kalispel during or since the session of the Legislature, but admitted that in May last he had bought a draft for $2,500, paying currency for it. He had afterward in August opened an account at that bank, depositing $800 in currency in the name of "John H. Geiger, agent." Since that time he had made other deposits and had borrowed from the bank $2,300.

"Some of the money I got at poker and the faro bank," he said, and added: "I don't remember whether I won any at poker—my experience was about even; but at faro bank I did."

"Did you win $2,000 at faro?"

"It's some short of $2,000, but at Helena and Butte together I think I quit about $1,500 or $1,800 ahead."

"You were a State Senator; did you not know it was a misdemeanor to play faro?"

"Well, I was about as conscientious in that matter as some other Montana officials."

"How do you explain the fact that you had so much better luck at faro after you entered the Legislature than before?" asked Senator Chandler of Mr. Geiger.

"Why, Senator," was the reply, "I didn't have. I had lived in Montana twenty-two years, and fell into the ways of the people soon after going there. I had frequently in the early days won more than I did after my election to the State Senate."

All told, Mr. Geiger said he had in his possession $3,600 when he reached Libby, after going home from the Legislature at Helena.

"Where did you get the amount that you have not already accounted for?"

"I can't tell without uncovering my private affairs."

"Do you decline to tell?" "I do."

The question as to where the money came from was repeated. The witness gazed at the ceiling for fully five minutes and at last said: "Where did I get it? Why, in Helena."

In reply to a question as to the source from which the money came, the witness said:

"I don't know. To be frank, there were other ways of getting money in Helena during the session of the Legislature. I was approached at different times to vote for different bills."

"Did you make any money in that way?"

"I don't know. I never sold my vote, but I got money."

Mr. Geiger said that it was common talk all over town that money could be had for votes against Bill 132 or Bill 134, but said he could not explain who had proposed paying him $1,100 for his vote without criminating himself, though still denying that he had sold his vote. After much questioning Senator Chandler elicited the fact that witness had bought property in Kalispel in his brother's name. Witness also admitted the purchase of lots and the construction of buildings on them at Libby.

Mr. Geiger said that he had not had any conversations concerning the Senatorial contest with Senator Clark prior to the latter's election to the Senate. He had visited the Senator's room once on the day of the Senator's election, but he said neither W. A. Clark, Mr. Wellcome, C. W. Clark, nor any of them, so far as he remembered, ever approached him in regard to his vote, but before he was seated he was frequently asked how he would vote if he should get his seat, and uniformly replied that his actions would be controlled entirely by the action of the Republican caucus.

SUBSIDY BILL IS OPPOSED.

John De Witt Warner, Representing the Reform Club, Is Heard.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The hearing on the Shipping bill before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries was unusually spirited to-day, owing to the criticisms of the measure presented by John De Witt Warner of New York and some counter criticisms by members of the committee on a letter issued by the New York Reform Club, of which Mr. Warner is a prominent member. Mr. Warner opposed the bill section by section, urging that it gave bounties on gross tonnage instead of on the tonnage of goods carried. Chairman Grosvenor read the letter of the New York Reform Club, in which reference was made to the influences being brought to bear on Senators and members. Mr. Warner defended the letter, but members of the committee protested against its statements.

The letter of the Reform Club read by Mr. Grosvenor said, in part:

"Lobbyists in the employ of the prospective beneficiaries of the bounty have already carefully 'canvassed' Congress, which means that every 'approachable' Senator and Congressman has, by some kind of a promise or bribe, been 'reasoned' with and made to see the benefit of subsidies."

The letter also commented on the strength of the "subsidy lobby now in Congress," declaring it to be the "most effective lobby that ever infested our National capital."

Mr. Warner said he had not signed the letter, but it probably expressed the views of a majority of the club.

Mr. Fordney of Michigan, a member of the committee, hotly resented the statements of the letter, and declared:

"My opinion is that no man will make a statement that a Congressman can be bribed unless he be a thief himself."

Other members of the committee protested against the terms of the letter. Mr. Warner said, however, that he had not come to discuss the statements made, and he proceeded with his argument against the bill.

Chamber of Commerce Meeting.

The Chamber of Commerce, at its regular monthly meeting to-morrow, will take up some matters of importance. Chief among them is the consideration of the Subsidy Shipping bill before Congress. The committee to which this bill was referred has drafted a report which will be submitted, recommending a conservative course. It will approve the idea of reviving the American merchant marine, but will be general in its nature, and not urge the adoption of the particular measure before Congress. The Chamber will also enter a protest against the taking by Congress of the control of the pilotage system out of the State's hands.

SENATORS DISCUSS FILIPINOS.

Bacon Talks Three Hours for Self-Government—Teller Says Pacification Must Come First.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—For more than three hours to-day Mr. Bacon (Dem., Ga.,) occupied the attention of the Senate with a discussion of the Philippine question. His argument had for its basis his own resolutions referring to the Government's policy toward the Philippines. He maintained that the United States owed as much to the Filipinos as it does to the Cubans, to whom by resolution of Congress self-government had been promised, and he strongly urged that his resolutions declaring it to be the intention of this Government to confer the right of government upon the Filipinos be adopted as a means not only of terminating the war, but of extending to a struggling people justice and freedom.

A lively colloquy at one point occurred between Mr. Bacon and several other Senators. Mr. Spooner (Rep., Wis.,) inquired on what theory Mr. Bacon proposed a declaration of this Congress that could in any way bind subsequent Congresses.

Mr. Bacon responded that the same declaration which the Fifty-sixth Congress had made with reference to the Cubans ought to be made with reference to the Filipinos. Congress had the right to make such a declaration, even if it was not binding upon future Congresses.

Mr. Teller, (Sil. Rep., Col.,) the author of the Cuban resolution, said that it had been a matter of sincere regret that he had not incorporated in the resolutions the people of all Spanish possessions acquired by the United States in addition to the Cubans. He believed, however, that the United States stood before the world committed to the self-government of the Filipinos—that is, such self-government as they were capable of. He maintained that the pacification of the Islands must be the first object of the United States, however. He regretted that this pacification now must be by the sword.

SENATE HOLDS UP TREATIES.

Delay in Ratifying International Agreements Is Being Criticised at the Capital.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Senators who do not approve of the manifestly prolonged avoidance of pending treaties say that there is inexcusable indolence shown in the refusal of the Senate to take up and ratify the important treaties now pending, and that the neglect of the Puerto Rican situation in particular threatens to disturb and annoy the country. To this may be added the vexation probable among the nations with which the United States have been negotiating reciprocity treaties in the expectation that they would be ratified as soon as the Congress meets.

The Samoan treaty of partition is out of the way, but it is asserted that there is no present intention of taking up the treaties negotiated between the United States on the one hand and France, the British West Indies, and the Argentine Republic on the other.

The Hague treaty is another convention calling for prompt action. With that treaty approved of, obstacles would be removed and the President might find a way to approach the combatants in South Africa.

Senators who were asked about these treaties to-day said that it seemed as if the Administration had not fully made up its mind as to whether they were to be ratified or not. The French treaty, by its terms, must be ratified within eight months from its signature by the contracting parties. That limits the time of ratification to March 24. The Argentine convention provides for ratification in seven months, or by Feb. 10. The British treaties may be ratified within twelve months. The Senate has had them in hand for nearly two months and has done practically nothing toward ratifying them.

WANTS NUISANCES ABATED.

Mr. Muller Will Ask for a National Law to Relieve Staten Islanders from Smoke and Stenches.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Representative Muller of the Staten Island District will introduce to-morrow a bill for a purpose that interest a great many residents of Staten Island. It provides that no person or corporation shall maintain a nuisance in any State or Territory of the United States, either by the production of smoke or the creation of odors unpleasant or unhealthful to the people near such establishments, and that the United States courts shall have the power to inflict a penalty of $5,000 fine and ten years' imprisonment for an offense by a person, and a corporation shall pay from $10,000 to $20,000 for a violation of the law.

Mr. Muller says this legislation is needed to correct a bad state of things existing along the Kill Von Kull, where there are smoke-producing and smell-making factories manufacturing clouds of smoke and many abominable gases to float across the narrow stream and oppress the residents of Brighton and other towns along the Kill. New Jersey does not pay any heed to the remonstrances that are made, and the State of New York cannot exercise jurisdiction in New Jersey. Mr. Muller says he knows that the difficulties of smoke-consuming are not so great that every factory may not apply them, in order to gratify persons who do not like smoke and fumes.

"The trouble is," said Mr. Muller, "that if we do not correct the evil complained of by this bill, not only shall we lose all comfort of living on the North Shore, but others, who do not live there, but who would be drawn to Staten Island, will keep away on account of the smells and smoke, and thus the value of real estate will be impaired and the march of improvement will be arrested.

"I am informed that the smoke producers can with little expenditure apply apparatus to consume smoke, and the furnaces and other things that produce bad smells injurious to health can be as easily suppressed in Staten Island as they can be in Paris. At all events, I shall try to find a way to stop some vexatious nuisances from which I have been one of the sufferers."

WANT A WARSHIP BUILT HERE.

Brooklyn Representatives Present Arguments to Secretary Long.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—A delegation of Brooklyn Representatives, including Messrs. Fitzgerald, May, and Driggs, called at the Navy Department to-day to urge upon Secretary Long the propriety of providing for the construction of at least one first-class naval vessel at the New York Navy Yard.

The delegation argued that it would be of inestimable advantage in an emergency for the Government to have at command the services of such a nucleus of a naval construction force as would be secured through the employment at the navy yards of as many workingmen as could be profitably employed on one big naval vessel. Also the project would tend to standardize the navy yard force, the force at work on the new ship could be drawn upon whenever needed for repair work, and when the repairs were completed the men could be returned to the ship, thus avoiding the wholesale discharges that now occur.

Secretary Long agreed to consider carefully the arguments presented. But it was evident that he did not regard the suggestion as sound, rather fearing the large addition to the navy yard forces that would ensue if this application were granted, for the same privilege would have to be extended to the other navy yards.

Short Session in the House.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The House was in session only a little over an hour to-day, and business of minor importance was all that was transacted.

CONGRESSIONAL NOTES.

The Senate yesterday provided by resolution that Feb. 22 Washington's Farewell Address shall be read to the Senate by Senator Foraker of Ohio.

A bill passed by the Senate yesterday grants a pension of $50 a month to Annie E. Brumby, mother of Admiral Dewey's Flag Lieutenant.

W. V. Sullivan, recently elected Senator from Mississippi, was sworn in yesterday.

The House River and Harbor Committee reached a formal determination yesterday not to present a River and Harbor bill at the present session of Congress.

SHIPWRECKED CREWS IN PORT.

Survivors of the Schooners B. W. Morse and Charles B. Leet Rescued After Fearful Struggle at Sea.

The crews of two wrecked vessels were brought into port yesterday, each with a tale to tell of losing battles with howling winds and pounding seas. The Ward Line steamer City of Washington, from Cuban ports by way of Nassau, brought Capt. Newbury and three distressed seamen of the schooner B. W. Morse, which was abandoned on Jan. 21 in a water-logged condition after the survivors of the crew had been taken off by the Ward Line steamer Saratoga and landed at Nassau. Two of the Morse's crew lost their lives in that storm.

The schooner Anne Lord, from Fernandina, Fla., brought into port as passengers Capt. Rollins and five seamen of the schooner Charles B. Leet, bound to New York from Norfolk, which was abandoned in a water-logged and sinking condition last Sunday off the Jersey coast, the Anne Lord rescuing the crew.

The B. W. Morse sailed from Jacksonville for San Juan, Puerto Rico, on Jan. 16. Two days later she ran into the teeth of a howling gale from the southeast. After setting from this point for a day, the wind suddenly shifted to south-southwest and west, thus kicking up a tremendous cross sea, in which the schooner labored and strained heavily, until the inevitable leak was sprung.

The pumps were manned, but the seams opened in an ever-increasing number of places and the seamen worked until exhausted. The water gained steadily in the hold, and at frequent intervals green seas swept completely over the craft. Everything on the deck was carried away, and for forty-eight hours the schooner rolled and pitched, scudding along before the gale under bare poles. On the morning of the 20th, the gale having moderated to some extent, two seamen, named Peter McNamara and Charles Wessels, ventured on deck. They were immediately caught by a big sea and swept over the side like chips over a waterfall. They were never seen again. The pumps were kept going feebly by the remaining seamen, but the water kept gaining. Throughout the next night the Captain and his men labored, while the doomed vessel slowly settled.

On the 21st the steamer Saratoga hove in sight, and, launching her boat, rescued the crew after much difficulty, landing them at Nassau, where the City of Washington later picked them up. The B. W. Morse registered 440 tons and hailed from Bath, Me. She was built in 1879.

The story of the wreck of the Charles B. Leet is very similar to that of the Morse, except that none of the Leet's crew was lost. The Leet left Norfolk for New York with lumber on Jan. 22. She made fair weather of it until last Thursday, when the northwest gale, that has already wrought so much havoc on and off the North Atlantic Coast, struck her. Capt. Rollins, finding his vessel overpowered by the gigantic seas sweeping over her bows, put about and tried to run to the southward. He lost his spanker in this operation, and the schooner became unmanageable. The seas made a plaything of her. Soon her seams began to open. Her deck load worked loose, and for three days the men played a losing game at the pumps.

On Sunday the Anne Lord hove in sight and took off the crew. The Leet at this time was in latitude 38.18, longitude 73.23. The vessel's bows were under water and there were three feet of water in her cabin.

COUPLE CHARGED WITH LARCENY

Alleged that Their Trunks, Held for Debt, Contained Wood.

Lebretto Brambilla and his wife, Rosa, who were arrested and subsequently released several days ago on a charge of grand larceny made by Viola Louise of 347 West Forty-fourth Street, were again arraigned in the West Side Court yesterday morning on a charge of petit larceny under Miss Louise's complaint.

She alleges that the two Brambillas, who were associated with her in a theatrical project, attempted to make away with her trunks, containing costumes worth $400. They were intercepted by a detective at the Fall River Line pier. It is alleged that they also stole a sealskin sack from Mrs. Morton, their landlady, at 418 West Forty-third Street, and that they contracted a debt of $50 at the Hotel America, Irving Place and Fifteenth Street, leaving a telescope and trunks containing blocks of wood and junk, as security for payment.

The Brambillas were held by Magistrate Mott for examination Friday. It was said that still other complaints would be brought against the couple. Mrs. Brambilla said in court that she was a Cuban, whose family had been murdered by Spanish soldiers in the late Cuban revolution.

THEFTS AT PRATT INSTITUTE.

Alleged Overcoat Thief Held—Many Robberies Reported.

Through the arrest of Arthur Robbins, twenty years old, of 186 Franklin Avenue, Brooklyn, yesterday, it came to light that the students of Pratt Institute have been the victims of many robberies during the past two months. Within that period more than a dozen thefts have been committed at the institution. Overcoats left in the wardrobe have been the especial prey of the thieves.

Young Robbins was accused in the Adams Street Police Court yesterday of stealing an overcoat belonging to a student at the institute. Robbins denied the theft. He said that he had been traveling with a burlesque company which was stranded at Highland Falls, N. Y. He was held for examination.

Fire in Cotton Cargo.

The Old Dominion steamship Princess Anne came into port yesterday morning with fire in her forward hold. The fire was discovered in the cotton cargo, while the vessel was passing the Highlands at midnight, and Capt. Davis gave orders to steam with all speed to the dock at Pier 36 North River, which she reached at 2 o'clock in the morning. Steam was injected into the forward hold, and on reaching the dock the crew and longshoremen were put to work getting out the coton bales. About fifty bales of cotton were injured. The damage to the vessel was slight. The twenty passengers did not know of the fire until they were leaving the ship.

BILL FOR OFFICIAL REFEREES.

Justice McAdam Favors Senator Ford's Measure, but Majority Is Said to be Against It.

It is believed that certain members of the legal profession are already at work against the bill introduced by State Senator Ford providing for official referees. The bill, which was introduced in the Senate on Monday, provides for an amendment of the Code of Civil Procedure so as to authorize the Justices of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the First Department to select from among the attorneys and counselors of the Supreme Court residing in the district, who have practiced there at least ten years, such number of official referees as they may deem necessary, but not to exceed fifty, who shall act as referees in all actions or proceedings pending in the First Judicial District.

All but one of the Justices refused yesterday to talk about the proposed measure. It was stated that a circular letter from an attorney had been received by each of the Justices, and that the majority of the latter had agreed not to express any opinion upon the bill at present. It was added, however, that the general opinion of the Justices is against the proposed change.

Justice McAdam is in favor of the bill, and expressed his views with regard to it. He also believes that the generality of lawyers favor it. He said:

"I am very much in favor of the measure, but you must understand that I am only speaking for myself. There is nothing more injurious to a court than to have the power of dispensing patronage. By the passage of this bill, references would have to go to one of the official referees appointed under the act, and these referees would take the place of the old Masters in Chancery, who, prior to the Constitution of 1845, had charge of such business in the State. The measure is certainly reform in the right direction.

"The bill does not assume to take from the courts the power of appointing referees, but merely regulates the manner of their appointment, hence it is not open to any constitutional objection. The author of the bill, whoever he is, has evidently consulted the interests of the bar, for it has evidently emanated from the legal profession, an intelligent body of men, who usually know what is best for litigants."

THINKS THE MEASURE IS UNJUST.

A Reader Says It Is Unfair to Thousands of Lawyers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I venture to direct the attention of THE TIMES to the bill introduced in the Legislature yesterday conferring on the Justices of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in this city the great and extraordinary power of appointing fifty referees, to whom the courts shall refer all cases hereafter to be tried before referees. I am confident that when the bill is considered it will be found vicious in principle, unjust in operation, and unwarranted in fact or the actual condition of the existing law relating to references and referees, and hence will be strenuously opposed by THE TIMES and all others who perceive the numerous objections to it.

The proposed law, no doubt, had its origin in the senseless attack made by a so-called "investigating committee" that sat in this city recently upon what they called the abuses of the referee system. Such "abuses" upon investigation proved to consist in the appointment by the judges of lawyers as referees who were their friends or were recommended to them by the leaders of the political party that commonly (not always) administers the city Government. That was all. Not a single instance of fraud, wrong, injustice, or incapacity in the persons so appointed was shown or even asserted, nor was it claimed that the referees who owed their appointment to such causes were in any degree less competent or efficient than others who could be chosen, and who would give the fruit and results of many years of labor in the profession to working as referees for the munificent sum of $10 "for each day actually spent in the business of the reference." (Code of Civil Procedure, Section 3,296.) No other ground of attack upon the existing system has ever been heard of.

To remedy this so-called evil, then, the law mentioned is proposed. Regarding it in principle it rather confirms than removes the evil. It gives the Justices of the Appellate Division (who are all Democrats) the power of giving what are really Judgeships to fifty of their friends, with no other limitation on their right of selection than that the appointees must be ten years in practice and reside in the city. It is manifest that such a law cannot be justified on any ground heretofore alleged to exist for the necessity of a change. I have not a copy of the proposed law as yet, and my information as to its terms is derived wholly from the synopsis of it published in THE TIMES of to-day, but enough of it is given to show its obnoxious features.

Every lawyer who reads it at once asks himself why the power of appointment is limited to the Justices of the Appellate Division, two of whom, by the way, are country Judges, and have no interest in or knowledge of the bar in this city? Why should not the other seventeen Justices of the Supreme Court in this district have some voice or choice in the selection of the men to whom they are daily to send for trial cases involving vast interests? And how will official referees, secure in their office for a term of years, be an improvement on those appointed under the present system? Will they work harder and for longer hours, charge less, and decide any more correctly the cases sent them?

Another highly objectionable feature in the proposed law is the requirement that the referees to be appointed shall actually reside in this district, i. e., the Borough of Manhattan. That is an unjust discrimination against thousands of lawyers whose homes are in Brooklyn and the suburbs, yet who belong wholly to and practice at the bar in this city only.

There are many other objections that can be cogently urged against this extraordinary piece of legislation, but I think the foregoing remarks sufficiently show that it is unjust and unwarrantable, and should be opposed by THE TIMES as such.

TENTH NEW JERSEY.

New York, Jan. 30, 1900.

A BRIDE-ELECT'S COMPLAINT.

Charges Her Fiance with Striking Her in His Office.

Miss Johanna Albers, a woman living at 250 West One Hundred and Twenty-third Street, fifty-five years old, gray-haired and plainly dressed, was a complainant in the Harlem Police Court yesterday afternoon against William A. Moore, a well-dressed and good-loking man of thirty-three years, whom she accused of having struck her during a quarrel over the postponement of an alleged engagement to marry her.

Miss Albers said that she had met Moore eight months ago, and that he had made repeated declarations of love, both verbally and in writing, borrowing in the meantime various sums of money to set himself up in business in a suite of offices at 10 Broadway. In all, Miss Albers alleged, he had received $917 from her, and the two became engaged to marry in December. Moore failed to appear on the day set for the wedding, however, and after waiting several weeks, Miss Albers called on him Friday at his office. It was during her remonstrances at his delay that the alleged assault took place. At the request of Moore's attorney, the case was adjourned until to-day. Moore was paroled by Magistrate Flammer.

Why He Prefers that His Friends Should Not Hear of It.

A legacy of $20 left to Abraham Gruber by the will of a former client, Mrs. Esther Aaron of 272 West One Hundred and Seventeenth Street, drew a number of Mr. Gruber's friends to his office yesterday with inquiries as to what he was going to do with it. Mr. Gruber said he had loaned that amount of money to Mrs. Aaron a year or more ago. He was much surprised when he heard of her death.

Speaking afterward to a reporter, he said: "I would be just as well satisfied if nothing about this were printed, because if all my friends hear I really have $20 they'll demand a treat all round."

POLICEMAN BADLY INJURED.

Benjamin Harrison Found Lying on the Sidewalk Unconscious.

Patrolman Benjamin Harrison of the Fifth Street Station was found suffering from concussion of the brain and a possible fracture of the skull at 1:30 o'clock yesterday morning on the sidewalk in front of 109 East Ninth Street. He was removed to Bellevue Hospital unconscious. No one was found by the police who could tell how he came by his injuries.

Harrison left the police station soon after midnight to go to his home at 334 West Seventeenth Street. William Brown, the keeper of the saloon in front of which Harrison was found, said the policeman had not been in his place. It is thought the policeman received his injuries by falling on a slippery section of the pavement.

Pet Dog Causes $20,000 Damage.

Henry Saul's and John Crowley's hotels, at Jackson Boulevard and Maple Avenue, North Beach, were destroyed by fire early yesterday morning. The fire, which started in Crowley's Hotel, was caused by a pet dog overturning a lighted lamp. The damage was about $20,000.

Coler Opposed to Pension Bill.

Controller Coler said yesterday that he did not approve of Assemblyman De Graw's bill for pensioning city employes who had seen thirty years' service. "While there are many men in the city's employ," said the Controller, "who doubtless deserve a pension, yet the condition of the city's finances at present is not such as to warrant the passage of such a bill."

PECULIAR WILL SET ASIDE.

Estate of Woman Who Feared Being Buried Alive Contested.

Louisa H. Memmler, an old lady, who died last June, was so fearful of trances that she took extra precautions against premature interment. She directed in her will that her physician, Dr. L. Hibbe, remove her heart after death, to make certain that she was really dead, and she insisted then upon being cremated. Albert Hauser, a friend of hers, promised to see that her requests were attended to, and as a reward Mrs. Memmler bequeathed to him the small property she had.

When she died Hauser filed a will, which she had draw up, making him her heir, but on the day the probate papers were returnable Ernest Memmler, a relative of Mrs. Memmler, applied to the Surrogate for relief. He said that Mrs. Memmler had made a later will, in which the same conditions as to the disposition of her body were insisted upon, and making him her heir. The original will, he explained, had been lost or stolen, but he brought witnesses to prove that such a will had been made.

When the matter came up before Surrogate Fitzgerald on Monday, Mr. Memmler's attorney declared that Hauser, who had obtained possession of the small estate when Mrs. Memmler died, had left the city, taking everything with him.

Surrogate Fitzgerald granted the application of the second legatee that the first will be dismissed.

Were We the Boers of '76?

Some say "Yes," some say "No."

Many believe that the South African War closely parallels our Revolutionary War. Many believe the parallel isn't close at all—that it's merely imaginary.

How many know enough about it to be entitled to a belief, anyhow? Mighty few.

It's only by knowing the circumstances of last year, of five—yes, twenty-five—years ago, that one earns the right to have an opinion. And it is only by reading History that one can learn those circumstances.

"But, oh," (somebody says) "history is such dry reading."

Not if you read the right history. Ridpath's History of the World tells the circumstances of five, of twenty-five; of twenty-five hundred years ago. It tells the stories of all the Nations, and it tells them so interestingly, so entertainingly, that you read it as you read a romance.

HINDERING RAPID TRANSIT.

At last the joint committee of the Municipal Assembly has consented to give a hearing on the tunnel under the East River connecting the heart of the business down-town district of Manhattan with Brooklyn and Long Island. At this hearing on Monday the testimony was ample that the opinion of Brooklyn is unanimous for this project, and that it would be of the greatest advantage to the entire community. The project has been before the Assembly for over six months, and this is the first sign of the slightest attention to it. It will be nothing less than an outrage if it is not now acted on favorably.

It might be supposed that the delay of the Assembly is due to its caution as to spending public money. It is nothing of the kind. No public money is asked for. A company has been organized in connection with the Long Island Railroad Company that is prepared to take up the work at its own exclusive expense and carry it promptly to completion without a cent of cost to the taxpayers. The benefits to be counted on are very great. The route of the tunnel road is from the neighborhood of the junction of Cortlandt Street and West Broadway in nearly a direct line to the City Hall in Brooklyn and then to the Flatbush Avenue Station of the Long Island Railroad, at the corner of Atlantic Avenue. From there the road, mostly sunken, runs out to Jamaica and along the line of the Long Island Railroad, with its branches reaching the entire section of the island lying east and south of Brooklyn.

The construction of the system would bring within easy and prompt reach of the business part of New York a healthy, attractive, and convenient region capable of furnishing homes at little cost for many hundred thousand people. It would immediately relieve the pressure on the Brooklyn Bridge and the lines connecting with it. It would secure the removal of the surface tracks from Atlantic Avenue which now practically cut off the southern half of the Borough of Brooklyn from the rest of its territory and check the growth of a large area. And all this would be accomplished, as we have said, without the expenditure of a dollar of the taxpayers' money and without the creation of any exclusive privilege. It is the one great advantage of a tunnel under the river that it cannot be a monopoly, as a bridge to a considerable extent necessarily is, and as a surface line on the street or a tunnel line under it is. We do not pretend to understand the motives of the long delay that has taken place as to this project in the Municipal Assembly, but they cannot be reasonable, and now that the matter has been at last taken up action should promptly follow. All that is asked is the approval of the Assembly, and that should not be withheld.

WHY ANY PUBLIC MEETINGS?

That was very good counsel which Capt. MAHAN gave to the American public through our columns the other day. It was not to hold any meetings, either of sympathy or of indignation, with reference to the war going on in South Africa. Capt. MAHAN avowed his own sympathy to be with the British. He has not, we believe, been tempted with an invitation to join any public meeting of British sympathizers. But we have no doubt his fortitude would be quite proof against that temptation. And his example and his precept may safely be commended to the sympathizers with the Boers who have been holding public meetings.

For what is the object of public meetings in a case like this? Of course, it may be mere humanity. And that is a most respectable motive. If the Americans in London who have been fitting out a hospital ship had only stipulated that it should be equally available to the sick and wounded on each side, their action would have been most exemplary to neutrals. It is true that wounded Boers are not very likely to reach a ship. But the relief of human suffering, in whatever cause incurred, so only it be not by the blame of the individual sufferer, is a mission sacred and not invidious. Meetings for this purpose could excite no criticism at all.

But meetings to relieve the sufferings of the sufferers on one side, in a conflict like this, are on a different footing, and much more meetings held to express sympathy with one side. This latter has been the chief object of all the public meetings held in this country about the war in South Africa, for it is not to be supposed that the orators, who do undoubtedly greatly enjoy the sound of their own voices, have gone to the expense of hiring halls in order to procure themselves that enjoyment. Now, the mere expression of sympathy does perhaps no good and certainly little harm. We are all doing it every day, in conversation, in newspaper articles, in speeches in Congress, where, indeed, it involves a certain responsibility, as anybody short of a Mason must acknowledge. Whether this sort of expression be commendable or not, there is no way of stopping it.

But a public meeting which limited itself to the expression of sympathy would be a tame and pointless public meeting. As a matter of fact, the public meetings thus far have had for their ostensible object to get the Government to "do something." The only object they can attain is to embarrass the Government. Accordingly, when these things make their appearance in Congress, "the common sense of most" sends them to the graveyard of a committee. When they are produced at public meetings, this disposition is not possible.

For instance, at the pro-Boer meeting here night before last, it was resolved that the President should be requested or "demanded" to offer his mediation between the combatants, whether anybody invited him to do so or not. That simply means that the President should expose himself to be snubbed by both contending parties. The snubbing would be administered in civil language, without doubt. It would be an international offense to Great Britain for him to open negotiations with the South African Republic over which she claims suzerainty. Still, suppose the British notification that Great Britain was at war with her vassal released him from that punctilio. What would happen? The Boers would doubtless tell him that they would make peace on the basis of their recognition by Great Britain as "an international sovereign State." The British would doubtless tell him that they were willing to make peace on the basis of British supremacy in South Africa and the right of Great Britain to interfere whenever she chose, and as far as she chose, in the affairs of the Boer States. That is an "irrepressible conflict." Neither side will recede from its position until it is driven from it by force of arms. The President would simply have exposed himself to the contempt not only of the combatants, but of all the rest of mankind. This is a position in which no patriotic American can desire to place the President of the United States. Yet it is the position in which these unthinking sympathizers try to put the President, when they ask him to force his mediation upon the notice of the combatants. Doubtless, when both sides are willing to accept his mediation, they will let him know. Very possibly, he has already let them know, through the proper channels, that his good offices are at their service. To try to bully him by public meetings into forcing himself upon two fighters as a peacemaker is to do a silly and unpatriotic thing.

THE OLD IDOLS.

W. J. BRYAN kept pretty mum about silver while he was in this city, but in the outlying districts he sits publicly at the feet of his old idols and worships them.

In his speech at Fawtucket he said that he had no doubt that the time would come "when the principles of the Chicago platform will be a part of the law of the United States."

At the Providence meeting he said:

> I have been advised by some gold Democrats to drop the silver question, and several prominent Democrats who bolted the regular ticket in 1896 announce that they will return to the fold if the financial issue is not brought forward. I am opposed to dropping the silver issue as long as a handful of English bankers dominate the financial policy of this Nation.

To a newspaper man who asked him for a statement of his views upon Mr. W. BOURKE COCKRAN'S overtures for a coalition on the basis of anti-imperialism to the front and free silver to the rear, he replied:

> I am as stanch a supporter of the 16 to 1 doctrine as ever. I will not consent to anything in the shape of a truce, and Mr. COCKRAN knows that better than I do.

There is no room for delusions about W. J. BRYAN. No man can honestly misunderstand his position. He stands for everything that he stood for in 1896, for the fifty-cent dollar, for the broken faith and dishonor of the Nation, for the freedom of riot, for the packing of the Supreme Court, and for a Government administered upon the principles of ALTGELD, TILLMAN, DEBS—and BRYAN.

Any gold Democrat and anti-McKinley Republican who is willing to put up with these things for the sake of an opportunity to express his dissent from the Administration's view of its duty in the Philippines chooses knowingly and deliberately the path of danger. He shows bad judgment if he is honest about it, bad faith if he is not. Either way he goes to his destruction.

THE GOVERNOR'S SENSIBLE COURSE.

Gov. ROOSEVELT has commended himself to the confidence of the business community and of serious men of affairs everywhere by his refusal to further the aims of the persons who are trying to injure the State Trust Company by public and sensational attacks. The attorney who represents the attacking party has recently written two letters to the Superintendent of the Banking Department demanding certain records of the department and assuming toward the Superintendent and toward the Governor a swaggering tone of menace and browbeating that [illegible] the high motives of public policy by which these gentlemen profess to be actuated. To the last letter addressed to him Superintendent KILBURN declines to make any reply, characterizing it as "a tissue of falsehoods" so far as it impugns his motives, and declaring that, "like the former one, it was evidently written for publication and not with the expectation of the writer that it would be answered." Gov. ROOSEVELT is reported in our Albany dispatches as saying "that he would have considered any charges from reputable sources, but he would not take into consideration any letter or charges sent first to the newspapers or used publicly for purposes of oppression."

The soundness and good sense of the Governor's position become evident the moment the nature of the continued attacks upon the trust company is understood. The present situation is this: The State Trust Company has been examined both by the Superintendent of Banks and by the officers of the Clearing House Association, and is found and declared to be solvent and prosperous, with an unimpaired capital of $1,000,000 and a surplus of $1,000,000. Second, the Superintendent of the Banking Department and the officers of the trust company have fully complied with the law by taking the steps indicated by the results of the examination. The demands of the law and of financial and business security have been fully obeyed, and no public or prudential reason exists for further action. Yet the assaulting party demands the records and insists that the Attorney General shall begin proceedings to wind up the affairs of the company. It is very apparent that their extraordinary course is prompted by some other motive than a desire to protect their interests as shareholders in the company. Whatever may be their purpose, the warfare they are conducting is not to the Governor's taste. His refusal to join in such a shady enterprise is characteristic of the man.

Persons who have attended the daily sessions of the newspaper trial of the State Trust Company must have wondered whether the law had anything to do with the matter. It happens that the statutes do apply, and their provisions are unusually clear and specific. Section 18 of Article I. of the banking law provides for proceedings against delinquent banking corporations. We quote from that section:

> If it shall appear to the Superintendent that any such corporation or banker has violated its charter or any law of this State, or is conducting business in an unsafe or unauthorized manner, he shall, by an order under his hand and official seal, addressed to such corporation or banker, direct a discontinuance of such illegal or unsafe practices, and conformity with the requirements of its charter, and with safety and security in its transactions.

When the examination revealed one loan that was excessive and unauthorized Superintendent KILBURN addressed to the company the notice prescribed by law. Its receipt was promptly acknowledged by the officers of the company and the loan was paid off. The Superintendent was informed that it had been paid. It is evident that at that point the law had been complied with. The further provisions of Section 18 relate to proceedings by the Attorney General to wind up the company, as in the case of insolvent corporations. But plainly no such action was called for here, for both examinations showed the company to be perfectly solvent and possessed of a surplus of a million dollars. The Superintendent had done his duty, the law exacted nothing more, no interests of a proper and public nature demanded any further action. The Governor and Mr. KILBURN very justly refuse to let the executive power be used for a private and evidently malicious purpose. It is not to the interest of the financial community that the methods pursued toward the State Trust Company should have official approval and encouragement. An institution might be perfectly solvent and safe and yet go down before such public and persistent assaults.

AMERICAN SCHOOL IN ROME.

It is some five years now since there was established the American School of Classical Studies in Rome. As it is not the habit of our country to support institutions of this sort at the expense of the public Treasury—a wise policy undoubtedly—the school was necessarily something of an experiment and planned on a modest scale. It has been singularly successful in the quality and extent of its work, and already its graduates are engaged in active work in more than a dozen of the colleges of the land, including Columbia, Yale, Michigan, Dartmouth, Bryn Mawr, and Chicago.

It is now proposed by the Archaeological Institute, with which the school is closely affiliated, and by the Presidents of the various colleges that have encouraged and aided in the work, to raise a fund to place the school on a solid and permanent basis. The following statement is sufficient indorsement of the school, and evidence that the contributions asked for will serve a proper purpose:

> It is our belief that the School of Classical Studies in Rome supplies a positive need. With its companion school in Athens it serves as a bond of union in the highest pursuits between our American universities and colleges. It offers opportunities for advanced studies in the fields of classics, Christian archaeology, and the Renaissance, such as cannot be provided in this country. Lacking this study, American students and teachers of these branches of learning cannot equal those of England and the Continent. We believe it to be an important addition to the resources of the higher education in America.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Probable as it is that a large majority of the people in Flushing and practically all of its property owners heard with some degree of regret the news that Mrs. BALLINGTON BOOTH intended to establish in the town a home for ex-convicts, only a few of the residents have ventured upon active and avowed opposition to the execution of her plan, and these few have met with complete failure in the effort to incite their fellow-citizens to boycott the philanthropical lady. The lecture which she delivered Monday evening was well attended, and her account of the success and safety with which a similar asylum had been conducted in another reluctant town was heard with respectful and more or less hopeful attention. This is just what was to have been expected, and though the protesting Flushingites will doubtless continue to believe in the reality of their grievance against the woman whom they charge with a "fanatical disregard for private rights," she has nothing whatever to apprehend from their antagonism. The fact is that not she but they have brought a "stigma" on Flushing. For Mrs. BOOTH has won general confidence as a wise and practical woman, as well as a well-intentioned one, and there is something extremely repugnant in the thought that there are people who, through fear of a little personal inconvenience, would stand in the way of her unquestionably beneficent work. There is a fatal weakness in the position of her would-be boycotters in Flushing. They admit frankly that Mrs. BOOTH'S endeavors to aid ex-convicts are highly commendable, and offer to assist her to the extent of their power—if she will only conduct her operations out of their sight and hearing! The cynical selfishness of this is altogether too obvious, and those who display it will get no sympathy even from people who feel in their hearts that they, too, might object to jail birds for near neighbors.

—Efforts are making in Western Pennsylvania to combine into one great body all the organizations of German-Americans, so called, in that part of the State. The aggregate membership of these societies is said to be considerably over 100,000, and the promoters of the scheme expect to accomplish many and important objects when they get it in working order. As to just what the objects are, the leaders in the movement are somewhat reticent, and when inquiries on that point are pressed they talk vaguely about the passage of "more liberal laws." It is hard to believe that there are in Western Pennsylvania or anywhere else in the United States a considerable body of citizens whose interests are different from the interests of other citizens, or that an organization for political action can accomplish praiseworthy ends in this country if it limits its membership to persons presumably unlike other Americans in nothing except the birthplace of themselves or their parents. And what has that accident to do with the essentials of Americanism? "German-American" is a term with a legitimate ethnological significance, but its bearing on the passage of our laws is not, or at least ought not to be, at all obvious. Whatever may be the solution of this rather unpleasant mystery, the attempts at combination are marked by vigor and enthusiasm, and the meetings to further them are frequent and large. At one held in Pittsburg on Sunday there was an abundant flow of eloquence, and most of it was devoted to the suggestion of substitutes for "Puritanism," whatever that may be. It was announced, moreover, that the central part of the State had already been carefully organized, and that in June next a convention of delegates from all parts of Pennsylvania would be held.

—Judging from a letter which Mr. ERVING WINSLOW has sent to The Boston Herald, that amiable exponent of sublimated wisdom contemplates some sort of a revolution whereby the governmental methods of the United States may be changed, at least for once, more like those of England. Mr. WINSLOW has observed, it seems, that a "colonial policy" has been added to the things which the American idea or something represents, and the anti-imperialists want to have their say before said policy is put into any definite shape. "Their contention," he declares, referring of course to his league, "is that the people should have an opportunity of expressing directly their will concerning so serious an innovation—that is, of course, in the way provided by the Constitution for its amendment. Failing this opportunity, which is not offered or even suggested by the party which proposes to establish it by violence, (because the party did not come into power upon this issue, and has, therefore, no pretense even of a delegated authority to deal with it,) it must inevitably force itself upon the people as the one vital and transcendant question of the next Presidential campaign." This is not a particularly perspicuous sentence, but barring a little confusion among the "its" there is no great fault to be found with it. The conclusion is more eloquent, and almost anybody can understand what Mr. WINSLOW is driving at. "Dare any deny," he asks, "their right to be heard, or the probability that they will demand to be heard, before this tremendous question is settled? Neither the attempts by the Administration organs to minimize it, nor the efforts of the opposition to give prominence to what are all comparatively insignificant matters, will prevent the intelligent people of the United States from discriminating that imperialism and anti-imperialism are the alternatives placed before them this year." We like especially Mr. WINSLOW'S use of "discriminate" as a transitive verb. Few people dare do that, and courage is always admirable.

—Rio Janeiro and Santos, according to what seems to be an official report, are now free from the plague, and there is no longer any need for quarantine against those ports. If the report is true as well as official, it is certainly most encouraging, and warrants the hope that Western countries have little to fear from the disease that has worked so much harm in the Far East. Santos has always been a breeding place for yellow fever, and Rio's reputation is not much better. If the plague, after getting a foothold in places where even the rudiments of sanitary science were mostly neglected, can be conquered and put to flight, it will never make more than the shortest stay in a city where the art of keeping clean receives a reasonable amount of attention. But Rio and Santos have been no more successful than several Japanese towns, and in Portugal the ravages of the malady were not so serious as an average epidemic of typhoid. The plague is terrible, no doubt, but the prospects are that neither in Europe nor America will it ever claim victims at anything like the rate it has in China and India, and panic fears of its approach are unjustified.

COLD CARS AND NO SHELTER.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Last Friday afternoon, after riding in an unheated Boulevard (Broadway) trolley car (No. 226 or 227, I forget which,) from Fifty-ninth Street to One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street until chilled through, I alighted, with others, at the corner of the Boulevard and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street to transfer to a Cross-Town and then to an Upper Amsterdam Avenue car. At the corner of One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and the Boulevard the wind blew furiously, and we all crowded into a doorway and close to a show window for protection. One lady said she had already waited there fully six minutes, and the rest of us waited fully six more before a Cross-Town car took us onward. At Amsterdam Avenue we alighted just as an up car was at the corner, but the conductor rang to go ahead, leaving us to stand on the corner, without another car in sight, while just ahead of him were four other cars not half a block apart. The exposure on that corner was positively dangerous, with no shelter beyond crowding behind a liquor saloon door. It seemed better to walk on until the next car came along, so I followed the example of two strong, hearty firemen, who did not care to stand in such a bitter wind, and walked on up town toward the line of four cars at a standstill in front of the depot of the line. We easily overtook the last car, and boarded it as it started off again. Half way up the hill the conductor called for fares, and I tendered my transfer ticket just received on the Boulevard car. He indignantly refused to take it, telling me I had no right to get on anywhere except at the corner of One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street if I used a transfer ticket, and that I must get off and take the car behind. I replied that my transfer ticket was good, and I would have boarded his car at the corner if he had allowed me to do so. He said:

"You weren't there, and you've got to get out and take the car behind."

I replied:

"The car behind is half way up the hill, and he, too, (the conductor) may say I must get off, as I did not board it at the corner of One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, and what then?"

"Well, I don't care. It's nickel or nothin' up here if you did not get on at the right place," he answered.

I did not move. He collected other fares, came back and waited in front of me, lowering angrily at me, and concentrating the gaze of all the passengers on me, as if I were stealing a ride. I again tendered my transfer, saying nothing, and, as he had not quite the nerve to put a lady off bodily, he sullkily accepted it and slammed the door of his car furiously as he stepped out on the platform. When I alighted at my street corner he would not look at me, almost turning his back as he rang the bell to stop the car. Will you, Mr. Editor, kindly tell me whether I violated any law in walking up the three blocks and assuming to ride on my transfer ticket. Had the conductor a right to demand additional fare. Had he a right to put me off or demand that I should retreat to another car on that line? Is there no law compelling these great monopolies, grasping our best streets and avenues through questionable methods, to provide shelter for the citizens at especially exposed points? After an attack of la grippe during the holidays, the first time I ventured out on necessary business matters I rode on three cars of the Boulevard and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street lines (in the one morning) not heated, and, as I felt, at the peril of my health. Is there no possible way of compelling them to withdraw unheated cars until in proper condition for service?

It has been amazing to behold the patience with which large crowds have waited on the corner of One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and Amsterdam Avenue in driving rainstorms fill up and hang on to the steps of overcrowded cars, leaving large numbers behind to scramble for accommodation on following cars during evening home-rush hours. A seamstress has arrived at my house many mornings this Winter chilled or thoroughly wet from waiting for transportation at that very corner. The treatment by the Third Avenue Railroad Company of residents of the Washington Heights is absolutely murderous.

A Complaint of Cold Cars.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I write to complain of an abuse which demands prompt remedy. On the afternoon of Dec. 29 I boarded a car at the corner of Seventy-sixth Street and Amsterdam Avenue. It was not heated. At Fiftieth Street, being told to change cars, the discomfort and risk to health were increased, as the car then provided had been standing and was so bitterly cold that all suffered. Surely the company should feel obliged to take measures to insure the comfort of those forced to make use of this mode of conveyance. E. F.

MR. BRYAN AND TRUSTS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Through the medium of THE TIMES I would like to ask Mr. William J. Bryan, the apostle of 16 to 1, how he reconciles his opposition to "trusts" with his advocacy of the most stupendous, monstrous, and damaging trust to this country yet proposed, viz., the free-silver trust. I do not object to Mr. Bryan's anti-trust position. I simply question the consistency of his position. I am not in sympathy with trusts, or the trust principle, even it is applied to extinguish individual industrial effort, and deprives the country of individual enterprise and independence, while willing to give to combination full credit when it lessens cost to the consumer, while increasing labor's opportunity and compensation and extending markets.

I have difficulty in seeing how Mr. Bryan and his followers, standing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver, can consistently make war on trusts while advocating a silver trust. The free-silver trust of which he is the special advocate is a foreign interest, while the trusts he attacks are American interests. The free-silver trust is a conspiracy against American labor, American credit, American honor, and prosperity, inaugurated and promoted by foreign owners of silver held in mining property the world over; and stocks of silver held at low prices purchased by syndicates with the expectation of unloading them on Uncle Sam at twice the cost price; and stores of silver held by foreign banking and Government treasuries at high prices, such as in the case of Germany, all waiting for a market at a profit.

Through the influence of forces organized in this country under the banner of a great political party, it was confidently expected that the market would be created, and what better market could the world ask for than the United States Treasury, backed by the strong arm of United States law to force into use and circulation, in payment for helpless labor, and for the product of the soil, at a fiat value, this debased money, for which the world outside of us would reap in advance a profit. It is a well-authenticated fact that nine-tenths of the silver mining interests of the United States are owned abroad or held for foreign account. This foreign-owned trust Mr. Bryan and his followers insist shall be established, regardless of the loss its advocacy has already entailed on honest American industry, and will continue to entail if seriously entertained by any considerable number of this people, as in 1896. While he attacks the trusts wholly American, organized to promote American interests combining American capital and enterprise, controlling American individual life, and it must be admitted, however much we may abhor the principle, are to-day extending American markets throughout the world with remunerative results to American capital, which are being shared with American labor through an increase in wages, he advocates the silver trust. Where is Mr. Bryan's consistency? Is not his special pleading for the silver trust while making war on all others the action of the legal advocate rather than the disinterested patriotic statesman.

The question, therefore, prompts itself, Is he honest? Would he seek to eradicate the social evil by suppressing all except one institution, more wicked than the others, for the maintenance of which he was retained, and call it public duty? Can he hope to correct the economic morals of any considerable number of the American people by his war on trusts, while laboring to promote the immoral principle of dishonesty embodied in the free coinage 16 to 1 silver trust?

By killing the free-silver heresy in 1896 we have established prosperity in our land long denied us by the silver agitation. What improvement on present conditions—conditions based on assurance of a gold money basis—can Mr. Bryan give us with free silver? An intelligent thinking people, we wish proofs rather than assertions to guide us. JOHN BYRNE.

A FAMINE FUND FOR INDIA.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Since the official declaration of famine in India by Lord Curzon, three months ago, the distress has increased by strides and bounds. The famine area has increased so that, instead of 30,000,000, now 52,000,000 are involved. Three months ago 400,000 were on relief works; now there are 3,500,000. The emaciated and living skeletons were only occasionally seen then; they are now seen by the thousands. The number will soon rise to the hundred thousands. The terrible suffering of children has now become common. Can America not raise a fund similar to the London Mansion House fund to show our sympathy with India in her great suffering? Millions of dollars are needed to save her people until the rains in July. The Government of India, though doing nobly, cannot do everything, and outside help is needed to save thousands of people from dying. It may be that some would prefer to give to a fund that is not connected with any mission boards, but which, however, has the guarantee of being used honestly and effectively. Such a fund is in existence in Bombay called the Bombay Presidency Famine Fund. It was organized by the leading Hindo, Mohammedan, Persian, and European citizens of Bombay. Sir Lawrance Jenkins is Chairman of the Executive Committee, and the Bishop of Bombay is Vice Chairman. It would be an act of great blessing to India and a bond of union if an American fund for India famine relief could be started and the contributions showing our sympathy be cabled to this committee in Bombay.

Public Spitting: a Suggestion.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

That the condemnation of decent people has considerably abated the spitting nuisance, there is no doubt, but much remains to be done. In an Amsterdam Avenue car the other day my stomach was almost turned by a pool of filth in front of the seat which I was about to occupy.

As my companion and I turned away in disgust, I could not help feeling that the public ought to hold the Third Avenue Railroad Company to its duty in this matter by riding in other cars until proper consideration is shown. The remedy is obvious: Let each conductor be made responsible for the condition of his car floor, and a system established of rewards and penalties according to the record. Then citizens could enjoy what they pay for, ride free from contact with filth and—what is nearly as important to some—free from the sight of it. PUBLIC RIGHTS.

A Defender of Gotham Cleanliness.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I take issue with "Z. Z." in his statement in THE TIMES of Jan. 30, namely, that "no attention whatever is paid to the notice in the street cars against the dangerous and disgusting habit of expectoration."

I am not in the same class as the Irishman who, when remonstrated with by the conductor for spitting on the floor, asked where he should spit, on the roof, but as far as my observation goes, (and I have observed the matter closely,) I think the general public is inclined to respect the notice. There is one place, however, where the evil still exists to an alarming extent—in the men's side of the ferryboats. I think "Z. Z." is wrong when he says the street cars of New York are "not a fit place for a clean and self-respecting pig."

I have traveled to some extent in the United States, and I don't know of any city that gives a better or cleaner street car service than New York City.

His charges are certainly unwarranted.

Langtry and Kipling's I[illegible]

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Some of your readers would like to know the reason why Mrs. Langtry should inflict "The Absent-Minded Beggar" on her audience.

The degenerates are already sufficiently out of place in New York, whatever they may be in London, and to follow a play which leaves such a bad taste behind it with Mr. Kipling's spirited idea for the wives and families of poor Tommy Atkins, seems to me, at least, to be both unnecessary and without reason. I notice this morning an attempt to gloss over the failure and incompetency of Mrs. Langtry's reciting last evening, but am glad to read in THE TIMES the true version. Had Mrs. Langtry been at the Little Mothers' Aid Association last Friday afternoon, she would have heard the piece finely rendered by a young Englishman whose name I have forgotten.

I should suggest to Mrs. Langtry to find him out and take a few lessons in reciting from him. N. C.

The Exclusion of Roberts.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Now that Roberts as a Representative in Congress has been excluded and must resume domestic and patriarchal duties as a constituent merely and return to the several bosoms of his family, the question as to expulsion and exclusion will rest for a few days till members of the House have a chance to print a further "say" on the subject.

Endeavoring to frame this communication grammatically as to the noun "family," I consulted my old school textbook by Goold Brown, and found that "a collective noun or noun of multitude" may convey "the idea of plurality" or "the idea of unity," and thought it more consonant with fact and general usage to imply the idea of unity as to "family" and plurality as to "bosoms." If I mistake in syntax I am positively correct in fact.

I am sorry to find myself in disagreement with THE TIMES as to opinion on the action of the House, but derive some consolation from the fact that in approving of this "violation of the Constitution," and being numbered with "the vast mob" that "bawled for the shutting out of Roberts," I am in accord with many readers of THE TIMES—Dr. Lyman Abbott one of them—with three-fourths of the voting members of the House, upon the technical point of "exclusion," and with THE TIMES itself, and the unanimous expression of opinion as to "expulsion" had this been the question.

Pendulum Swinging Against McKinley

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In my opinion you make too light of the immense significance of our elections and the result that inevitably follows the accession to power of a party. You talk of the "absolute certainty of the defeat" of William J. Bryan this year, because he was defeated in 1896. In exactly the same spirit and with precisely the same knowledge the Harrison prophets in 1892 declared the defeat of Cleveland, because Cleveland had been defeated in 1888.

It is a dull mind that does not note the significance of that swing of the pendulum to-day against McKinley.

GIVE ME MY DREAMS.

A. J. Waterhouse in Los Angeles Herald.

Give me my dreams. All else is naught,
At price of pain success is bought;
We struggle upward but to fall;
The prize we grasp but holds us thrall;
The lips that cheer us through the years
Some day smile not for all our tears;
We build awhile, we know not what.
And the toiler is forgot.
Give me my dreams.

Give me my dreams. A child am I
Who stands in darkness but to sigh,
Until a hand doth backward roll
The gray, damp mists about my soul,
And then—oh, dream of dreams that cheers!
They come, the loved of other years,
And voices whisper soft and low
The loving words of long ago.
Give me my dreams.

Give me my dreams. Oh, little maid
With whom of old I laughed and played,
They say the ivy loves to creep
Above the grave where now you sleep;
They say the robin's song no more
Can wake you as it did of yore.
What matter? Still in dreams you creep
Unto my side a tryst to keep—
Give me my dreams.

Give me my dreams. All else is dross,
But still I count it little loss,
For yet in dreams the bright stars burn
As in the years to which I turn;
White hands reach to me through the mist,
By lips I loved my lips are kissed,
And all life's fields are love aglow
As they were once, oh, long ago—
Give me my dreams.

RUSSIA A POWER IN PERSIA.

Authorizes the [illegible] Up of a $6,500,000 Ruble [illegible] European Control on the Transaction.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 30.—It is semi-officially announced that the Government, at the request of the Government of Persia, and in view of the [illegible] relations between the two Governments, has authorised the Loan Bank of Persia to take up the loan of 22,500,000 rubles about to be issued in Persia under the denomination of the 5 per cent. Persian gold [illegible] of 1890. The Loan Bank, therefore, has been instructed to take up the loan, which is [illegible] payable in seventy-five years, guaranteed on all the Persian customs receipts except the revenues of the Custom House of Fars and the Custom Houses of the Persian Gulf. In the event of a delay in the payments, the Loan Bank will have the right to control the Custom Houses.

Persia undertakes to redeem all former obligations out of the new loan and not to contract any other foreign loan until the new loan is paid off without the consent of the Loan Bank. Russia guarantees the bonds.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—There is a widespread idea here that the Persian loan has finally accomplished Russia's long-laid plans to obtain complete political and financial control of Persia, with the double object of ousting the British and assuring Russia an outlet on the Persian Gulf.

BERLIN, Jan. 30.—The news of the Russian loan to Persia is interpreted in Germany to mean that Persia has virtually become Russian. The press takes that view, which the latest diplomatic reports from Teheran confirm. In Berlin financial circles it is said that the loan will not come to the German market.

The National Zeitung, referring to the Russian loan, says:

"There is no doubt that Persia will hereafter be absolutely dependent upon Russia. The latter may have made a doubtful financial bargain, but politically considered, the transaction is unquestionably of the highest importance."

CHURCH IN NEW DEPENDENCIES

Cardinal Ledochowsky Discusses the Difficulties of a Thorough Reorganization.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Jan. 14.—I had a talk yesterday with his Eminence Cardinal Miecislaw Ledochowsky, Prefect of the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda Fide. The conversation related somewhat to the operations and outlook of the Catholic Church in Puerto Rico and the Philippines. In response to an inquiry as to these islands the Cardinal said:

"Of course, the war has disorganized everything in the Philippines, and before it is over and peace completely re-established the Holy See will not even attempt to take any steps toward the re-establishment of the hierarchy and the reclaiming of damages for wrecked churches and the millions of church property wantonly destroyed. The Holy Father has been deeply grieved on hearing of the attitude of the United States troops toward the religious orders and the numerous shrines in the Philippines. We did not think of the Americans as going out under the guise of apostles of freedom and civilization and then to act as the most unscrupulous freebooters in a conquered land. Petitions and documents of protest from the inhabitants, clergy, and religious orders of the Philippines have been pouring in at the Vatican, and Mgr. Martinelli has been instructed to remonstrate with the authorities at Washington, but all to no avail.

"As in Puerto Rico it will not be so easy to settle the religious question. There, as in Cuba, the work of reorganization and adaptation will be long and fraught with many difficulties.

"During this first period of transition the Bishops in the new American possessions will be chosen directly by the Holy Father, but when things are more settled the same system will be adopted as is now in force in the United States, namely, the hierarchy will propose three names for every vacancy, and the Pope will have to choose out of the three.

"But it will be a long time," concluded Cardinal Ledochowsky, "before this system of independent election may with safety be extended to America's new acquisitions." G. M. F.

FRENCH PLANS FOR DEFENSES.

Naval and Other Bills Call for the Expenditure of 900,000,000 Francs—Premier Punishes Prelates.

PARIS, Jan. 30.—President Loubet presided to-day at a Cabinet meeting in which decisions were reached respecting various bills to carry out the naval scheme, and these M. Waldeck-Rousseau introduced at the opening of the Chamber of Deputies this afternoon. They were referred, at his request, to the Budget Commission.

The Government Navy bill asks for 476,000,000f. for the fleet, and provides 6 first-class battleships, 5 armored cruisers, 29 torpedo-boat destroyers, 112 torpedo boats, and 26 submarine boats. It also asks for 140,000,000f. to defend the coasts, including 38,000,000f. for the defense of the French naval stronghold on the coast of Tunis.

Another bill provides for the establishment of independent cable communication between France and her colonies, bringing the total expenditure up to 900,000,000f.

The Cabinet also considered the action of Cardinal Richard, the Archbishop of Paris, in openly visiting the Assumptionist Fathers after the Correctional Tribunal had pronounced the dissolution of the order and the subsequent steps taken by the Government. The Premier, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, read his letter requesting Cardinal Richard to explain and the prelate replied declaring his visit had no political character, recalling his habitual attitude and defending himself against the charge of hostility to the republic.

As a result, the Premier has suspended the allowances of the Archbishop of Aix, of the Bishops of Versailles, Valence, Viviers, Tulle, and Montpellier, and of the Vicar of Avignon.

PROSPECTIVE BONDSMEN MEET

Contractor McDonald Confident that He Will Secure Bond—Onderdonk's Name Again Mentioned.

Conferences were held yesterday between John B. McDonald, who expects to build the thirty-five-million-dollar tunnel; the firm of August Belmont & Co., his financial backer, and representatives of the surety companies which will probably go on Mr. McDonald's bond. So far as is known, nothing of a definite nature was accomplished, but shortly after 6 o'clock last evening De Lancey Nicoll, counsel for Mr. McDonald, made this brief statement: "Negotiations are proceeding satisfactorily, and we expect that the matter will be settled by the latter part of this week."

Earlier in the afternoon an informal conference was held at the office of President Lyman of the American Surety Company between Mr. Lyman, John R. Bland, President of the United States Fidelity and Guarantee Company of Baltimore; Vice President Joseph A. Sinn of the City Trust, Safe and Deposit Company of Philadelphia, both of whom are in the city to look after the six-million-dollar bond transaction, and Vice President Goodrich of the National Surety Company. No representative of the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland was present, and this gave rise to a rumor, afterward contradicted by Mr. McDonald himself, that Mr. Platt's company had withdrawn. The result of this conference was summed up by Mr. Lyman, who said that the meeting was merely informal, that nothing had been definitely settled upon, but that the outlook for an agreement was very promising.

"I am not aware that the Fidelity and Deposit Company has withdrawn," said Mr. Lyman, "although it was not represented this afternoon. Outside of the three original companies mentioned in Mr. McDonald's bid, there will be others to divide up the bond, but I am not at liberty to disclose any names."

Mr. Lyman said he did not know when the representatives of the companies will hold another meeting. "All that I can say," he concluded, "is that we have made one step up stairs."

"So far as the United States Fidelity and Guarantee Company is concerned," said Andrew Freedman, "we are satisfied that Mr. McDonald will come out all right, and we are ready to go ahead if our conditions are complied with. There will be more than three companies, but how many I cannot say."

Mr. Nicoll's statement, that in all probability the papers would be signed not later than Saturday, was repeated to Mr. Freedman, who said:

"Well, Mr. Nicoll knows what he is talking about. He must have ground for what he says, but I am not in a position to verify it."

An official of one of the companies said that August Belmont & Co. will form a construction company with $5,000,000 capital, is to be paid up, and that the construction company is to give the surety companies indemnity under a stipulation practically as follows: It is to be liable as a corporation, and, furthermore, each subscriber to the paid-up capital is to bind himself personally for the amount of subscription. It will also be required that Mr. McDonald's sub-contractors must give bonds to the construction company, and that these contractors shall be obliged to give bonds to their guarantors in such a way that the surety companies will in the end run comparatively little risk.

It is believed, however if the previous statements of some of the officials of the surety companies are to be accepted, that a company of only $5,000,000 capital will not be deemed sufficient, as it has been stated that a company of at least $10,000,000 paid-in capital will be required by them, with one-half of this sum deposited or covered by securities.

No verification of the statement could be had. August Belmont, when asked if the rumor were true that he had formed a company of $5,000,000 capital, said that such a statement had never come from him.

"We are not ready yet," said Mr. Belmont, "to speak of our plans. Affairs are just where they were yesterday. When the time is ripe I will issue a statement and tell the public what we are doing."

Mr. McDonald was in and out of his office all day yesterday, and did not seem at all worried over the length of time it is taking him to qualify. He was asked if he knew the names of the men who will be associated with Mr. Belmont.

"I do not," was the reply. "Mr. Belmont will pick his men and get the strongest financiers in the city to associate themselves with him."

In reply to questions as to whether the fact that Mr. Belmont is a Director of the Long Island Railroad signifies any connection of that road with the tunnel enterprise, and whether he will put in a bid for the Long Island tunnel, Mr. McDonald said: "I did not know until now that Mr. Belmont was a Director of that road, and so far as putting in a bid for the Long Island tunnel is concerned, I may do that, too."

"Are there any Standard Oil interests with Mr. Belmont in this matter?"

"I wish there were," said the contractor quickly. "There is nothing better I would like than to have some of those men behind me. However, that aside, you may rest assured that the syndicate or combination company is formed the names of the men which will appear will be ample guarantee of solidity and strength. The choice of these men remains solely with Mr. Belmont."

The name of Mr. Onderdonk appeared again yesterday in connection with the building of the tunnel in the event that Mr. McDonald should fail in his attempt to secure bonds. Mr. Onderdonk gave it as his opinion that his successful rival in the bid would be able to qualify, but beyond this Mr. Onderdonk was silent. There was, however, considerable talk in places where Mr. Onderdonk's friends congregate, and one bit of gossip was that before the bids were sent in, Mr. Onderdonk, in the principle, it was said, that in union there is strength, wanted Mr. McDonald to go in with him on a joint bid, but that Mr. McDonald wanted "to go it alone." In some quarters there is a thinly concealed hope that after all Mr. McDonald will fail in his undertaking, and in that event Mr. Onderdonk, it was said, will come to the fore with his bid of $39,300,000.

"Should new bids have to be called for," said one man, "a possibility exists that Mr. McDonald and Mr. Onderdonk might conclude to get together and put in a joint bid, and thus Mr. Onderdonk would get a share of the work."

Since the awarding of the contract for building the tunnel a number of laborers have flocked to this city in the hope of being put to work in the digging, for which thousands of men will be required. Starting from various parts of the country, they reach here without a penny, and, as there is no work for them on the tunnel or in any other place, many go to the City Lodging House on First Avenue.

This place has held a number of out-of-town men every night, and they are sent to Superintendent Blair of the Outdoor Poor Department. He has made arrangements for sending such persons back to their own places.

There were seven of these men found in the City Lodging House yesterday morning who said that they had come to the city from out of town in search of work on the tunnel.

At yesterday's meeting of the Council the Aldermanic resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to confer with the Mayor relative to a celebration on the day that actual work on the rapid transit tunnel begins was adopted. The committee appointed consists of Councilmen Goodwin, Murphy, Wise, Murray, and Hottenroth and Aldermen Marks, Gaffney, Holler, Muh, and Murphy.

HUDSON RIVER ALUMNI DINE.

Will Carleton Talks on "The Post-Graduate Course."

The twelfth annual dinner of the New York Alumni Association of the Hudson River Institute was held last night at the St. Denis Hotel, Broadway and Eleventh Street. More than one hundred graduates and their wives were present. Among the prominent guests who made speeches were Jacob S. Van Wyck, President of the association, Rear Admiral Philip, Will Carleton, Justice Gildersleeve, the Rev. A. H. Flack, Henry R. Heath, and A. E. Palmer.

Will Carleton, whose topic was "The Post Graduate Course," made a humorous speech, in which he said that the world is one vast university, and that some of the things that you have to learn in life carry a great deal more instruction than you will find in college. The English, he said, as they have gone along, have picked up considerable education. They learned a lesson from our ancestors one hundred years ago, and at present they are learning that the Boers can see some time after 4 o'clock.

NOTES OF THE THEATRES.

"BOWERY AFTER DARK" IN COURT.

Rocco de Fina Wants to Stop Production of the Drama.

Rocco de Fina yesterday applied to Justice Andrews, in the Supreme Court, for an injunction, pending trial, to restrain Albert H. Woods and Patrick H. Sullivan, brother of Senator Sullivan, from producing the drama "The Bowery After Dark" in this State, and from removing the play and its scenery outside the jurisdiction of the court. He also asks that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the assets of the partnership existing between Sullivan and Woods. The play is now being produced at the Metropolis Theatre.

De Fina alleges that he and Woods entered into partnership last August for the production of the play. He advanced money for which he was to be repaid from the profits, which were afterward to be equally divided between Woods and himself. He alleges fraudulent breach of this agreement on the part of Woods.

Charles L. Hoffman, on behalf of Sullivan and Woods, alleged that the copyright to the play was obtained by him on Feb. 4, 1899, and assigned to Sullivan Nov. 23. He said Sullivan had then employed him to produce the play, which was rewritten before its revival, on Christmas Day. Woods, it is alleged, is merely the manager of the production, and has no proprietary interest in the play. Justice Andrews reserved his decision.

WILL REMAIN WITH MISS HELD.

C. A. Bigelow Refuses to Join Edna May in "The Wire Walker."

George B. McLellan and Gustave Kerker, who arrived in this country from London over a fortnight ago for the purpose of securing an American Company to support Miss Edna May in the new Kerker and Morton musical comedy, called "The Wire Walker," which they propose to produce early this Spring in London, have been making overtures to some of the prominent actors and actresses now appearing in this city.

One of the most important engagements they endeavored to make was that of Charles A. Bigelow, who at present is playing the rôle of Professor Celestin in "Papa's Wife." Mr. Bigelow looked upon their proposition very favorably and presented it to Florence Ziegfeld, Jr., his present manager, who was not very desirous of losing his leading man. After taking the matter into consideration, Mr. Ziegfeld made Mr. Bigelow a counter offer, by which he is to continue in the support of Miss Held for two more seasons after the present one, continuing in his rôle the remaining part of this season and part of next, after which he will support Miss Held in a new play she will present next Fall. The following season Mr. Ziegfeld proposes to star Mr. Bigelow in a new play, which he will have especially written for him. This flattering offer was submitted to Mr. Bigelow yesterday, and he immediately signed a contract to remain in this country for the next two years under Mr. Ziegfeld's management.

OWNERSHIP OF "THE BUTTERFLIES"

Justice Truax Dismisses the Action Brought by Olive May.

Justice Truax yesterday dismissed the action brought by Olive May to assert her title to Henry Guy Carleton's play, "The Butterflies." Mrs. May, who was recently divorced from the defendant, claimed that he transferred the play to her five years ago. He insisted that the transfer was not an absolute one.

The letter from Mr. Carleton, upon which the plaintiff relied, stated that he inclosed her a "formal transfer," that he owed her $1,300, and that "should occasion arise, I desire you to enforce this transfer. By it you are enforcing my dearest wish."

Mr. Carleton admitted that the statement as to Mrs. Carleton's indebtedness to her was not true, and his statement was that after his marriage to her the transfer was returned by her to him.

Justice Truax said the evidence showed that the transfer was to be used "should occasion arise," and that the occasion that was contemplated, according to Mr. Carleton, was his death. The occasion not having yet arisen, the Court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the action.

E. M. Holland's Engagements.

E. M. Holland, who will appear in the new farce which Charles Frohman will produce next Monday night, called "Coralie & Co.," at the Madison Square Theatre, will remain with this company only until Feb. 21, when he will become a member of the company which will present the melodrama "Hearts Are Trumps" at the Garden Theatre, playing the part of Leopold Kolditz. This rôle was to have been played by Edwin Stevens, but owing to the continuation of "Brother Officers" at the Empire Theatre, he will continue in the present rôle.

Change in Cast of "Die Walkure."

A change in the scheduled cast as announced to appear in the opera "Die Walküre" to-night at the Metropolitan Opera House is necessary owing to the indisposition of Herr Van Dyck, who is said to be suffering from a severe illness, which prevents his appearance. In his place Maurice Grau has substituted Herr Dippel, who has consented to sing the rôle, notwithstanding he sang last night in the performance of "Die Meistersinger" at Philadelphia.

George Grossmith Coming Here.

George Grossmith sailed from England Saturday on the Lucania for this country. He comes under contract to N. Vert to give a series of humorous and musical monologue entertainments. Mr. Grossmith's season will begin in Boston on Feb. 12, and he will be heard in New York on Feb. 21 at Mendelssohn Hall, when he will give a series of five recitals.

Miss Seligman in "The Great Ruby."

Minnie Seligman, who is at present appearing in vaudeville, has been engaged by Managers Rosenquest and Brennan to play the rôle of the adventuress in the production of "The Great Ruby," which will begin its engagement at the Fourteenth Street Theatre March 19.

Ridley Employes' Benefit.

The annual theatrical performance for the benefit of the Edward Ridley & Son's employes' relief fund will be held at Daly's Theatre on the evening of Feb. 6, the occasion being the second performance of Mrs. Craigie's society play, "The Ambassador," by Daniel Frohman's company.

Mrs. T. C. Platt's Condition Improved.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The condition of Mrs. Platt, wife of Senator T. C. Platt, is considerably improved to-day.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

Wall Street men are watching with something of interest the outcome of a bit of business transacted yesterday under unusual conditions. One of the members of the Exchange appeared on the floor apparently under the influence of liquor and began buying a certain stock liable to startling fluctuations. There seemed to be no limit to the extent of his orders to buy, if he had them, for he took all of the specialty offered and in good-sized blocks until he had accumulated 25,000 shares. Consternation reigned among the "shorts," as they did not know for whom he was operating, and there were rumors that he was purchasing for a ring of "insiders" and that the intoxication that the broker seemed to be laboring under was simulated. Whatever the reason for the operations of this man, he has now on hand 25,000 shares of stock that will, either yield him a good profit or cause him a very considerable loss, according as to whether he was drunk or sober. Operators were kept busy last evening guessing as to what the performance meant, and went to bed wondering. Nothing but the course of that particular stock and the success or failure of the broker involved will solve the mystery when the stock again becomes a football to-day.

This operation, which was the occasion for so much gossip, recalls that of one of the investors who got down town on that day in December last when all the stocks took such a slump as to nearly create a panic. This particular party had managed to accumulate what the boys call a "jag" at the various saloons he had visited during the day, but he had also managed to keep his wits about him. So when he saw that the Street was full of bargains he went to his broker and ordered him to buy right and left of a lot of stocks that he was sure would remain under pressure but a few hours, unless there was absolute ruin for every one, and of that he had no fear. Before he went up town to continue the spree on which he had embarked he gave a friend power to close out his stocks in case any accident should happen him. This had been done at his friend's solicitation, as the investor was sure that he would be around all right in the morning to reap the profit he was sure was coming to him. Instead of going home and turning up as he had promised to do, he met a lot of congenial spirits in the evening and kept up his spree until well into daylight of the next day. His friend with his power of attorney waited as long as he dared for the convivial friend to turn up, stocks meantime taking an upward turn that assured a handsome profit for the man with the jag. Finally, an hour before the close of business, he ordered the stocks of the man of the spree sold, and the deal closed. There was no trouble in doing this, and the friend went home happy over the thought of a good deed performed. Next day he of the convivial habits turned up in the Street in a "groggy" condition, very repentant, but as steady as treatment with brandy and soda could make him. He hurried to his broker with an order to close out the deal begun a couple of days before. Then to his surprise he discovered that his friend had saved him the trouble, and that there in his broker's hands were $21,000 as profits of the deal that had been made while he was sobering up. Just what he did for that friend history does not relate, but the story is that the reward was something that was almost princely in its character.

"Good day, Doctor," was the way in which a friend greeted the Rev. Robert Collyer, that veteran of the Unitarian Church in this city, whose friends are as numerous as the circle of his acquaintance. "Do you know that I was never called Doctor until I came to this country, and that I have no right to put D. D. after my name? It is a fact, whether you know it or not. Probably the only time I had those letters tacked to my name in the old country was when I left the Methodist Church for the Unitarian, and the way they put it then was as you newspaper men occasionally print it, 'd—d.'" Mr. Collyer, who is now seventy-seven years of age, remains hale, hearty, and active as he was a score of years ago, a fact he attributes to the constant use of oatmeal and milk as a feature of his daily food for years.

One of the new fads of the day, particularly among Irishmen who are proprietors of saloons frequented by pro-Boers, is to decorate their show windows with fancy baskets filled with bottled liquors, the whole decorated with ribbons of the Boer colors—red, white, blue, and green. The same color scheme is employed in the decoration of the chandeliers in the saloon itself, and the effect is said to be quite a clever way to attract the trade of both Irish and German sympathizers with the Boers in their fight against England.

There is a down-town club known as the Dolando, whose members are given to the exploitation of beef and beans as an article of diet, and incidentally to "playing the races" in the city pool-rooms. One member of the club who is not given to speculation on the ponies dropped into the headquarters of the club the other day to pay his dues, amounting to $2. He laid the cash in the hands of a clerk, gave his name, and went away, supposing of course that the clerk knew what the money was for. But it so happened that there was a scheme on foot that day to form a pool to "beat" a certain race to be run at New Orleans, concerning which the President of the club had received a "tip." So the money intended for dues went into that pool, and in common with the rest of the cash was bet on the horse at odds of 5 to 1. It was almost a week later that the member received a notification that he owed $2 for dues. That took him around to find what the notice meant. Then to his astonishment the same clerk handed to him $12 with the remark that that was "the best I could do with the money, as some one got in ahead of the Dolando crowd and got the best of the odds." That member had pretty fair control of himself, and so managed to get away with the unexpected winning as if it was all a matter of course, and handed back the original $2 to pay for the dues charged up against him. Friends of this member now say he is one of the type of men who are so lucky that if they fell into the water they would not get wet.

Italian agents who have been in this country for a couple of weeks past have concluded arrangements for the equipment of several trolley roads in the leading cities of Northern Italy, the franchises of which are controlled by a syndicate who found that they could do better for the equipment of their roads in this country than anywhere else in the world. The contracts, which will be signed this week, are said to aggregate $750,000, and it is said among electricians will be followed by other large orders.

It always gives old New Yorkers a shock when they hear Manhattanville and the upper west side of New York generally referred to as Harlem. But Manhattanville, Bloomingdale, and the other local names that apply to that section do not seem to appeal to the average resident even though he knows that Harlem is wholly on the east side of town. So all New York has gotten into the habit of referring to all that part of the city north of One Hundred and Tenth Street as Harlem, and the west side "L" trains carry the Harlem label, though they do not run to Harlem at all. A number of the people of the west side who want a name for their locality that will meet with popular approval and at the same time give it a proper designation, have decided on "West Harlem" as the thing for their locality. Signs bearing that designation have begun to appear there, notably one big one over near the Fort Lee Ferry. This designation seems to suit, and is likely to be very generally adopted.

HAS AIDED THREE BLIND MEN.

Dr. Knapp Declines to Discuss His Method Until Further Trial.

Dr. Herbert J. Knapp of 287 South Fifth Street, Brooklyn, who is alleged to have effected three remarkable cures of blindness, declined yesterday to discuss his treatment.

"I tried a new method, which I desire not to say too much about until I have further experimented with it," he said.

Dr. Knapp is an eye and ear specialist at the Eastern District Homeopathic Dispensary. The men he is said to have cured of blindness are James Dimond, Eugene Bailey, and Frank Quevedo, all inmates of the Home for Blind Men, on Lexington Avenue, Brooklyn. Dr Knapp's method of treatment, it was said yesterday, is a system of internal administration of medicine.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The season progresses, and has now only four weeks to run. The continuance of good weather, for yesterday, although cold, was really a bracing Winter day, has delayed the departure of many people who otherwise would before this have departed for the Southern resorts. There are still few arrivals of people at all well known here at the Florida hotels, and, although there are many people at Aiken, matters there are still dull. Mr. George Coppell, with two of his daughters, Miss Helen and Miss Florence Coppell, will leave to-day for Jekyl Island, where they will remain about two months, returning in time for the wedding of Miss Coppell and Mr. Bowers, which will take place in April.

Yesterday was late in beginning, as many people were weary after the Astor ball of Monday night. There was little of interest in the morning or afternoon to take people out, and so the men and women of leisure rested in their clubs and homes for the diversions of the evening. These included another Tuesday evening with music, given by Miss De Forest and Miss Callender, when a more elaborate programme than any before rendered was given and when over 100 guests were present, and dinners given by Mrs. Eben Wright of 10 West Fifty-third Street, Mrs. James Brown Lord of 903 Madison Avenue, Mrs. Buchanan Winthrop of 279 Fifth Avenue, Mrs. George L. Rives of 14 West Thirty-eighth Street, Mrs. Francis Burrall Hoffman of 58 East Seventy-ninth Street, and by many others. Mrs. A. D. Juilliard also gave a dinner and dance for young people in the Ladies' Annex of the Metropolitan Club. The afternoon brought a coming-out reception at Mr. George Coppell's residence, 40 Fifth Avenue; the second and last of Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry's and the Misses Gerry's receptions, several "at homes," and an afternoon entertainment at Sherry's, where Miss Maude A. Jackson played the piano and Miss Rose Antoinette Preston danced under fashionable patronage. The Sewing Class of the Lying-In Hospital met at Mrs. George Crocker's yesterday morning.

To-day will bring a number of "at homes," including those of Mrs. Willard H. Brown, 105 East Thirty-fifth Street; Mrs. Charles H. Coster, 37 East Thirty-seventh Street; Mrs. James M. Varnum, 87 Fifth Avenue; Mrs. Lewis F. Whitin, 9 West Fifty-sixth Street, and Mrs. Alexander T. Van Nest, 31 West Thirty-seventh Street. Mrs. H. H. Cook and Mme. de Heredia will give the first of two Wednesday "at homes." The evening will bring Miss Leary's dinner to Mrs. Astor, at her residence, 3 Fifth Avenue, and an afternoon entertainment at Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs's, where the young woman who does "poems in dance," as she calls it, and who was last prominent here in the "Dance of Spring" last April at Delmonico's, will again essay her saltatorial interpretation of the "Rubaiyat." The evening will bring again the opera, where "Die Walküre" will be sung.

The wedding of the Hon. Archibald Lionel Lindsay, second son of the Earl of Lindsay, and Miss Ethel Tucker, daughter of Mr. Austin Tucker of Boston, will be celebrated at noon to-day in Emanuel Church, Boston. Dr. Leighton Parks will perform the ceremony, and a breakfast will be served at the residence of the bride's parents, 47 Bay State Road. Miss Marian Tucker, a sister of the bride, will be her maid of honor, and Mr. Randolph Foster Tucker, brother of the bride, will be the best man. Mr. and Mrs. Lindsay will make their honeymoon trip to California, and will not sail for their Scottish home until April next. Mr. Lindsay was formerly a Lieutenant in the English Army, but last Spring he resigned his commission, after an attack of malarial fever contracted in the Transvaal.

Everything is in readiness for the Charity Ball, which will take place at the Astoria Hotel to-morrow evening. The boxes have, with one or two exceptions, been sold, and as this year for the first time in many seasons there is no other fashionable entertainment placed for that week, the attendance of society will be larger than for some years past. The younger and dancing set will be present in force.

The Aller, which sails to-day for Bremen and Southampton, has booked, among other passengers, Mr. Charles F. Beach, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. John C. Neimeyer, and Mr. H. S. Van Auken. La Normandie, which arrived from Havre on Monday night, brought, among others, M. Cambon, French Ambassador at Washington, and Miss M. B. Warren.

The St. Louis, which sails to-day for Southampton, has booked, among other passengers, Lieut. Commander Asher C. Baker, United States Navy, of Washington; Mr. G. E. Butler, Miss Dillon, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Herbert, Mr. and Mrs. Francis C. Lawrence, Jr., (Miss Susan Willing,) Mr. and Mrs. Roland B. Page, Mr. W. W. Worthington, and Mr. George Keppel.

The report of the engagement of Mr. Max Muller, Second Secretary of the British Legation at Washington, and a son of Prof. Max Muller, and Miss Laura Patterson Swan, daughter of Mrs. Elisha Dyer, Jr., and whose father is Mr. Donnell Swan of Baltimore, is persistently circulated, and is generally credited. The report creates no particular surprise, as it has been a matter of gossip for some months past. Miss Swan made her début in Baltimore at a Monday night german a few weeks ago.

The reception to be given on Friday afternoon by Mrs. Wilbur Bloodgood, announced in this column yesterday, and at which some Filipinos are to render native music and a bride dance, is not to be a large affair. Mrs. Bloodgood has sent cards to only a few intimate friends.

Mrs. James Brown Lord gave a dinner of twelve covers at her residence, 903 Madison Avenue, last evening. The guests included Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Miss Greta Pomeroy, Mr. and Mrs. T. Suffern Tailer, Mr. and Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mr. and Mrs. James W. Gerard, and Mr. De Lancey Nicoll. A Hungarian band played through the dinner.

Mrs. A. D. Juilliard of 16 West Fifty-seventh Street, gave a large dinner of forty covers in the Ladies' Annex of the Metropolitan Club last night. This dinner was for young people, friends of her son. Among those present were Miss Eleanor Thomas, Miss Catherine Dodge, Miss Mildred Stokes, Miss Mildred Dix, Miss Mary Moran, Miss Hopeton Atterbury, Miss May Neeser, Miss Harriet Delafield, Miss Barker, Mrs. Jules J. Vatable, (Miss Bessie Stokes,) Mr. Vatable, Mr. and Mrs. Robert McM. Gillespie, (Miss Lillian Stokes,) Miss Potter, Miss Kane, and Messrs. Schuyler Schieffelin, J. G. Neeser, Murray Dodge, Phoenix Ingraham, Montgomery Hare, John Delafield, and Frederic Kernochan. The dinner was followed by an informal dance.

Mr. George Coppell of 40 Fifth Avenue gave a large reception at his residence yesterday afternoon to introduce his youngest daughter, Miss Grace Coppell. The débutante was assisted in receiving by her married sister, Mrs. Edgar Hatfield Booth, and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Arthur Coppell, both brides of this season, and by Miss Martha Bowers, Miss Martha Gallaudet of Washington, Miss Margaret Kean of Philadelphia, Miss Helen Hotchkiss of New Haven, Miss Louise Gulliver, and Miss Ruth Austin. Her gown was of white satin trimmed with point lace, and she carried a shower bouquet of violets. The house was handsomely decorated with palms, ferns, and many pink roses, as well as other flowers. The reception was largely attended.

Miss De Forest and Miss Callender gave last evening at their beautiful apartments in the Tiffany Building, Madison Avenue and Seventy-second Street, the fifth in a series of Tuesday night musicales. The musical programme was made up, as usual, by Mr. Victor Harris, and was rendered by a string orchestra, Mr. David Mannes, Mr. Emilio de Gogorza, and Mrs. Josephine Jacoby. Col. John Jacob Astor and Mrs. Astor arrived on Thursday, Jan. 11, at St. Moritz and registered at the Palace Hotel there. The following is from a letter from the Engadine: "At the Palace Hotel Col. J. J. Astor of New York arrived on Thursday last. It will be remembered that Col. Astor was a keen tobogganer last Winter, and gave the club a very handsome cup to be competed for, which he himself won. He and Mrs. Astor were seen yesterday (Jan. 13) in the race on the Cresta Road, going in very good form. Mrs. Walter J. Kingsland has also arrived at the Palace Hotel, where already are established Mrs. Adrian Iselin, Jr., and the Misses Iselin. The Baron De Forest went over to Davos on Tuesday to take part in the toboggan races. The death of Lady Alice Montague, however, caused him to return to St. Moritz the next day. All the races were declared off, and the sympathy for the Duchess in her bereavement was general. The Duchess of Manchester, the Duke, who just arrived in time, and other members of the family left Davos on Jan. 12 for England, where Lady Alice Montagu will be buried. The Duke had given a cup for the bobbing race which had been arranged for that week, but which has been postponed on account of his bereavement in the loss of his sister."

At the Kulm Hotel, St. Moritz, there was recently a fancy dress ball. Miss Berrie Payne of New York, the daughter of Mrs. John W. Payne, (Miss Georgianna Smythe,) appeared as La Folie and danced as only an American girl knows how. Miss Whiting was a Marquise and Mr. Vail of New York a lift boy.

There is the same cry on the Riviera of bad weather. A correspondent, writing Jan. 14, says: "I suppose I am expected to write of sunshine and flowers, but as a plain fact there is hardly a pin to choose between London, for instance, and here just now, except for the perpetual blueness of our sea and sky. We had heavy rains for three weeks, and this was followed by two 'dog' days, with the sun uncomfortably hot and dazzling. Result, most people have colds. The first 'Battle of Flowers' will take place at Mentone on Feb. 6, while King Carnival will enter the town on Feb. 20. The chief dissipations at present lie in dances, 'at homes,' concerts, and book title parties. At one of the latter which was given at Mentone by Mme. de Bourbel, there were present the Marquise de Choiseul, (Miss Clare Coudert,) Mr. and Mrs. Phelps Allis, and the Marquis and Marquise de Cambeforte. At Nice, Mrs. Van Buren is giving weekly receptions on Tuesday afternoons. Mrs. McClellan, the widow of Gen. McClellan, is at her villa, 56 Rue de France, where she has been joined by Mr. and Mrs. Paul Desprez, (Miss McClellan.) The Count and Countess Guldencrone of Denmark are also at Nice. At the Cercle de la Mediterranee was registered Mr. Brevoort of New York and at the Hotel Regina Mr. and Miss Carter of Philadelphia."

M. and Mme. de Navarro were registered at the Grande Hotel des Anglais, Saint Raphael, Jan. 18. At Cap Martin are Mrs. J. G. Neeser and family. At Hyres, at the Grand Hotel des Palmiers, were Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Moss M. A. Post, and Mr. and Mrs. John Bell Bouton. Mrs. Neeser has left the Riviera and is en route to America.

The following from London will be of interest: "Capt. Coventry's charming American bride never looked prettier than at St. Peter's, Eaton Square, in her wedding gown of white crêpe de chine made princess shape, and exquisitely worked with silver. The Court train falling from the shoulders was made of white panne velvet embroidered with frills of lily of the valley worked with silver and paillettes of mother of pearl. She wore a fine tulle veil and a small wreath of orange blossoms, and her only ornament was a large diamond crescent. The five bridesmaids were Lady Dorothy Coventry, Miss French of New York, Miss Whitehouse, Miss Budgett, and Miss Duntze. Their frocks were dreams. The skirts were made of white cloth, and the bodices were a bewildering mixture of white panne and chiffon. With this they wore cherry-colored hats trimmed with bunches of roses. Instead of bouquets, they carried muffs of cherry-colored panne lined with white, given to them by the bride, while the bridegroom's gift took the form of diamond initial brooches mounted on an enameled spray of lilies of the valley, the bride's name flower. During the course of the reception, which was held at Grosvenor Gardens, Mr. and Mrs. Coventry left for Copse Hill, Gloucestershire, lent for the honeymoon by Mr. Meredyth Whitehouse."

Sherman—Whitman.

Miss Leslie Whitman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac A. Whitman of 244 Henry Street, Brooklyn, and Frederick D. Sherman were married last evening in the First Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn. The Rev. L. Mason Clarke, pastor of the church, performed the ceremony. Miss Elizabeth Whitman, a sister of the bride, was maid of honor, and Charles A. Sherman, a brother of the bridegroom, acted as best man. The bridesmaids were Miss Jessie Sherman, Miss Elizabeth Whittlesey, Miss Rosamond Thompson, and Miss Blanche Whittlesey. Clarence M. Fink, Wendell P. Colton, Howard S. Hadden, Allen Whitman, William T. Frothingham, and Alden R. Whitman acted as ushers. A large reception was held at the home of the bride's parents after the ceremony.

Mr. Emanuel Rosenthal of Chicago, Ill., and Miss Adelaide Emsheimer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Emsheimer of 143 West Seventy-fifth Street, were married last evening at the Hotel Majestic, in this city.

DOINGS OF THE CASTELLANES.

The Count and Countess Castellane spent yesterday in town. In the morning they drove out, and, after luncheon with Mrs. Gould, paid visits. In the evening they went to the Casino with Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting. Saturday they will go to Lakewood, staying with Mr. and Mrs. George Gould until Monday, when they return to the Waldorf-Astoria.

No, I have heard nothing further from Paris," said the Count yesterday in answer to a question. "Just what I shall do I cannot say. If that fellow makes his excuses, I may accept them; but if he doesn't, he'll find his head blown off."

"With a pistol?" was asked.

"No, I'd use a club," the Count replied. "I would not fight a duel with him. So, really, I can't say just what I will do. I must wait until I get back."

The Count denied that he was here to sell stocks, and characterized such rumors as absurd.

"I'm here to visit friends," said he, "and enjoy America. My wife is here to see her family."

Stewart-Trapp Wedding To-day.

It is reported at Whitestone that the marriage of Miss Nellie Trapp, the organist of Grace Episcopal Church, at that place, to the Rev. C. S. M. Stewart, who was formerly pastor of the church but now of Rhode Island, is to take place despite the opposition of Miss Trapp's father, at the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Manhattan, at 5 o'clock this afternoon. Mr. Trapp says if his daughter marries the minister he will disinherit her. Miss Trapp is twenty-nine years old, and Mr. Stewart fifty-four.

He was in his eighty-fifth year. Mr. Wake was born in the old Reynolds house, in Thames Street, which stood in the rear of Trinity Church. When he was eleven years old he was apprenticed to John G

PAY FOR SCHOOL TEACHERS

Compromise Measure Agreed On—To be Reported To-day.

HEARING ON GENERAL BILLS

Senate Cities Committee Hears Arguments on the Marshall, Ford, and Elsberg Bills.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—The teachers of Queens and Richmond will be paid in a very short time. Gov. Roosevelt will send in an emergency message to the Assembly to-morrow, and Assembly Fallows's bill, which now meets everybody's approval, will be reported favorably by the Cities Committee in the Assembly.

A large delegation of interested parties was here to-day to be heard before the Cities Committee of the Senate upon the various propositions for the reorganization of the department. In a conference held they carefully canvassed the situation as it developed in the committee hearing last week. It was determined that under existing circumstances no immediate relief for the unpaid teachers, particularly in the Borougns of Queens and Richmond, could be had. Senator Ford insisted upon his bill as the only proper one, and tried to make it a party measure. Senator McCarren was quite as determined to force his bill, while Senator Grady was equally firm in his support of Controller Coler's proposition. Mr. Fallows also had a bill, and no immediate legislation could be expected with such warring elements.

It was therefore decided that some portions of Assemblyman Fallows's bill should be combined with other portions of Senator Grady's measure. It was agreed that Assemblyman Fallows should be the sponsor, and that the compromise measure should be introduced in his name. Controller Coler has insisted that there are now sufficient funds in the City Treasury to pay the overdue salaries, and his bill directs the Board of Estimate and Apportionment to provide for such payment out of any available funds. Assemblyman Fallows's bill reads as follows:

"Section 1. For the purpose of providing for the payment of all arrears of salary and all unpaid salaries of all licensed teachers and other employes of the School Boards for the Boroughs of Queens and Richmond, in the City of New York, who performed services in said boroughs in and during the year 1899, the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of the City of New York is hereby empowered and directed to transfer to the respective general school funds of said boroughs from the unexpended balances of the special school fund appropriated to the Board of Education for the year 1899 a sum sufficient to pay all said arrears of salary and unpaid salaries as in this act provided.

"Section 2. If the unexpended balances aforesaid shall not be sufficient to pay said arrears of salary and unpaid salaries, said Board of Estimate and Apportionment is hereby authorized and required to direct the issue of revenue bonds, in amounts sufficient to make up any deficiency not provided for by the transfer of said unexpended balances as aforesaid.

"Section 3. From such unexpended balances, and, if necessary, from the proceeds of the sale of revenue bonds, as aforesaid, the Controller of the City of New York is hereby directed to pay said arrears of salary and unpaid salaries. The rates of salary to be paid to such teachers and other employes, and the pay rolls of such teachers and other employes shall be certified to the Controller of the City of New York, in the manner prescribed by law, and said rates of salaries shall not be less than the salaries paid to such teachers and employes for the month of September, 1899, nor less than the rates of salary and salaries prescribed by Chapter 417 of the Laws of 1899.

"Section 4. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed, so far as the same may affect the operation of this act.

"Section 5. This act shall take effect immediately."

JOINT HEARING ON BILLS.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—A joint hearing on the bills of Senators Marshall, Elsberg, and Ford was given before the Cities Committees this afternoon. Senator Marshall's bill carries with it the decentralization of the system by giving to the Borough Boards the powers of the present Board of Education. The Elsberg bill has for its purpose the still further centralization of the system by strengthening the powers of the Central Board. Senator Ford's bill deals with the raising and apportionment of moneys for the support of the schools.

Those who favored the Marshall bill, as opposed to the bills of Senators Ford and Elsberg, were President Robertson of the Brooklyn Borough School Board, Horace E. Dresser, Vice President of the Central Board; Dr. John Harrigan, ex-member of the Brooklyn Borough Board; George Friefelt, a member of the legislative committee of the Borough of Brooklyn; Superintendent E. M. Bassett of Flatbush, Dr. Eben F. Smith, representing the Union League, and Superintendent Edward Ward of Brooklyn.

Those who favored the Ford and Elsberg bills were Superintendent Wilcox of the New York schools, ex-Commissioner Charles C. Burlingam, Superintendent Stevens of Queens, Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, President of the Public Education Association of New York; John C. Agar, representing the City and Reform Clubs of New York, and Max Brill, ex-member of the Brooklyn Borough Board.

BROOKLYN MEN HEARD.

The Brooklyn delegation were the first to be recognized by Senator Stranahan, who presided, and President Robertson took the floor. He spoke at considerable length in favor of the Marshall bill and against the measures as presented by Senators Ford and Elsberg. He opposed the Elsberg bill, he said, because it was purely an administrative measure. He complained that it dealt with the salary schedule, which he contended did not belong there. He advocated home rule in the school question because, he said, "the nearer we get to the people the better for all." He deplored the fact that under the present system 40,000 children in the City of Brooklyn were obliged to forego the benefits of half the school days because enough money has not been apportioned for their proper education. "If you don't pass a remedial bill soon," said he, "you will close up the night schools in the City of Brooklyn."

Prof. Robertson attributed the present arrearages in the salaries of the teachers in some of the boroughs to a vicious section of the charter, which has paralyzed the system. "I would make the borough boards have a representative on the Board of Estimate and Apportionment," said he, "and would give them a vote when school appropriations are being made. I think that would do away with excesses in one year and deficiencies in another. The people in Brooklyn were satisfied with the old system, and we ask that it be put back as far as possible."

Horace E. Dresser was next heard. He characterized the Elsberg bill as a theoretical measure, and said the people who backed it were not in sympathy with the public schools. "We cannot buy a site or erect a schoolhouse," said he, "by our own Borough Board. Everything must go to the Central Board. We want a remedy, but we do not want to try any more experiments. We ask to go back to a system that was the best system, I might say, in the United States. We want the management of our own school fund, we want to buy our own sites, and build our own schoolhouses. The Board of Estimate and Apportionment should give to each borough the proper share of money and let the borough boards administer the general fund."

The next to argue in favor of the Marshall bill was Dr. John Harrigan. He favored the Marshall bill.

"It does not contain one clause," said he, "intended to discriminate in favor of any individual. It was drafted and prepared for the benefit of the schools, for the teachers, pupils, and parents." Dr. Harrigan declared that the appointment of teachers from the civil service list was unworthy of any sound mind. He characterized the system as absurd and ridiculous.

IN FAVOR OF OTHER BILLS.

Superintendent Stevens of Queens favored the Elsberg bill. He said the teachers of Queens had not been increased in number, although the number of pupils had increased 12 per cent. Mr. Burlingham favored the Ford bill, saying that it presented a simple remedy for a terrible difficulty which exists. He thought the Ford bill would settle the teachers' salary question permanently. He regarded the Marshall bill as reactionary. Mrs. Van Rensselaer said she voiced the sentiment of 700 members of the Public Education Association, and that it favored the bills of Senators Elsberg and Ford. "We believe," said she, "that unification, and not decentralization, is what is required." Mr. Agar, in speaking for the Reform and City Clubs of New York, urged the passage of the bills introduced by Senators Ford and Elsberg and opposed those of Senators Grady, Havens, Norton, McCarren, and Marshall.

MR. MAXWELL ON THE FORD BILL.

Max Brill, an ex-member of the Brooklyn board, spoke of the demerits of the Board of Education. Superintendent Maxwell favored the Ford bill. He said that while the Marshall bill purported to be a decentralizing measure, it was in truth a most intensely centralizing measure. "Senator Ford's bill," said he, "provides that there shall be a stated fund of not less than four mills on the dollar. Suppose that were in operation this year. The amount asked for by the Board of Education was $13,747,656, while the appropriation under the Ford bill would be $13,913,408, a difference of $165,752 in favor of the Ford bill. In the various boroughs the appropriations and amounts which would be raised by the Ford bill are relatively in round numbers as follows: In the Borough of Manhattan and the Bronx, appropriated $7,074,000; Ford's bill, $7,977,000; Brooklyn, $4,059,000; $4,788,000; Queens, $850,000; $850,000; Richmond, $242,000; $295,000.

"You cannot have a measure more dangerous than the Marshall bill. I believe, however, that the bills of Senators Elsberg and Ford stand for equal rights for the people."

OPPOSITION TO UNIFICATION PLAN.

Assembly Not Likely to Indorse the Project in Its Present Form.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—That the Assembly will object to a unification plan which will give the State Board of Regents the power to appoint the Chancellor to preside over the unified school system developed at a conference held to-day between Gov. Roosevelt, Republican leaders in the Legislature, and representatives of the Department of Public Instruction.

The Assembly is adverse to losing the power of appointing the head of the common school system of the State. The sentiment seems to be that the Chancellor to govern the unified school system should be elected by the Senate and Assembly, as the members of the Board of Regents and the State Superintendent of Public Instruction now are. It is said that Mr. Halls was upbraided at the conference by certain members of the Legislature for being too lenient with the Board of Regents in framing a unification plan. It was stated that the Board of Regents was given too much in the proposed plan. It was likewise stated that the Horton Academic law which gives the Board of Regents the power to distribute certain moneys among high schools and academies should be repealed. No decision was reached as to the plan to be adopted.

New York Has Plenty of Money.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Controller Coler has sent a communication to Senator Stranahan of the Senate Cities Committee in advocacy of the Coler-Grady Education bill, in which he shows the falsity of the charge that there are not sufficient unexpended balances in the City of New York to meet the Board of Education deficiency. He shows that there are over $220,000 of unexpended balances in the Education Department of Manhattan and the Bronx alone.

School Teachers See the Governor.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—A large delegation of New Yorw City school teachers, accompanied by several members of the Legislature, including Senators McCarren, Elsberg, and Davis, and Assemblyman Fallows, conferred with Gov. Roosevelt to-day on New York City school legislation. The Governor told them that what should be done was to pass a bill to make the Ahearn law effective, and that other needed legislation could follow.

WOULD MANDAMUS MAXWELL.

Decision Reserved in Teachers' "C" Certificate Case.

Arguments were submitted yesterday to Justice Marean of the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, in the application of Rose Brady and eleven other holders of "C" certificates to teach for a writ of mandamus directing William H. Maxwell, as Superintendent of Public Schools of the City of New York, to place them on the eligible list of school teachers in primary schools.

The applicants' claim that they have the right to come in under the McCarren act of 1899, which provides that all licenses granted to teachers by the Superintendent of Public Instruction of Brooklyn or by the Board of Education of the City of Brooklyn prior to Feb. 1, 1898, be recognized by the Board of Education of the City of New York or the State Superintendent of Public Instruction as in force from that date, unless revoked for cause by the State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

In opposing the application, Assistant Corporation Counsel Stapleton stated that there were about 1,500 of these certificates in existence, the last one having been issued in 1882. The Brooklyn School Board in October of that year, by resolution, had refused to recognize them. Mr. Stapleton further contended that the licenses came to an end by the very act which granted them, which provided that these licenses should be good for one year only.

Justice Marean reserved his decision.

CAUCUS VOTES FOR HENDRICKS

His Nomination for Superintendent of Insurance Unanimously Indorsed by Republican Senators.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Not a single vote was cast against Francis Hendricks at the caucus of the Republican Senators, which met immediately after the adjournment of the Senate to-day, and there is now no doubt that he will succeed Louis F. Payn as Superintendent of Insurance.

Every Republican Senator was present. On the roll call Senator Raines, who had given Louis F. Payn a pledge to oppose any nomination for State Superintendent of Insurance other than that of Mr. Payn, and Senator Ambler, who represents Mr. Payn's home district, asked to be excused from voting. When the roll call was finished both Senators voted yea, and Mr. Hendricks became the unanimous choice of his party for the place.

It is announced to-day that the Democratic Senators will join with their Republican colleagues and vote for Mr. Hendricks. Senators Grady and McCarren have notified Chairman Odell of the Republican State Committee that there is no desire on the part of the Democrats to oppose confirmation.

The Senate Committee on Insurance will meet to-morrow and agree to favorably report Mr. Hendricks's nomination to the Senate. It is expected that a vote will be taken on Thursday morning, and thus will end, for the present at least, an incident which has given the Republican leaders more concern than anything which has happened in this State for many years.

Mr. Payn and his friends are bitterly opposed to Gov. Roosevelt, and while they refuse to talk for publication they privately say that they will fight against his renomination. Some of the more radical of Mr. Payn's followers threaten to carry their opposition to the polls if Gov. Roosevelt is renominated for his present office.

GERRY SOCIETY STATEMENTS.

Assembly Bill Provides for the Filing of an Annual Report—Other Measures Introduced.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Assemblyman Stewart will to-morrow introduce a bill aimed at the Gerry society. It compels it to make and file statements of all moneys received and disbursed with the Secretary of State annually.

Under the provisions of the bill the society will have to present at its annual meeting a report, verified by the President and Treasurer, or by a majority of the Directors, showing the whole amount of real and personal property owned by it, where located, and where and how invested, the amount and nature of the property acquired during the year immediately preceding the date of the report and the manner of the acquisition; the amount applied, appropriated or expended during the year immediately preceding such date, and the purposes, objects, or persons to or for which such applications, appropriations, or expenditures have been made, and the names and places of residence of the persons who have been admitted to membership in the corporation during such year.

Assemblyman Stewart, speaking of his bill to-night said: "These amendments are not intended to embarrass the society or to impede its good work in any particular, but are designed to remove from the statute books of the State some of the improper and inequitable provisions of law, secured by the society in question, which disfigure their pages."

Mr. Stewart is of the opinion that other amendments to the statutes are necessary to bring the society to a common level with other institutions whose affairs are administered by the State's most prominent and respected citizens, who give freely of their money and of their time and find no difficulty in complying with the requirements of the law.

Assemblyman Julius Harburger introduced two bills in the House to-day which are aimed at the Gerry society. The first reads: "Section 1. After the passage of this act no State official connected with any State department shall have the right to issue orders, rules, or any other power, except as to statistics, to any institution wholly or partly supported by local funds. Section 2. The local authorities alone shall have the right to visit, inspect, and regulate all institutions in their respective counties, provided they receive any public funds toward the maintenance of children or inmates."

Mr. Harburger's second bill compels all charitable institutions receiving money for the support of the children of sick or homeless persons from local funds to render their sworn statement to the proper local officers whose duty it is to pay such bills in the same manner as such institute would render it to any debtor.

It is reported here that Richard Croker has cabled from London that legislation against the Gerry society must not be countenanced. It is also said that the Republican members are opposed to any legislation aimed at the Gerry society.

TO REPORT AGRICULTURAL BILLS.

Assembly Committee Acts Favorably on Two Measures.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—The Assembly Committee on Agriculture will to-morrow report favorably on two bills amending the agricultural law introduced by Mr. Litchard of Allegany. One is to prevent the watering of milk, and fixes the penalty for the first offense at $50 and each subsequent offense at $150. Of the moneys so recovered in fines, one-half is to be paid into the State Treasury, one-fourth to the County Treasury, and the remainder is to be paid to the Co-operative Association owning or operating butter or cheese factories which has received such diluted milk from the dealer.

The other measure is designed to abolish gambling on fair grounds, by providing that the State moneys shall not be distributed to any agricultural society, fair, or association which permits gambling, gambling devices, or games of chance on its grounds in any form during the holding of fairs or meets.

SUNDAY OPENING OF SALOONS.

Assembly Bill Provides for Permits to Sell Between 1 and 12 P. M.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—In line with the new attitude of Dr. Parkhurst on the Sunday opening of saloons, Julius Harburger of New York introduced a new excise bill, a principal provision of which reads: "The excise authorities in any city or town of the State may, within their discretion, on any application signed and sworn to by 5 per cent. of the qualified electors of any political division having authority to elect a member of the Assembly, authorize the sale by any licensed applicant, between the hours of 1 o'clock in the afternoon and midnight on Sundays, of beer, ale, and spirituous liquors, subject to such restrictions as may to such board seem reasonable, necessary, and proper, in all licensed saloons, gardens, concert saloons, and in all beer saloons within such Assembly district for the period of one year."

The bill also restores the local excise board system and establishes the fees.

CHANGE IN STOCK CORPORATION LAW

Penalty for Refusal to Furnish List of Stockholders on Demand.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Assemblyman McKeown has introduced a bill amending the stock corporation law requiring stock corporations, upon demand being made by a stockholder, to furnish, without charge, within two days after such request is made, a list of all the stockholders of such corporation, together with the residence and number of shares held by each.

Neglect or refusal to live up to the requirements of this act is to be deemed a misdemeanor, and the officer so neglecting or refusing to furnish such a list on demand shall forfeit and pay to the party making the request for such statement the sum of $400, and the additional sum of $150 for each and every day thereafter until such statement has been furnished.

BILL TO PROMOTE BRAVE FIREMEN.

Senator Plunkitt Confident of the Passage of His Measure.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Senator Plunkitt of New York, who early in the session introduced a bill to permit the Fire Commissioner of New York to promote to the next highest grade without competitive examination any member of the uniformed force who had risked his life to save that of another, said this afternoon that he expected to have his measure favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Cities next week and that he felt confident of its passage.

The Senator said he had talked with the Civil Service Commissioners, and they had agreed not to oppose his bill. The principal object of the measure is to enable Fire Commissioner Scannell to promote those firemen who were mentioned for heroism at the Windsor Hotel fire last March, where many persons were rescued at great danger to the firemen who saved them from death.

LUNACY COMMISSION FOR NEW YORK

Senate Bill Provides for a Board of Eleven Qualified Physicians.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—A bill, having for its object the establishment of a Board of Lunacy Examiners for the City of New York, was introduced to-day by Senator Coffey. The bill provides that the Commissioners of Public Charities appoint within sixty days a board consisting of eleven duly qualified physicians who shall have had at least ten years' experience in the active practice of medicine.

Four members of the board are to be appointed for the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx, four for the Boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens, and two for the Borough of Richmond. The chief examiner is to be selected from the City of New York at large, the others to be residents of their respective boroughs. The salary of the chief examiner is fixed at $5,000 per annum; examiners for the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx and Brooklyn and Queens at $3,500, and those for the Borough of Richmond at $1,500 per year. The salaries and other expenses of the board shall be paid by the Board of Public Charities.

TO ABATE BARREN ISLAND NUISANCE

Measure Indorsed by Dr. Doty and Approved by the Governor.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Dr. Doty, Health Officer of the Port of New York, conferred with Gov. Roosevelt to-day relative to legislation which will remove the garbage reduction nuisance on Barren Island. Senator Wagner and Assemblyman Doughty will introduce bills providing that New York City shall establish a crematory plant which will operate a process that will entirely consume the garbage. Twelve months will be given in which to remove the objectionable plant on Barren Island.

Dr. Doty indorses these bills, and stated to Gov. Roosevelt to-day that he believed that they were sufficient to successfully abate the nuisance on Barren Island and provide New York City with a thoroughly adequate and sanitary process of disposing of its garbage.

Dr. Doty made a complete investigation of garbage disposal processes in Europe last Summer at the request of Gov. Roosevelt, who desired the best possible information and advice for legislation to deal with the conditions in New York. The Governor did not sign the bill of last year because it provided for the immediate abatement of the Barren Island nuisance, which, with no substitution of a system of disposal, meant, in the words of the Governor, "pestilence to the City of New York." Dr. Doty told the Governor to-day that it would take at least twelve months to effect a change from the old to the proposed new system, and that time will be given.

PAY OF MUNICIPAL COURT JUDGES.

Senator Elsberg Explains His Reasons for Introducing the Bill.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Senator Elsberg to-day gave out a statement in relation to the bill introduced by him providing for an increase in the salaries of the Justices of the municipal courts of New York City, about which he says there has been some misunderstanding. He says:

"The bill introduced by me in the Senate providing for an increase in the salaries of the Justices of the municipal courts of New York City was introduced upon two distinct representations made to me, the truth of which I had no reason whatever to doubt.

"In the first place, I was informed that the Charter Commissioners had favored such an increase at the time of the enactment of the charter, and that the only reason why the change was not made originally was through an oversight.

"The second representation made to me was that a committee of the Justices had waited upon the Governor and that he had expressed himself as being impressed with the justice of a claim for an increase of salary.

"I propose to ascertain whether the statements made to me on the strength of which I introduced the bill were true, and with that end in view I have written to several of the Charter Commissioners. If those statements were not true, I shall let the bill die; but if they were, and the claims made by the Justices of that court are fair, I shall certainly do my best to have the bill passed."

COSTS IN MUNICIPAL COURTS.

Reduction Bill Advanced and Another Measure Passed in the Assembly.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—A somewhat spirited debate occurred in the Assembly to-day over Mr. Wilson's Municipal Court Fee bills for New York City, on the order of second reading. Both Mr. Hyman and Mr. Harburger of New York opposed the bill, which reduces the fees. The latter styled the measure as a "sneak" one, which would take away from the City of New York at least $150,000 annually.

The bill was advanced, as was also Mr. Wilson's bill permitting the attorneys to sign the summonses instead of the clerk.

Mr. Wilson's third bill affecting the municipal courts, which provides that $12 costs be allowed instead of $10 where the plaintiff's demand is $50 and the defendant fails to appear, was passed without any opposition.

Right of Way for Ambulances.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Assemblyman Honeck has introduced a bill which provides that the driver of an ambulance, when on duty, shall have the right of way, in any highway, street, or avenue, over any and all vehicles, and of whatever motive, except those carrying the United States mail.

More Time for Railroads.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Assemblyman Sands has introduced a bill extending the time for five years from Jan. 1, 1900, for the commencement of the construction and completion of any railroad other than an elevated railroad or street surface railroad, by any railroad company, which has already acquired not less than 10 per cent. of its right of way, or begun the construction or operation of any portion of its railroad.

BILLS PASSED.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—The Senate to-day passed the following bills:

Senator HUMPHREY—Amending the banking law so as to provide that the annual meetings and election of Directors of banks shall be held on the second Tuesday in January, or within ten days thereafter.

Senator KRUM—Revising the charter of the City of Gloversville.

Assembly.

Mr. HILLS—Authorizing and empowering the General Board of the Pan-American Exposition to erect the State Building at a cost of $100,000, to be taken from the lump sum of $800,000 already appropriated, which building thereafter is to become the property of the Buffalo Historical Society.

Mr. RYTENBERG—Authorizing the Department of Parks of New York City to appropriate $200,000 to equip and fit up the east extension and other parts of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Mr. GREEN—Providing that certain trial cases removed to the city courts of New York City shall be deemed preferred cases.

In the Assembly.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—In the Assembly to-day these bills were introduced:

Mr. BRYAN—Compelling fire insurance companies to pay the full amount of insurance named in their policies in case of total loss. The measure is designed to protect policy holders from the interposition of the appraising experts.

Mr. BENNY—Changing the statute of limitation in actions for malpractice, and reducing the time from three to two years.

Mr. KNIPP—Regulating the stringing of telegraph, telephone, and electric wires on poles. Such wires shall not be strung or suspended nearer than 12 inches from the centre of the poles. All wires so strung must be removed within one year.

Mr. PRICE—Amending the Building Code of New York City so as to provide that the front wall of any building now standing that extends ten inches upon any street, avenue, or public place, shall not be removed unless the city begins an action within one year after the passage of this act.

Other Senate Bills.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Among the bills introduced in the Senate to-day were the following:

Senator GRANEY—Prohibiting the sale of liquor within a half mile of a camp meeting ground at any time when religious services are being held.

Senator JOHNSON—Appropriating $5,000 for the erection of a monument to the One Hundred and Ninth Regiment, New York Volunteers, to be erected upon the battlefield of Spottsylvania, the battlefield of Petersburg, or in the National Cemetery at Petersburg.

Senator BRACKETT—Providing for the appointment of a Deputy Clerk for the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Third Department, by the Justices of the court, and fixing the salary of the Clerk at $3,500, and the Deputy Clerk at $1,500 per year.

Senator WILCOX—His bill of last year, also introduced in the Assembly by Mr. Fordyce, prohibiting the sale or manufacture of cigarettes.

Senator THORNTON—Providing that actions for malpractice against physicians shall be commenced within two years after the alleged commission of the act, instead of three years, as is now provided.

Primary Election Law Changes.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—N. Taylor Phillips, Democratic member from New York, to-day introduced a proposed amendment to the primary election law, providing for some minor changes. It extends the time during which an enrolled voter who changes his place of residence may enroll in the new district to the nineteenth day before the primary instead of the thirtieth day. It provides an official ballot for each of the two primary days, to be furnished the same as the ballots for an election. The ballot is also to be folded the same as in the case of a general election. The provision that all unvoted ballots are to be returned to the Inspector is stricken from the law, and a provision inserted that no person shall cast more than one ballot.

STATE TRUST COMPANY FIGHT.

Attorney for Abram Kling Asks the Attorney General to Revoke the Company's Charter.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Charles P. Bacon, attorney for Abram Kling, this afternoon filed with Attorney General Davies a petition for the revocation of the charter of the State Trust Company. He asks for the revocation on the allegations of fact set forth in his first letter to State Superintendent of Banks Kilburn, and on the report of Gen. Avery Andrews, now in the possession of Superintendent Kilburn. Mr. Davies said he would set a date for hearing.

The text of the petition, which was made public, repeats in detail the allegations contained in Mr. Bacon's letter to Superintendent of Banks Kilburn, which has been printed, and concludes as follows:

"Wherefore, I respectfully ask that you procure such a judgment dissolving the said State Trust Company, being a corporation created under the laws of this State, and forfeiting its corporate rights, privileges, and franchises, and that its Directors, managers, and officers be enjoined from interfering with its property and effects pending the dissolution of said corporation, and that a temporary receiver be appointed pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided."

TO AMEND FRANCHISE TAX LAW.

Funds for Administration and Powers for Ascertaining Values.

State Senator Ford, who returned to Albany on Monday, spoke before he left this city of certain amendments to the franchise tax law which are now being prepared. These amendments will be proposed for passage at the present session of the Legislature.

The State Tax Commission, according to Senator Ford, has had great difficulty in carrying out the provisions of the act. This difficulty was owing to the indefiniteness of the law as to the method of assessment to be followed, and to the impossibility of the commission carrying out the extra work required by the statute with the limited fund at its disposal.

"The Commissioners," said Mr. Ford, "had nothing to guide them in assessing the value of the 1,200 franchises affected by the law, and with the resources now at their disposal it will be impossible for them to perform this task. The $10,000 a year allowed for office expenses is entirely inadequate for what is required. The commission will have to employ men who have expert knowledge. We have, therefore, drawn up an amendment to the law, which, besides increasing the Commissioners' salaries—to which increase, as their work has been more than doubled, they are surely entitled—gives them an appropriation of $85,000 with which to carry on their work.

"With this money the commission will be able to employ a force of experts, and, fortified by their information, its position will be unassailable. Without these experts it runs the danger of making valuations so improper that a contesting corporation would have no difficulty in proving their absurdity.

"Another amendment being drawn will legalize the system of assessment which I have favored from the first—that is, to take the market value of a corporation's indebtedness, plus the market value of its stock, exclusive of the debts for current expenses, and deduct therefrom the market value of its tangible property. The result must be the value of its intangible property, or the value of its franchise. The commission's legal adviser believes such a method to be at present illegal, and this amendment will remove any doubts upon that point. The amendment does not require the commission to levy assessments on this basis. It merely makes it legal, if they see fit, to avail themselves of the method.

"A third amendment is to obviate a difficulty contained in Section 12 of the tax law. The latter provides that the commission, in assessing the capital stock of a corporation, shall deduct from the assessment the value of the real estate. But inasmuch as the franchise under the new law becomes real estate, the section might be construed to require the deduction of both the tangible and intangible property from the capital stock. In order to prevent this, the amendment will state specifically that in assessing capital stock only the tangible real estate—that is, the real estate that has always been taxed—shall be deducted."

President Thomas L. Feitner of the Board of Taxes and Assessments, said he did not believe in the system of mixing tangible with intangible property. The local Assessors should, Mr. Feitner said, assess the tangible property of a corporation, as is done now, while the State board should assess the intangible property, known as the franchise.

RAILROAD COMMISSION SITS.

Proposed Trolley Extension in Brooklyn—The Delaware Valley Road's Application.

The State Railroad Commission was in session at the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday, and expects to meet daily for the remainder of the week. The first matter considered was the application of the Brooklyn and Coney Island Railroad Company for permission to extend its tracks from Covert Avenue to Metropolitan Avenue, in Queens County, a distance of about half a mile. This would give the De Kalb Avenue line and its dependencies an opening to East Williamsburg and Maspeth. Consents from a very large percentage of the interested property holders were submitted to the Commissioners. Residents of East Williamsburg and Maspeth must now depend on the lines of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company.

J. C. Bergen of Bergen & Dykeman and Henry A. Meyer, President of the Germania Heights Real Estate Company, favored the application, and Mr. Meyer declared that not a single person in the district interested objected. Sheehan & Collin, representing the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, requested an adjournment on the ground that they had not been informed of the application. This statement was denied by Mr. Bergen, who asserted that the Brooklyn Rapid Transit people were notified a month ago.

The Commissioners next considered the application of the Delaware Valley and Kingston Railroad Company for permission to construct a railroad from Kingston to Port Jervis and thence to Lackawaxen, a distance of about eighty miles. This road is desired by the independent coal companies in Pennsylvania to give them an outlet to tide water and save them from alleged discrimination of rates in favor of the so-called Coal Trust.

John A. Garver and Thomas G. Shearman appeared in favor of the application, and were opposed by Tracy, Boardman & Platt and John F. Kerr, representing the New York, Ontario and Western Railroad Company and the Kingston and Rondout Railroad Company, by W. F. Dunning in behalf of the Port Jervis, Monticello and New York Railroad Company, and by George F. Brownell for the Erie Railroad Company.

Mr. Garver claimed for the petitioners the right to construct the proposed road along the line of the old Delaware and Hudson Canal. Mr. Garver contended that the road would not only be a good paying property, but that it would materially benefit coal consumers, as the coal could be carried at a saving of about 40 cents per ton.

William S. V. Thorne, President of the petitioning company and Vice President of the Pennsylvania Coal Company and the Erie and Wyoming Railroad Company, declared everything was in readiness for the construction of the proposed road. His fellow-Directors, he said, are James N. Jarvie, Frederic P. Olcott, Samuel Thorne, George G. Williams, James O. Bloss, Walton Ferguson, Samuel D. Coykendall, Edward L. Fuller, and John W. Sterling. He discussed at length the benefits to accrue to the public from the building of the road.

Charles E. Webster, a civil engineer, followed Mr. Thorne. He is the Chief Engineer of the Delaware Valley and Kingston Railroad, and said the proposed road could be built at a cost of $40,000 a mile. The witnesses will not be cross-examined until the petitioners close their case. The hearing will be continued this morning.

THIEF CHASE ON HOUSETOPS.

Caught by Police at Revolver Mouth After Entering a Flat.

A chase over several roofs and a hand-to-hand battle, in which revolvers and nightsticks were freely used, resulted last night in the capture of two thieves on top of the five-story building at 535 West Fifty-ninth Street. They proved to be John Geary, twenty-two years old, of 781 Tenth Avenue, and John Morley, twenty-four years old, of 539 West Fifty-ninth Street. Both are laborers and said to be first offenders.

Mrs. Ellen Barry, returning home, saw the men coming out of her apartments on the fourth floor. They had Mr. Barry's trousers, a coat, and a silver watch. She screamed, and the thieves ran to the roof. Policeman Joseph Higgins and Detectives White and Watt heard Mrs. Barry calling, and went in pursuit. They chased the men back and forth until finally they were corralled in a corner. Both showed fight. The police drew their revolvers, but the burglars would not surrender.

Closing in, the police used their revolvers as clubs, and the thieves were beaten. Geary received two large scalp wounds. His injuries were dressed at Roosevelt Hospital, and then he and his confederate were locked up.

THE NEW WATER SUPPLY BILL.

City Officials to Attend Hearing on Suffolk County Measure.

Deputy Commissioner of Water Supply James Moffett of Brooklyn, with Engineers Van Buren and De Verona, will go to Albany to-day to attend the hearing on the bill introduced by Senator McCarren, which is in effect the repeal of the Burr law, prohibiting the city authorities from entering into Suffolk County for an additional water supply.

Commissioner Moffett and his engineers will explain to the committee the urgent need of more water for Brooklyn, and will contend that water is being wasted in Suffolk County, which might easily be utilized for Brooklyn's needs.

The Molineux Juror Better.

Roland B. Molineux spent yesterday in the Tombs reading newspapers and magazines. Manheim Brown, the juror whose illness has delayed the trial, is doing well, although the cold weather of the last few days has made his recovery slower. He said last night that he would be in court to-morrow.

Endorsed by Musicians.

THE PIANOLA

Is an instrument by means of which any one can play the piano.

The Pianola is bringing into use thousands of pianos that have been silent for many years.

It is making players of people who, lacking musical training, had never expected to experience the pleasure of producing music for themselves.

It is increasing the repertoire of amateur and professional pianists by making the entire literature of the piano instantly available without study and without practice.

The Pianola looks like a small cabinet. It has small felt-covered fingers that rest on the keys of the piano and, operated by pneumatic power, strike the keys with a pliant, yielding and remarkably sympathetic touch that is almost identical with that of the human fingers.

When not in use the Pianola may be easily rolled away from the piano and moved to another part of the room.

The Pianola can be used in connection with any piano and does not in any way mar or disfigure the instrument. It can be easily and quickly adjusted by any one.

The action of the Pianola is so simple that even a child can readily learn to play it; at the same time it is capable of so much expression that its greatest admirers are those who best understand and appreciate good music.

PRICE $250.

Can be bought by instalments if desired.

It is a significant fact that the Pianola is the only piano player which has received the endorsement of musicians.

EMIL SAUER orders two more Pianolas in a letter just received from him in Germany, and says:

"The instrument works in every respect absolutely perfect, and I am by this sensational and epoch-making invention more delighted than ever."

THE AEOLIAN COMPANY, 18 West 23d Street.

Newark Representatives, LAUTER CO., 657-659 Broad St.

The Pianola provides a source of pleasure for every one, whether he be novice or skilled musician.

It overcomes the difficulties of the unskilled by supplying the necessary technic to play any piece.

It satisfies the artistic demands of the musically cultured by allowing the player instantaneous control of the expression.

The claims made for the Pianola are marvelous—so also are the endorsements it has received from the great artists.

Emil Sauer has recently purchased two more Pianolas for friends in Germany. Why?

Come and hear the Pianola and judge for yourself.

STATE SAVINGS BANKS

Condition of Savings Institutions in New York and Vicinity on Jan. 1, 1900.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—A tabulation of the statements of the savings banks of New York and the adjacent counties for the year ended Dec. 31, 1899, shows the following percentages of increase in the amount due to depositors and in the total surplus:

	Due Depositors.	Surplus.
New York County	.07	.04
Kings County	.02	.01
Westchester County	.11	.06

In every instance the savings banks of New York, Westchester, and the Long Island counties show increases in the amounts due to depositors in sums ranging from $36,000 in the East New York Savings Bank of Brooklyn to $4,283,000 in the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank of New York. The larger of the banks of Manhattan Borough have increases of over $1,000,000; the Bank for Savings, the New York, and the Dry Dock, each over $2,000,000; the Seamen's and the Greenwich, over $3,000,000 each, and the German, $4,096,000. Of the Brooklyn banks, the Williamsburg leads in the increase in amount due to depositors by gaining $3,200,000. Three others, the German, the Dime, and the Brooklyn, gained over $1,000,000 each. The Peekskill led the Westchester County banks with an amount greater by $700,000 than a year ago.

An evidence of better times is shown in an increase in deposits over those of 1898 in all the banks of the group under discussion but two, the Bowery and the Bank for Savings. In two instances the deposits for the year exceeded the total resources of the banks in 1898. These were the Italian of New York, whose deposits were $256,676, being $49,000 greater than its total resources at the close of 1898, and the Washington of New York, which received in deposits $28,147, exceeding by $10,000 its total resources in 1898.

Only three savings banks in New York and one each in Queens, Kings, and Suffolk Counties had greater amounts withdrawn during 1899 than were received for deposit. The New York banks were the Bowery, the Bank for Savings, and the Institution for the Savings of Merchants' Clerks. The Kings County bank was the Brooklyn; the Queens, the College Point, and the Suffolk, the Southold. The German Savings Bank of New York has the distinction of receiving the largest excess in deposits over withdrawals, the amount being $2,168,000.

The East River Savings Bank of New York has the distinction of having the largest average deposits, the amount being $908.02. The smallest is that of the Washington of New York, a new bank, with an average of $72.52. The savings banks of Manhattan, Long Island, and Westchester make an excellent exhibit of their condition and of their transactions during 1899, as will be shown by the appended tables:

New York County.	Jan. 1, 1900.—Total Resources.	Due Depositors.	Surplus.	Average of Each Deposit.	During Year 1899.—Amount Deposited.	Amount Withdrawn.

THE NEW BASEBALL CIRCUIT.

Seven Cities Are Chosen, and It Seems Likely that New York Will Be Added.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 30.—The work of placing the new American Association of Baseball Clubs on a firm and permanent foundation was begun here to-day. Fair progress was made and thus far everything is apparently moving along smoothly. Seven-eighths of the circuit was laid out, and the eighth city will probably be selected to-morrow. There is a possibility, however, that the circuit may again be recast before it is finally adopted. The circuit as made up to-day includes Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore in the East and Chicago, Detroit, Milwaukee, and St. Louis in the West. Applications from Providence and New York have been received, and one of these cities, it is believed, will surely be selected. Representatives from Washington are here, but that city has not yet knocked at the door for admission.

Outside of the making up of the circuit, one of the most important things done at the meeting was the adoption of a resolution that each city which is granted a franchise must deposit $5,000 as a guarantee that the club is acting in good faith.

A well-known baseball man representing New York was here yesterday as the representative of W. H. Jacobs, a real estate man of New York. After a conference with Mr. Quin he departed, and to-day wired the American Association President that everything in New York would be in good shape within twenty-four hours. As only three cities were selected for the circuit in the East, it is evident that the association is waiting on New Yorkers. The Providence delegation is here merely to look over the field. Although it put forth Providence's claims, it is understood that the Rhode Island men are not authorized to go into the new organization without a further conference with the backers at home.

ABEEL TROPHY COMPETITION.

Shooting Under Company D's Challenge at Seventh's Armory.

Competition for the Abeel Trophy commenced last night at the Seventh Regiment Armory. The teams are composed of ten men each, and several teams from a company may shoot in this match.

The conditions of the shooting forbid sighting shots, and impose a time limit of eighteen minutes for each team, counting from the call of "Ready!" Seven shots standing and seven prone complete an individual score.

The trophy is now held by Company B, and was won in competition by the challenge of Company D. Eleven teams shot last night, and about as many more will contest to-night. The scores of the teams follow:

		200 Yards.	500 Yards.	Total.

Hockey League Tournament.

The New York Athletic Club and Naval Reserve teams met last night in the Amateur Hockey League championship tournament, at the St. Nicholas Skating Rink. A slow and uninteresting game was played, the New York Athletic Club team winning by a score of 6 goals to 1.

Golf at Kissimmee.

Special to The New York Times.

KISSIMMEE, Fla., Jan. 30.—The golf at Kissimmee to-day was an exhibition that could not be beaten by even a Vardon. It was simply a case of which of the trio holed out first on the greens. Low won first money in the three-ball medal play. He made the firsts eighteen holes in sixty-nine, and the second in seventy-four, making a total of 143. Willie Smith came in for second prize, with a total of 147, and Harry Rawlins captured the third prize, with 148.

Golf Play at St. Augustine.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., Jan. 30.—Robert Watson and Clayton Dixon came together in the finals in the tournament on the Country Club links this afternoon and played the closest eighteen-hole game of the season. To the surprise of many Dixon won by 1 up. At the eighteenth hole Dixon made a long and beautiful put, taking the hole, match, and cup. In the semi-finals Watson beat Walker 3 up and 2 to play, and Dixon beat Schoff 1 up. In the second eight finals Palmer beat Seagears 1 up.

THE POULTRY SHOW OPENS

Experts from Abroad Look Over Exhibits at the Garden.

Fine Displays of Game Birds and Pheasants—Other Features to Interest the Visitor.

Madison Square Garden echoed yesterday with the intricate harmonies of the voices of nearly 4,000 fowl, and not until the electric lights were turned out was the good night song of the birds stilled. The vast symphony will continue again to-day and throughouthe the week. Yesterday was the first day of the eleventh annual exhibit of the New York Poultry and Pigeon Association, which this year is larger both in point of numbers and general excellence of the exhibits than on any previous year.

Among the hundreds of visitors who thronged the aisles between the specimens on exhibition were noticed nearly all of the prominent fanciers in the country, as well as a score or more experts from Europe, who were taking notes of the various types shown and who will make offers before the week is out for many of the finest exhibits. This coterie is present every year, and some of the choice birds are exported. In return American buyers bring over some of the best of the European types. The result is that to win a blue ribbon in any of the classes becomes harder each succeeding year.

The exhibit that attracted the greatest amount of attention yesterday was that of black-breasted red game bantams, and the principal winners were Francis P. Magoun, the banker, and Henry O. Havemeyer, Jr., and his brother, T. A. Havemeyer, Jr. In the cockerel class of this fowl the judging was not up to the average. The winner of the blue ribbon gets up on his toes when reaching, and his footfold is very shaky. He is not as good in color either as one or two of Magoun's or Havemeyer's lot. The class contains the best lot ever exhibited in this country, and the winner of the champion class last year in England caught the judge's eye as only good enough for a highly commended ribbon.

The Mountainside Farm (Havemeyer's) exhibits include sixty-three bantams and forty pigeons in addition to the display on the main floor. They are in charge of John Glasgow.

FINE DISPLAY OF PHEASANTS.

One of the most important and attractive exhibits in the show is the display of pheasants made by Homer Davenport of Roselle, N. J. The exhibit is valued by him at about $3,000. The cages are located in the centre of the main floor, near Madison Avenue, and the birds on exhibition include:

Impeyans; Temmincks Tragopaus and Cabots Tragopaus, from the Himalaya Mountains; peacock pheasants, from Asia; Manchurian or Eard pheasants, Thibet; Elliols, Thibet; English; Torguatus, China; Reeve's, Japan; Mellanotus, (the hill pheasant,) Himalayas; lineated, Asia; silver and Swanhoes, China and Japan; golden, China; Lady Amherst, Japan; hybrid, (cross between golden and Lady Amherst;) upland New Zealand geese and Mandarin ducks from Japan.

The Impeyans, Tragopaus, Manchurian, Mellanotus, and peacock pheasants were never exhibited in any poultry show before.

Another feature is the exhibit of the incubators and breeders, in which are hundreds of eggs that are constantly being hatched. This department is of especial interest to the children visitors, who watch the eggs through the glass covers, and at the slightest movement call the attention of their companions to the little straggly head that presently appears. This is followed by the thin, ungainly body of the chick, whose "mother was an oil stove." The incubators this year show some new features, principal among which is a method of regulating the temperature, which makes the birds hardier.

The show opened officially at 9 o'clock, but until long after midday the attendants were putting the exhibits in shape. The crowd of spectators was small, and not until well into the afternoon did the aisles fill up.

The show is arranged much the same as last year, and the main and raised galleries as used in the bicycle show remain and are used for the showing of pigeons on the Twenty-sixth Street side and the bantams on the Twenty-seventh Street side. The larger fowl are placed on the main floor in cages, those on the centre aisle being reserved for the larger cages and fancy fowl.

FEATURES OF THE SHOW.

The largest individual poultry exhibitor is the Fisher's Island Farm, which has entered sixty-seven birds in the various classes. Noticeable features of their exhibit are big Plymouth Rocks, champion "White Cloud," a two-thousand-dollar bird of that variety; barbed Plymouth Rocks, Minorcas, Wyandottes, and turkeys. An exhibit of ducks by A. J. Hallock of Atlantic Farm, Speonk, L. I., shows the Pekin duck in perfection. The exhibit also includes several "Indian Runners," a breed that is fast becoming a favorite. There is also several exhibits of wild and tame turkeys, and the showing of geese is larger than ever before.

The pigeon exhibit is greatly in excess of that of last year, and the pouters, tumblers, and other fancy breeds strut about in magnificent style. The exhibition yards, along the Twenty-seventh Street side of the arena, each containing five birds, are also attractive, and each cage forms a practical start for a poultry yard.

The usual array of rabbits and cavies (guinea pigs) is placed at the Fourth Avenue end, as is also the exhibit of long and short haired cats. These features were not complete yesterday. There are the usual freaks among the birds, the most remarkable being a four-footed pigeon.

Among the classes of pigeons, the pouters, carriers, tumblers, Jacobins, magpies, and fantails lead in point of numbers. The owl class is a large one, and the Oriental Frill, Dragon, Turbit, Trumpeter, and Homer classes are full.

Conran Brothers' exhibit of dressed poultry, which was a new feature of last year's show, is repeated again on a larger scale this year. The dressed fowl come from all parts of the country and are changed daily. The exhibition of eggs is also an interesting one.

A number of breeders' clubs are scheduled to meet during the week. Those arranged for to-day are the Water Fowl Club, at 6 o'clock, and the American Exhibition Game and Bantam Club, at 7:30.

The judges were busy during the afternoon, and many ribbons were awarded. The largest winners yesterday were McNeil & Oke.

THE CHARGE WAS DISMISSED.

Alleged Bucket Shop Operators Released by Magistrate Olmsted.

The examination in the case of Julius Price, Henry Allen, and Samuel Goodman, arrested by Capt. Killilea and detectives from the Old Slip Station on the charge of conducting a bucket shop at 51 New Street, who were arraigned before Magistrate Olmsted, in the Centre Street Police Court, was concluded yesterday before that Magistrate, sitting in Jefferson Market Police Court.

The only testimony offered by the prosecution was that given by Detective Walsh, who said that he had bought a "privilege" from Price on five shares of Brooklyn Rapid Transit, paying $5 and receiving a contract. On motion of Vernon M. Davis, counsel for the accused, Magistrate Olmsted dismissed the charge, as it had not been shown that the defendants were not in a position to deliver the stock when called upon to do so.

Proposed City Bond Issues.

Resolutions providing for the authorization of bond issues aggregating $5,155,030.63 were introduced in the Board of Aldermen yesterday and referred to the Committee on Finance. The proposed bond issues are for the following purposes: For the improvement of Riverside Drive, $20,000; for change of grade damages, $250,000; for streets and highways, $2,880,765; for replenishing the fund for street and park openings, $207,520; for Little Italy Park, $365,250; for the new East River bridge, $500,000; for the construction of a bridge over Newtown Creek at Vernon Avenue, $644,495.63; for the sewer relief fund, $167,000; for a steel dump for the Street Cleaning Department, $100,000. Some of these resolutions were before the Municipal Assembly last year, but failed to obtain the necessary number of votes.

Big Railroad Mortgage Canceled.

The New York, Ontario and Western Railroad Company satisfied of record yesterday its mortgage for $10,000,000 made in April, 1889, in favor of the Mercantile Trust Company. The mortgage, carrying interest at 5 per cent., was made to retire an issue of 6 per cent. first mortgage gold bonds, and to complete and operate the road and its leased lines.

FINANCIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Dividends have been declared by the Bank of the Manhattan Company and the Jefferson and Clearfield Coal and Iron Company.

Coupons will be paid on and after Feb. 1 on certain bonds of the Brooklyn Ferry Company of New York, and the Kansas City and Pacific Railroad Company.

The annual report and semi-centennial statement of the Aetna Life Insurance Company of Hartford shows gains in every department of that institution. In the premium income there was an increase of $701,948, the premium receipts for the year being $7,123,652. Receipts from interest and rents amounted to $2,395,073, which more than paid the death claims, amounting to $2,341,918. The gain in accident insurance in force was $25,946,350, and the assets were increased $2,623,279. On Jan. 1 the outstanding insurance of the company amounted to $168,449,790 in life, endowment, and term policies, and $135,807,470 in accident and health insurance. The gain in policy holders during 1899 was 17,998. In addition to the reserve fund required by the State laws a special reserve of $1,644,000 has been added. The policies also have been liberalized without an advance in premium rates.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS.

The annual meeting and dinner of the Once a Year Club of Insurance Journalists will be held at Shanley's, Feb. 13.

Commissioner Stevens of the Michigan Insurance Department has authorized the Pittsburg Fire Insurance Company of Pennsylvania to do business in that State.

The State Insurance Department is enforcing the retaliatory law against Georgia companies in regard to outside reinsurance, because of the position of the Georgia authorities in not permitting companies of other States to take credit in their annual statements for insurance effected in companies not doing business in Georgia.

A report received from Philadelphia by two insurance journals yesterday to the effect that the Aachen and Munich Insurance Company of Germany had under consideration a proposition to retire from that city was authoritatively denied by Weed & Kennedy, United States managers of that company.

The Brokerage Committee of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange held its last January meeting yesterday. The work of revising the list of licensed brokers, which now contains over 9,000 names, was continued. In accordance with the rotation rule of the Exchange, Chairman William H. Ogden retires to-morrow from the membership of the committee.

The General Fire Insurance Committee of Twenty-five met yesterday and effected an organization. It was decided to pursue the policy of holding secret sessions, which was followed a year ago by the Committee of Fifteen, which drafted the plan and agreement of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange. The one remedy for the existing conditions of fire underwriting, which it is expected that the committee will formulate, is some effectual method of suggesting a general advance in fire insurance rates, particularly in the Eastern States, it being stated that rates in the West and South are as a general rule from 50 to 75 per cent. higher than in the East. This discrepancy is believed to be partly due to the better means of fire protection in this section of the United States.

of the end of the fiscal year, even if no further increases be shown in the remaining six months.

LOCAL TRACTION STOCKS.

All the local traction stocks were strong yesterday on the belief that the companies were in some way or other identified with the tunnel scheme, and on further talk of consolidation. Brooklyn Rapid Transit advanced 1⅞ points, Manhattan 1⅛, Metropolitan and Third Avenue 1 each. Chairman of Brooklyn Rapid Transit, President H. H. Potter of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois, who was last week made a director of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit, said: "I do not know or care what the tunnel will do, marketwise, but I do recognize that the interests in the property purchased reserve and build it up. The system is an all-important one, and its possibilities cannot be too highly appreciated. Personally, I regard Brooklyn Rapid Transit as one of the most valuable properties in the State. Its growth must be rapid and its development marked. I am a large holder of the stock, for investment."

DIVIDEND INCREASED.

It was rather a remarkable fact that in a generally advancing market the stock of Erie, Rochester and Pittsburg yesterday declined 2 points on dealings of only 200 shares, though during the day the company declared a dividend on its preferred stock of 2 per cent. Last year in the entire year the company paid only 2 per cent. The earnings of the road are said to be steadily increasing, and recent additions and extensions have materially benefited it.

LACKAWANNA'S RISE.

Lackawanna stock, which somewhat singularly had not been traded in since Friday last, yesterday made a sensational net advance of 5 points on sales of less than 3,000 shares. The opening, however, gave no indication of what was to follow during the day, but rather led to the belief that a raid on the stock was begun, the quotation marking a decline of 1½ points, as compared with Friday's close. It speedily advanced on good buying, and soon the figure 200 was reached, at which point it closed. Officials of the company speak very hopefully of the condition and the business of the road.

BURLINGTON'S EARNINGS.

The December statement of earnings of Burlington showed a falling off in the net earnings, as compared with the previous year, of $17,000. This decline, it was pointed out, was due not to any loss of business, the gross earnings increasing $145,700, but to the use, of an increase in operating expenses of $163,400. The Street took kindly to this view of the matter, with the result that on sales of 14,000 shares the stock advanced 1⅝ points.

PANHANDLE'S DECLINE.

In the declining stocks, Panhandle yesterday was easily the feature, the quotation, on sales of scarcely more than 4,500 shares, marking at one time a loss of 10 points. Later it rallied somewhat, and closed for the day at a net decline of 7 points. Interests identified with the stock said that the decline was due to a bear raid.

TALKING OF A DIVIDEND.

The Reading issues, more particularly the first preferred, yesterday showed signs of substantial strength on inside buying and reports that a dividend would shortly be declared out of the increased earnings of the company. The first prefered advanced 3¾ points and the second preferred 1.

DEBIT BALANCES DECREASE.

The Sub-Treasury continues a debtor to the Clearing House, though not for so large an amount as at this time last week, when the debit balances were running up to more than $1,000,000 a day. On Monday of this week the figures were $960,000, while yesterday they were $660,000—a gain to the banks in the two days of $1,620,000. It is explained that the smaller balances are due to the fact that the payments on account of pensions have quite generally been met.

It is expected that in a short time the order of Secretary Gage allowing deposits of internal revenue collections in the banks, instead of in the Sub-Treasury, will be revoked.

MORE GOLD EXPORT TALK.

Again yesterday, because of the activity in the sterling market, there was further talk of the probability of gold exports, though it was difficult to get any definite expression of opinion from foreign exchange brokers as to the situation. Nor did all opinions agree. At the office of Zimmerman & Forshay it was said that exports seemed quite likely at any time now, while at Lazard Freres the opinion was expressed that there was no likelihood of any exports.

A gentleman whose authority in financial matters is unquestioned said that if the rate moved up another one-half of 1 per cent., or perhaps even one-fourth, exports were sure to follow. In any event he declared it certain that when the new British war loan was called for exports would then surely begin. At one time yesterday the demand rate touched $4.87⅝.

SPECIAL MEETING CALLED.

A special meeting of the Governing Committee of the Stock Exchange will be held this afternoon at the request of the Listing Committee to consider some recommendations made by that committee. It is said that among these recommendations will be one to list $3,500,000 of first consolidated mortgage 6 per cent. bonds of the Colorado Coal and Iron Company. These bonds mature on Feb. 1, 1900, but are being extended to 1902.

SUBSCRIPTION EFFECTIVE.

It is announced by the Great Northern Railway Company that the subscription to the proposed issue of $9,000,000 additional stock for the purpose of acquiring the Eastern Railway Company of Minnesota and the Willmar and Sioux Falls Railway Company is now effective, holders of more than 75 per cent. of the Great Northern's out standing stock having filed their subscriptions to the new stock of their assignments of right to make such subscriptions. SECURITIES AT AUCTION.

Richard V. Harnett & Co. sold the following securities at auction at the New York Real Estate Salesroom, 111 Broadway, yesterday:

11,542 shares, in pool of 108,000 shares, Consolidated Gold Fields of Mexico, Limited, £1 each, $100 lot.

NEWS OF THE EXCHANGES.

Cotton developed exceptional strength yesterday in the face of large receipts. The continued strong and active demand for spot cotton in the South and good Liverpool cables, combined with the fact that the increased receipts had been discounted to a certain extent, gave the market its strength. Cotton opened 2 points up, and steadily improved, closing with a net gain of from 6 to 7 points. The receipts for the day amounted to 48,766 bales, as against 30,622 of a week previous, and 55,036 of a year previous.

While this is a good figure, the trade considers that it represents to a particularly large extent cotton which has already been sold and is on the way to its destination, and as such its influence in affecting market conditions is largely wiped out. Furthermore, even though the receipts have been good in the last two weeks, the total of receipts this year still indicates a small crop movement, and so bears out, up to date, certain bullish estimates which have been published before. Transactions on the Cotton Exchange yesterday amounted to about 300,000 bales.

The coffee market opened unchanged to 15 points better, and was steady most of the day, easing off at the close. Coffee was finally quoted unchanged to 5 points better than at Monday's close. Trading was moderate, aggregating some 27,000 bags.

Wheat was a lamentble disappointment to bullish speculators. Chicago prices opened ½ cent lower, and the New York market declined in sympathy. There was an early scramble on the Produce Exchange to effect sales. The market closed near bottom prices, with a net loss of nearly a cent and a half. The lack of export buying has induced the belief that the inability of the Argentine Republic to contribute to the needs of Europe, because of the presence of bubonic plague at Rosario, has been exaggerated. Corn and oats were steady and dull.

Wheat Drops in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—Persistent liquidation, animated by disappointing cables, a report that La Plata offered Liverpool wheat under America, and the assertion that the plague in Argentine would not materially curtail exports from that country, turned the scale against the wheat bulls to-day, May closing 1½@1⅝c. under yesterday.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

In the market for outside securities yesterday trading was broader and more active than it has been on any day in two weeks or more. Transactions were not limited to a few stocks, but extended to a fairly large number of issues, several of which supplied several thousand shares to the day's total. The market was also generally strong, and the number of advances much exceeded the declines. Some indications were had pointing to a considerable revival of interest in the outside market, which for some time past has been almost entirely neglected by the general public. Among the industrials were several that showed a good deal of strength, and some of these, including Distilling of America, were traded in to an amount much larger than has been the rule of late.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA common sold from 6 up to 6⅛, and the preferred stock from 20½ to 21. Both issues closed with net gains of about half a point. Transactions aggregated about 3,500 shares. The buying was supposed to be in anticipation of a favorable report being given by the committee which is now engaged in examining the condition of the company's affairs. It has not yet been learned when the report will be ready, and no intimations as to its probable character have been had during the last few days. Recent rumors in regard to the matter were to the effect that the report would show that a fairly large dividend was being earned on the common stock, in addition to the dividend on the preferred.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS continued in demand, but very little stock was offered, and trading in the common stock, the most active issue, was limited to less than 1,000 shares. It sold between 26 and 26½, and closed unchanged at 26 bid. It is said that an effort is being made to procure control of the company by purchases of stock in the open market, and intimations are heard of the existence of two factions among the larger stockholders, both of which are anxious to have control of the company. These, however, are heard in no very definite shape, and as far as appears the condition of the New Amsterdam Gas Company, so far as its relations to other local gas companies are concerned, remains unchanged. The strength of the stock, however is taken as an indications that developments of a favorable character are likely to occur in the very near future. Neither the preferred stock nor the bonds showed any activity, and there was little or no change in the price of either.

BAY STATE GAS was traded in to the extent of a number of thousands of shares from 2 up to 2¼. It showed no net change for the day, closing at 2 bid. Business in the stock was of much the same character as on the past several days, the principal feature of the trading being the number of brokers who have recently become active in the stock. Confidence in an advance in Bay State Gas seems general, but no very substantial reasons are given for these predictions.

STANDARD OIL was quiet, and not as strong as it had been for many days. It sold to the extent of only about fifty shares, and closed 1 point lower, at 515 bid.

CAST IRON PIPE preferred was unusually active, but the figures at which transactions were made were somewhat below those which have prevailed recently. Fifteen hundred shares changed hands at 40, and the issue ended the day at 40 bid for 500 shares.

AMERICAN CHICLE preferred sold to the extent of 400 shares at 84, an advance of 4 points over the previous sale, made on Monday. It closed at 85 bid. There was no trading in the common stock.

SLOSS SHEFFIELD common sold at 29½, and the preferred at 68¾ and 68⅞. Each of the transactions was in the amount of 100 shares.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 30.—Boston's particular specialties were as dull as ever, but the trading in Sugar, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, and Federal Steel increased considerably and made up a good aggregate of business. Perhaps mining stocks were ignored more than ever; it certainly seemed so, although price changes were slight. Boston and Montana was 2 better, at 268, and Cochiti was up ⅜, at 13, closing at 12⅝. Mohawk rallied ⅛ to 12½, and Arcadian was off ⅛ at 16. Utah gained ⅝, to 25¾. The market was almost buoyant on final dealings, with brisk business in Sugar and Chicago, Burlington and Quincy. Massachusetts Mining rose 1, to 6½. Gas and Coke 5s were off 1, at 71.

At the local Clearing House 4 per cent. was again the quoted rate, although the business doing was still nominal. New York funds sold at par and 5c premium.

PANIC AT A FLAT FIRE.

Blaze Causes Stampede of 123 Persons, Who Escape with Bruises.

Panic, with narrow escapes from disaster, was caused yesterday by a small fire in the five-story flat house at 332 East One Hundred and Fourteenth Street, one of the most crowded tenements in Harlem. Twenty-three families, numbering about 125 persons, live in the building.

The fire started late in the afternoon from some unknown cause in apartments on the third floor occupied by Mrs. Rappina Martinetti. It was discovered by some tenants, who ran screaming into the street. In an instant every flat in the building began to pour its frightened occupants into the single hallway. The uproar made each individual more frantic in his effort to escape, and the crowd, thickening as the lower staircases were reached, was too great for the narrow corridors and stairs. The people fairly scrambled over one another, each echoing the others' cries of "fire."

All finally reached the street, however, with no more serious injuries than bruises resulting from the crush. The fire was confined to the third floor, where it damaged Mr. Martinetti's furniture to the extent of $100 and the building $400.

ITALIAN KILLS HIS FRIEND.

Attacks Him with an Axe While He Is Lying Asleep.

Francisco Mariano, an Italian, forty-four years old, crushed the skull of his friend Eugenio Lucciani with an axe yesterday afternoon, hacked the body about the face and chest, beat it with a chair, an iron poker, and other household articles, and then began to smash the furniture and windows of their rooms, on the fourth floor of the tenement house at 329 West Sixty-ninth Street. The murder was witnessed by Giuseppi Ducchi, the six-year-old son of George Ducchi, who was passing the open door of the room at the time. The Ducchis live on the fifth floor of the building.

The boy, who was transfixed for a time at the sight, finally gave the alarm. The whole house was aroused, and Mariano was arrested, after a struggle, by Policeman Lerimer of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station. When asked why he killed Lucciani, Mariano said: "He was asleep. I'm boss there."

Ducchi boy said Lucciani was lying on a sofa when struck by Mariano. The murderer was sent by Magistrate Mott to the Coroner, who committed him to the Tombs.

The two men have lived in the rooms where the murder occurred for three years, and were supposed to be fast friends. Mariano had been employed as a furnace tender in private houses, and Lucciani, who was twenty-eight years old, had worked for the contractors in charge of the work on the Third Avenue Railroad. It is thought Mariano suddenly went insane, his appearance after his arrest bearing out this supposition.

Chamber of Commerce Portraits.

The Chamber of Commerce has a number of valuable portraits being prepared for it, as additions to its gallery of prominent members This gallery is constantly being increased. The portrait of Henry B. Hyde was one of the latest. It was learned yesterday that this month the Chamber has received an oil painting, life-size, of the late Charles Butler, who died Dec. 15, 1897, in his ninety-sixth year. He was a member of the Chamber from 1861 until his death, and for years President of the University of New York, to which he gave largely. The portrait, which represents Mr. Butler in a frock coat, showing him about half length, was painted by his nephew, Howard Russell Butler. It was the gift to the Chamber of his daughter, Miss Emily O. Butler.

Obliged to Find New Quarters.

The Citizens' Progressive League, an association of the lower east side organized to assist respectable persons who are eligible to citizenship to obtain the suffrage, and for mutual aid, has been compelled to move from its former quarters, at 271 East Houston Street, according to its President, S. Schurr, because of the character of certain occupants of one of the tenements above them. The association has gone to 107 Forsyth Street. Mr. Schurr says he reported the case to President Clark of the Police Department, who referred his complaint to Capt. Herlihy of the Eldridge Street Station. The Captain, Mr. Schurr says, told him on three occasions that he would clean the objectionable quarters out, but he failed to do so. The association proposes to carry on a vigorous fight against vice on the east side.

Suit Over Carey Estate.

Referee Daniel P. Ingraham has filed his report in the Supreme Court requiring Margaret L. Zborowski to make new deeds to Astor Arthur Carey of a number of parcels of realty in this city, because of defective deeds heretofore given by her. Should she decline the Sheriff is to execute the deeds. The plaintiff, defendant, and Henry R. A. Carey had a third interest in the property, and agreed to divide it so that each would have an equal part. Mrs. Zborowski is to be served with a copy of the decree at the Villa Adelaide, Pres Roquebrum, Alpes Maritimes, France, where she lives.

Will Not Succeed Russell Sage.

Oliver S. Carter, President of the National Bank of the Republic, denied yesterday the report that he might succeed Russell Sage as President of the Standard Gas Light Company. He said: "I would not accept the Presidency of the gas company under any conditions. It is true that several stockholders were kind enough to suggest my name for that place, but I declined at the outset, and nothing can induce me to change my mind."

Grand Union Hotel Lease Renewed.

Simeon Ford and Samuel T. Shaw have renewed for a term of twenty years their lease on that part of the Grand Union Hotel running through from Forty-first to Forty-second Street, 130 feet east of Park Avenue. The lessor is Almy G. Gallatin, and the annual rental $10,000.

NINTH DISTRICT FACTIONS

Anti-Sheehan Men Decide to Contest in the Primaries.

Goodwin Followers and Those of the Leader Indulge in Recriminations —Meeting of Seymour Club.

The factional troubles in the Tammany organization in the Ninth Assembly District, which were especially notable in the ante-election campaign last Fall, threaten to break forth again before the primaries next month. At a meeting of the Horatio Seymour Club, the anti-Sheehan organization of the district, held last week, it was decided to make a contest for supremacy at the polls in March and to try to name candidates for the Congress District Convention, to be held to select delegates to the National Convention, and thus to make a fight for the control of the State Convention delegates at the Fall primaries.

At the primaries held in October last, the Sheehan faction was victorious by about 300 plurality. When election day came around, the Democratic ticket, which was nominated by the Sheehan men, received a far smaller plurality than was usual in the district and the Goodwin partisans then claimed that the diminution in the Democratic vote was due to the lack of interest in the local nominees, and to the prevalent apathy toward the party's nominees.

In spite of that Mr. Goodwin's friends asserted that they had supported the ticket, and the onus for the depletion of the majority was placed upon the Sheehan men.

Since that time, however, the partisans of Mr. Goodwin have claimed that the Sheehan men "cut" the ticket in order to cast the burden of proof upon them, and that they were practically unanimous in favor of the party nominees. On the other hand, Mr. Sheehan's friends have stated that the small majority accorded to the Democratic candidates was due to the Goodwin men's opposition, that hundreds of Democrats had cut the ticket, and that the apathy noticeable was due to the refusal of the Goodwin people to accept the nominees selected at the party primaries.

Mr. Sheehan, while declining personally to discuss the matter, intimated that "orders had been given" to make another attack on him at the Spring primaries, and that the machinery of the City Government had been loaned to his adversaries. He was unwilling to discuss the probable result of such an attack, but he felt that the men who had supported him last Fall would not in any emergency desert him.

Mr. Goodwin, when asked about the coming conflict, said that the matter had received the careful attention of himself and his friends, and had been decided upon only after a long debate as to its expediency. "The result of the late primaries," said Mr. Goodwin, "left a great deal to be desired in the way of bringing out the Democratic vote. Mr. Sheehan, in his opposition to the expressed will of the organization, persisted in the value of his personal influence with the assistance of a large amount of money. When the Democrats of New York realize that their vote in that district fell off by over a thousand on election day they will perceive that Mr. Sheehan is not the person that he once was to draw out the voting strength of the district. We do not claim anything beyond the fact that those of the Democrats who favor the policy of the Executive Committee are desirous of a change in the leadership, and that such a change is absolutely necessary at the inception of a National campaign.

"Mr. Sheehan, in an off year, was unable to draw the normal strength of the district, there appears to be no reason why a change in the leadership should not come at this time. A change would have been effected last Fall but for the expenditure of large sums of money by our opponents, and we hold that Tammany men cannot always be influenced by this consideration.

"At any rate, we are willing to try to make the change, and we hope to bring it about by showing the difference between moral pressure and that of money. If the coming fight does not result in our favor, we shall make another next Fall; and under any circumstances we are anxious to show to the people of the district the difference between loyalty to the organization and desire to maintain personal supremacy."

PRODUCE EXCHANGE FUND.

Test Case Action Begun Against Amendment to Gratuity System —Injunction Granted.

There is a ferment of excitement among the older members of the Produce Exchange who are subscribers to the Gratuity Fund over an amendment that was recently adopted greatly curtailing the income of the fund, and a suit was yesterday begun in the Supreme Court to nullify the amendment.

The suit is in the nature of a test case, brought by Consider Parish, one of the original subscribers to the fund, and his wife and daughter, who are his beneficiaries, are made parties to the suit. Mr. Parish's lawyers are Charles H. Brush and John J. Crawford o. 30 Broad Street.

Mr. Crawford said last evening that out of the 3,000 members some 1,100 are subscribers to the Gratuity Fund. These are dissatisfied with the amendment, and they selected Mr. Parish to bring the suit. The Gratuity Fund, he said, is a species of mutual insurance.

Mr. Crawford continued: "On Jan. 22, at a meeting of the Produce Exchange, it was voted to change the by-laws under which this plan for providing for the families of deceased members was regulated, and many of the older members who have been paying assessments for several years, are greatly much opposed to the amendment, because it will reduce the amount which their beneficiaries would receive, and also because they think it would increase their own liabilities.

"The amendment also provides that the surplus fund of the Exchange, that heretofore has been passed in to the Gratuity Fund, shall not hereafter be used for that purpose. The General Fund now amounts to about $750,000, which is held as a reserve and any surplus above that amount was used to pay the death claims. But when that was not enough—as was usually the case—the remainder was raised by an assessment of $3 on each membership. The maximum amount which beneficiaries of a member can receive is $9,834, the amount being regulated by the number of years which the member has been a subscriber to the gratuity system. Mr. Parish has already paid $2,700 to the fund.

"The amendment directs the Trustees to distribute the Gratuity Fund among the members of the Exchange, and limits the number of assessments upon members in any one year to $50, and reduces the maximum gratuity which the beneficiaries will receive.

"We entered the suit to-day in the Supreme Court, and the contention of the plaintiff and the other dissenting members is that the amendment interferes with their vested rights in the Gratuity Fund, and is therefore null and void. Justice Fitzgerald to-day issued a temporary injunction to restrain the Trustees of the Gratuity Fund from making any distribution thereof until the question can be decided. The matter will come up for argument on Friday, in Supreme Court, Part I."

F. V. ALEXANDRE MARRIED.

Miss Bussell Became His Wife in Baltimore, December, 1898.

The marriage of Francis V. Alexandre of this city to Miss Sedonya B. Bussell was announced yesterday as having taken place in Baltimore Dec. 22, 1898.

The announcement created a great deal of surprise in yachting and club circles here, where Mr. Alexandre is well known. He is a member of the New York Athletic, Larchmont, and Turf and Field Clubs. He is a graduate of Harvard of the Class of '90 and has always been prominent in the field of gentlemen's sports. He is the owner of the yacht Pawnee and owns many valuable horses.

His marriage was unknown to many if not to all of his friends. At the New York Athletic Club it was said last night that Mr. Alexandre had not visited the club in some months and no one there knew of his marriage.

LEGAL NOTES.

SERVICE OF PROCESS UPON THE DEAF-MUTE WAS VALID.—Justice Beekman, in Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday refused the application of Henry Jansen Haight, the deaf-mute, whose marital troubles recently occupied the attention of the courts for several weeks, to set aside the service of a summons upon him on Nov. 13 in a suit by Horace M. Cake. The ground of the application was that Mr. Haight was then within the State for the sole purpose of attending the trial of the action then pending here between himself and his wife, and that he was therefore privileged from service of process. Mr. Haight's claim was that he had been living in New Jersey since 1898. Last July, however, he had secured a change of venue in the action brought by his wife for separation, from Orange County to New York on the ground that his wife's residence followed his, which was in this county. It appeared that he was staying in New Jersey for the sole purpose of avoiding creditors, and that the process was served on him at the Everett House in the evening. Justice Beekman holds that Mr. Haight, by not promptly returning to New Jersey, had lost the protection of the rule he invoked, at the time the service was made upon him, and that, considering the purpose of his actual residence in New Jersey, he was not entitled to more than the rule in any case imperatively required. To give it the least expansion in his favor would be a mockery of justice.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE FOR BENEFIT OF THIRD PARTY.—John Fitzgerald, who resided in Syracuse, N. Y., had been for some time before his death, in 1882, hopelessly insolvent. In 1885 John W. Truesdell, as his administrator, brought an action to recover $1,000, claimed to have been fraudulently transferred by the intestate to Kate Fitzgerald to defraud his creditors, and by her transferred with like intent to William J. Bourke, a Catholic priest. Father Bourke died in 1887, and Hannie L. Bourke, as executrix, was substituted as defendant. The action was instituted under the law of 1858, authorizing an administrator of an insolvent estate to treat as void all transfers made by the intestate in fraud of the rights of creditors, and to maintain actions for the recovery of the property so transferred. The money had been given to Father Bourke for the benefit of the church of St. John the Baptist, or the Sacred Heart School. A judgment on a verdict directed for the plaintiff, in 1893, was reversed, on the ground that there was a question of fact for the jury. A judgment for the plaintiff on a verdict for $1,000 on the second trial in 1894, though affirmed by the General Term, was reversed by the Court of Appeals in 1895, because it did not appear that at the time of the demand made upon Father Bourke for the money he was informed of the fact upon which the claim was based, and that the demand was insufficient to charge him with notice. On the third trial, in 1896, the complaint was dismissed. The Fourth Appellate Division reversed that judgment, holding that in case Father Bourke, when the action was begun, had not paid the money once to the church or school, or in case he had paid it with knowledge or notice of Fitzgerald's insolvency, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment; and that in order to establish the fraudulent character of the transfer it was not necessary to show that the transferee had knowledge or notice of the insolvency. The Court of Appeals has now affirmed that judgment, and ordered judgment absolute for the plaintiff on defendant's stipulation. Chief Judge Parker and Judge O'Brien dissented.

THE STATUTE AGAINST PERPETUITIES.—Albert P. Sturtevant, who resided in Connecticut, and died there in 1893, owned a large amount of property in that State as well as considerable real estate in this city, including a half interest in the Sturtevant House. By his will he bequeathed about $50,000 to various legatees, and to his wife, Eliza, and directed his executors and trustees to pay out of his estate annuities, including $5,000 to his wife, and by its tenth clause he gave his executors and trustees, "always subject to the foregoing gifts," his residuary estate, real and personal, in trust to invest the personalty and divide its income between four persons; to let his real estate, and, after paying expenses and charges, to pay over the net rents to the same persons. At the death of each of these persons the executors were to pay over absolutely to a person named in the will that proportion of the body of the fund of which the deceased beneficiary received the income. Adeline S. Matthews, one of the legatees, brought an action in this city, by Benjamin Yates, her counsel, against E. D. Studley and others, for a construction of the will, and the decision being against her contention, and in favor of the executors, represented by Bronson Winthrop, appealed to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. The decision of that tribunal, in May, 1897, affirming the judgment below, has now been affirmed by the Court of Appeals, on the opinion of Justice Rumsey, below. The Court holds, unanimously, that the trust thus created did not improperly suspend the power of alienation for more than two lives in being at the death of the testator; as it created four separate and independent trusts, each of which was determined by the death of the particular beneficiary of that trust. The Court holds to be untenable the claim of the appellants that the trust was created for the payment of the annuities, and that consequently the power of alienation was necessarily suspended during the lives of all the annuitants, as well as during those of the other beneficiaries, and, therefore, longer than was permissible by statute. A trust, it was held, would never be implied where it would render a will illegal, nor would a trust be extended to other provisions in a will, where the effect would be to invalidate it. It was to be inferred from the wording of the will, the Court said, that the trustees took under the tenth clause only the portion which was left after provision was made for payment of the annuities out of the estate, and not out of the income of the estate.

MISSING WRAP AND TAXATION.

Policeman and a Sensation Distract Economic Discussion of Women Parliamentarians.

When the lady parliamentarians who compose the New York Society for Political Study yesterday afternoon reached the outer door of the Tuxedo, the building in which all their meetings are held, there was a sudden pause, which for a time threatened to block the hallway, for there in the doorway stood, of all people in the world, a policeman.

He was just an ordinary big bluecoat, with the usual brass buttons and protecting air, but his appearance at that moment seemed to the parliamentary ladies portentous, and each one hesitated as she came in sight of him, not sure but that she might be the victim of some terrible misapprehension.

There has been a very big misunderstanding in the club, and yesterday for the first time it was voiced. There is some member of the club or some friend of a member of the club who has taken something that doesn't belong to her, and until the guilty one is found all the innocent members are looking askance at every policeman they chance to meet.

It was the meeting before last when there was an alarm of fire, and with one exception every woman present lost her head. The exceptional woman, whom every one would now like to know, rushed to the maid in charge of the wraps, called excitedly, "Give me my coat; my carriage is waiting," grabbed a wrap, and departed. Now a detective is to be put on the track of that woman and wrap, for they didn't belong together. The wrap is to be brought back and the woman to justice.

The woman who made this unfortunate blunder, which the society now calls by another name, left a wrap in place of the one she took, but the strange part of it is that no one seems to know just what kind of a garment was taken or what was left. The whole thing is so interesting that every one talks at once, and while the woman who had to take the wrap left by the absconder is known, she is credited with enough different cloaks and capes to dress a whole club of women.

"You see," said one of the lady parliamentarians yesterday, "poor, dear Mrs. Lostherwrap doesn't mind the worth of the garment so much, for she says this long velvet wrap is worth twice is much as her wretched little wornout sealskin, but she had had so many good times in that little old coat that she hates to lose it, on account of the associations."

"Yes," said still another parliamentarian to a third, "it was such a shabby trick to take Mrs. Lostherwrap's beautiful long cape and leave that shabby little threadbare thing in its place. If she had taken pneumonia, poor thing, it would have been a clear case of manslaughter."

The maid who had charge of the wraps on the eventful occasion is the authority on the matter, but she has merely a remembrance of the woman's words, and is pretty certain that the cape or coat, elegant or shabby, which was taken was wrapped around some other things, which were left behind. And now there is to be a detective.

The discussion of the "robbery," which the event is called in plain speech, was only an exciting annex to the regular business of the afternoon, which consisted of a paper on "Taxation, Direct and Indirect," by Dr. Marv D. Hussey. No one knows who the policeman was who was stationed at the door.

PULLMAN COMPANY MUST PAY.

Damages Awarded to Col. King for Ejection from Its Cars.

The Pullman Palace Car Company has just paid to Col. Albert H. King of Brooklyn $2,000 on a judgment obtained in the United States District Court for being unceremoniously hustled out of one of its cars between Washington and New York. The case was appealed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, which affirmed the decision of the lower court.

According to the evidence introduced by the plaintiff, Col. King, had traveled to San Francisco on what is known as a strip ticket, and on his way back stepped into the office of the Pullman Palace Car Company in New Orleans and purchased a sleeping berth through to New York, after exhibiting his strip ticket, with the coupons attached, over the connecting lines, the last coupon being from Washington to New York over the Baltimore and Ohio lines. The agent, after examining the ticket, sold him a berth on the car Dioces from New Orleans to Jersey City. Col King handed the ticket to the car conductor, who gave him in exchange a berth check to Jersey City in that car.

Plaintiff continued to occupy that berth until after the train had passed Washington, when he said the conductor came up and told him he must pay the regular fare from Washington to New York, and when Col. King asked him what he meant by the demand, the latter told him the train was running over the Pennsylvania Railroad line, while his ticket was for the Baltimore and Ohio. Col. King refused to pay an extra fare, and when the train reached Baltimore he was ejected.

The defendant said that Col. King had been told to change trains at Washington, but had refused. This the plaintiff denied, although he admitted that a fellow-passenger had told him the train would go on another line from Washington.

The case was tried last February before Judge Thomas in the United States District Court, and the jury accepted the plaintiff's testimony and he was awarded $2,000. The Court held that the Pullman Palace Car Company had contracted to carry Col. King from New Orleans to Jersey City by the car in which his berth was located, and warranted that upon presenting his ticket to the train conductor he should be allowed to ride undisturbed the entire distance in that car, without being required to make any further payment for transportation, and that such contract was broken by the company.

GREEN GOODS CASE IN COURT.

Defense Seeks to Discredit Anthony Comstock as a Witness—Motion for Dismissal Denied.

The credibility of Anthony Comstock as a witness was attacked yesterday by counsel for the defense in the trial for alleged "green-goods" operations of George Morris and John Reedy, the former Postmaster, station agent, and telegraph operator at Pocantico Hills, N. Y., which was being continued before Judge Thomas, in the Criminal Branch of the United States Circuit Court.

Norman J. Marsh, attorney for the defense, asked Mr. Comstock, who is the principal witness for the prosecution, if he had ever known of the Society for the Suppression of Vice being used for the purpose of blackmail, and also if Mr. Comstock did not think he had been guilty of falsehood in corresponding with the suspected man under the name of A. Aldrich.

Mr. Comstock's answer to both questions was an emphatic negative.

Private Detective Hause, who had been engaged by Mr. Comstock to act as a decoy "come-on," was next placed on the stand. He identified Morris as the man who had represented himself at a meeting of the two as an agent of "Garcia," the chief operator in the "green-goods" enterprise.

Chief Post Office Inspector King of this division testified that Reedy had admitted that a registered letter sent from his office had contained a "green-goods" circular.

Judge Thomas denied, at the afternoon session, a motion for dismissal of the case on the ground of insufficient evidence.

The afternoon was taken up with the examination of employes of the Western Union Telegraph Company regarding the course of the telegraphic messages delivered to the alleged swindlers.

PULLAR'S DRINKS AND WIVES.

Plaintiff in Suit Against ex-Gov. Waller on the Stand—Novel Route to a Client's Favor.

Joseph W. Pullar gave further testimony concerning his intemperate habits and bigamous life before Justice Bischoff in the Supreme Court yesterday, where he was on the witness stand all day in the action which he has instituted to have set aside his transfer of his fifty-thousand-dollar interest in the estate of his second wife, Joanna Pullar, to ex-Gov. Waller of Connecticut, Alfred R. Page, and several others. He asserts that the contract was made in a private room at the Hotel Imperial at midnight on Oct. 14, 1897, when he was in no condition to transact business because of his drinking habits.

Pullar testified that he had had no employment for three years before the death of his wealthy wife, though he had formerly been a clerk in an express office. He said it had been his habit to take several cocktails on arising every morning to "brace up on."

"How much did you drink in 1897?" asked Wayland E. Benjamin, his counsel.

"Oh, I don't know. I took a lot of drinks every day."

Asked about his present habits, he said he didn't drink as much as formerly because he didn't have so much money. "I had four drinks of whisky yesterday," he said, "and one this morning."

He said that Page before the signing of the contract, told him he was in danger of arrest, and had advised him to go away and live somewhere under an assumed name. Although he had placed his affairs entirely in Mr. Page's hands, he had never received a statement from him. He said Page had not told him he was a bankrupt with judgments against him.

"Were you ever in business?" Mr. Benjamin asked.

"Yes, I went into the general novelty business with a friend in 1896. I bought the furniture and we had an office."

"How long were you in that business?"

"Two weeks."

"How did you come to get out of it?"

"Well, I just wandered away and left it."

Pullar testified that he had recently been in the steamfitting business, but after two weeks his partner, for some reason that he didn't know, "dissolved the partnership."

Gen. Burnett, counsel for the defense, then asked him about his domestic affairs. Pullar said he married Mary T. Duffy, with whom he has become reconciled and is now living, in 1877.

"Were you divorced from her?"

"No, we separated by mutual consent in 1891."

"When did you marry Mrs. Goodwin?"

"I object," cried Mr. Benjamin, "on the ground that it will incriminate him." Gen. Burnett pressed the question, and Justice Bischoff, finding that under the statute of limitations, the witness could not now be prosecuted for that crime, directed him to answer, and Pullar said he had married her Jan. 25, 1893, and lived with her until her death. Gen. Burnett then said he would show that Pullar had married the woman under an assumed name.

Pullar again denied he had reformed in the matter of drinking, and said that he still gets on little sprees about twice a month, but doesn't keep them up as he used to.

"Do you know what you're about on such occasions?" said Gen. Burnett.

"I think I do, but people tell me I don't."

"Does your attorney tell you you don't—"

"Hold on there!" shouted Mr. Benjamin. "I'll give you my own opinion of my client."

"All right," said Gen. Burnett, "I'd like to have it," and he leaned back twirling his eyeglasses. "I think he's the biggest ——" but the rest of the sentence was not uttered as Justice Bischoff cut it off.

"How did you happen to engage Mr. Benjamin for your present lawyer?" was the next question.

"Well, he sued me for my sister's rent and dispossessed her while I was at the Hot Springs." Even Justice Bischoff could not resist a smile at this novel route to a client's favor.

The afternoon session was devoted entirely to the cross-examination of Pullar, and Gen. Burnett succeeded in making him contradict himself upon questions of memory many times. Some of the questions seemed to have slight bearing on the case, but they were put for the benefit of a medical expert for the defense, who will testify later as to Pullar's mental condition. The case will be continued to-day.

GAG AND ROB STEPMOTHER

The Jensan Boys of Jersey City Again on the Warpath.

Their Father's Ire Is Aroused, and He Will Not Try to Save Them from Prison This Time.

New Jersey has another pair of youthful desperadoes in two brothers, almost of the same age. The police of Jersey City are anxious to put a stop to the criminal career, for a time at least, of Charles J. Jensan, nineteen years of age, and his brother William, two years younger, who on Saturday last assaulted and robbed their stepmother in their father's house, at 131 Highland Avenue, and who have so far eluded capture.

Mr. Jensan, Sr., occupies a responsible position in the sugar refinery in Jersey City. Although it was mainly through his efforts that the boys were kept out of jail some months ago, he says he will now do all he can to have them apprehended and punished.

The boys on Nov. 4 last carried out a plan to rob their father's house, and, watching until their parents had gone out, carried off $400 worth of jewelry and other valuables, which they pawned. After the goods had been recovered the boys were arrested, and, in the hope of gaining their father's forgiveness, they concocted a story placing the blame on the younger boy, who is a favorite with the stepmother.

They were both convicted, however, and Judge Blair sentenced them to six months in jail. Then Mr. Jensan and a minister interceded for the young robbers, with the result that sentence was suspended. The boys did not go home, but hung around the lower part of the city, and either could not get or would not seek employment.

Their experience seemingly had no salutary effect, and last week they again coolly planned to rob their father's house. It was mainly by accident that they did not also add murder to their crimes, for, when it became necessary, they did not hesitate to assault their stepmother and to injure her severely.

While their father was at work, at about 10 o'clock on Saturday morning, they forced an entrance to the house by breaking one of the kitchen windows. They found that Mrs. Jensan was up stairs, and, in order to lure her down, one of them rang the front doorbell and both concealed themselves in the dimly lighted hall.

As soon as she had reached the bottom of the flight, Charles darted forward, and before the woman could make an outcry he had grasped her by the throat and thrown her to the floor. In falling, her head struck the edge of a hall stand and cut a deep gash in her forehead. Half unconscious, she struggled with her assailant, but the young man stuffed a towel into her mouth, while he called to William to ransack the house.

In a few minutes William came down stairs with all the valuables that he could discover. They consisted of a woman's gold watch, a wedding ring, a gold chain, a pair of diamond earrings, a gold breastpin, and $15 in cash, which had been taken from a bureau drawer. William had also appropriated his father's revolver, and this he held to Mrs. Jensan's head while he demanded to know where the rest of the money in the house was kept. She hesitated, but the boy threatened to shoot, and she finally told him where $13 more was to be found.

"Now get up and wash the blood off your face," said Charles, taking the gag from his stepmother's mouth. The wound on her head had bled profusely and had made her weak, and, as she staggered toward the kitchen, the youths darted out of the front door and disappeared. As soon as she was able Mrs. Jensan went to the house of Mrs. Batcheller, next door, and told her story. Word was at once sent to the Seventh Precinct Station House, but the boys have not been traced.

It was learned by the police yesterday that on a previous occasion the boys had extorted money from their father by placing a revolver at his head and threatening him with death. Mr. Jensan has told the police to use every effort to apprehend his sons, and says he will make it as warm as possible for them this time. The police have been unable to find any trace of the stolen articles in the local pawn shops, and are of the opinion that the boys took a train and went West.

FREDERICK DOMEYER A SUICIDE.

Wholesale China Dealer Takes an Overdose of Opium.

Frederick Domeyer, a wholesale dealer in china and glassware, committed suicide yesterday in his office, 52 Leonard Street. Business depression is thought to have caused despondency and probably mental complications.

Mr. Domeyer took an overdose of opium. He was unconscious when discovered by his son. An ambulance was called and Mr. Domeyer was taken to the Hudson Street Hospital, where he died last night.

Mr. Domeyer, who was fifty-six years old, lived in a handsome residence at 2,433 Webster Avenue, with his wife and family. The latter consisted of one son, twenty-one, and two grown daughters.

TUNNEL FRANCHISE FAVORED.

Council Committee Approves the East River Project.

The Joint Committee on Railroads of the Municipal Assembly, which has under consideration the application of the New York and Long Island Terminal Railroad Company for a franchise to tunnel under the East River, will hold an executive session later in the week, and unless strong opposition develops in the meantime will make a favorable report at next Tuesday's session of the Council.

Councilman Oakley, the Chairman of the committee, said yesterday that the sentiment in Brooklyn seemed to be so strongly in favor of the franchise that he did not see any reason why the franchise should not be granted. "There is no disposition on the part of any member of the committee to defer the matter any longer than necessary," Mr. Oakley said, "and it is entirely reasonable to suppose that the franchise will soon be reported favorably."

Alderman Goodman, the only Republican member of the committee, said that he had favored the granting of the application last Summer, but had been unable to get action of any kind from the rest of the committee. "The affair has gone unacted upon so long," Mr. Goodman declared, "that scandal is sure to be caused by further delay."

Big Excursion Leaves Boston.

What is said to be the largest excursion on record to leave the United States in one body, and which otherwise will be notable as marking the beginning of the expected great exodus of Americans to Europe and the Paris Exposition this year, will leave Boston to-morrow, when the steamer New England will sail for a ten weeks' cruise in the Mediterranean. She will have 525 passengers on board. Heretofore the port of departure for these excursions has been New York. The New England, which registers 11,400 tons, has been specially chartered from the Dominion Line for the trip by Frank C. Clark's Tourist Agency.

Upper West Side Fire Protection.

Fire Chief Croker has completed plans for the protection of life at fires on the upper west side of the city. As a result of the opposition of the residents of West Ninety-second Street to the location of a fire house in that vicinity, Chief Croker has decided to establish a second truck company in the quarters of Hook and Ladder Company No. 22, in Amsterdam Avenue, near Ninety-third Street. When the first company is out to a fire the second company will be in service to cover the district in case of another fire.
